PETITIONS

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of members of the Afro-American Woman's Charity Club, of Spokane, Wash., praying for the passage of Senate bill 121, the so-called McKinley antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Americanization Bureau, of Seattle, Wash., favoring the passage of legislation admitting to this country Italians who served in the American Army during the World War, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of members of Webber Relief Corps, No. 29, of Sunnyside, and of Schofield Hayden Post, No. 118, Grand Army of the Republic, of Retsil, and sundry citizens of Retsil, all in the State of Washington, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to veterans of the Civil War, their widows and dependents, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate of the United States of America, at Washington, D. C., and the Hon. Charles G. Dawes, President of the United States Senate, greeting:

We, the members of Uncle Sam Woman's Relief Corps, No. 49, and the members of Appomattox Circle, No. 33, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, both of Sawtelle, Calif., do most earnestly appeal to your honorable body, in behalf of the rapidly diminishing Grand Army of the Civil War veterans, and especially do we appeal to you in behalf of the widows of the Civil War, women who have performed the duty of wife, nurse, and mother for these men whom you class as heroes, and we earnestly hope and pray you will not close this present session of the Congress without giving to these aged people what in all justice should have been given them years ago, a living pension.

In support of our prayer for these people, especially the widows before mentioned, we have the public statement made by the chairman of the county board of supervisors of Los Angeles County, Hon. R. F. McClellan, who stated that no person could live on $30 per month and that the cost per person to the county for the paupers is $1.50 per day.

This is real fact, and yet this rich Nation, made possible by the services and lives of these men and women, would have these widows live on less than the amount paid for the support of our county charges.

Where is the gratitude of the Nation saved and preserved by these very people who are now ending their days in want and privation because of the admitted interference of eastern business asking that no pension legislation be allowed at this session.

With an enemy storming their ports how loudly would these very business men call for the protection of soldiers, even at the cost of life, to save and protect them and their homes, but how different in the time of peace and prosperity, the soldiers' request for justice must be "pigeonholed" at the request of these prosperous ones.

Our faith in the justice of this appeal and the great Government made possible by the lives, blood, and true devotion can not be shaken as we come to your honorable body and to the honorable House of Representatives asking for a living pension at this session for these veterans and the widows of the great army of veterans who have been called home with their beloved leader, our martyred President, Abraham Lincoln, trusting we do not appeal in vain.

Loyally yours in the cause of justice and right,

ELIZABETH ESTES, President,
DELLA SNYDER, Secretary,
PAULINE WORTHINGTON, Treasurer,
Appomattox Circle, Ladies of G. A. R.

[Indorsed by unanimous vote of both Appomattox Circle, Ladies of Grand Army of the Republic, No. 33, and Uncle Sam Women's Relief Corps, No. 49.]

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 104) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925, reported by Mr. ERNST from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, while I am conscious that I trespassed too long upon the time of the Senate yesterday in attempting to set out all the facts in behalf of the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the contested-election case of Steck against Brookhart, I do want to say at this time, if I may, a few things with reference to what actually did occur in disposing of the votes that were referred to the committee for its consideration.

Let me say, possibly in a more judicial frame of mind than I said it yesterday, that this is exactly what did occur: The committee met on the 20th day of July, 1925, to outline to the contestant and the contestee, or incumbent, the procedure to be followed in the recount. Let it be distinctly understood that that was the only question that was submitted to the committee.

The question was what each wanted done. Each believed that if it should be done, it would be to his advantage, and therefore that was the question they wanted passed upon, and that was the only question that was to be passed upon. In the language of the Secretary of the Senate at that time, it was to be a straight recount; that is, there were no questions involved other than the recount. The record shows that each one of the parties was permitted to name his supervisor, each one was permitted to keep counsel with the supervisors all the time, and the record shows that the supervisors were to make whatever objections to the ballots that attorneys for the respective parties might desire. The question of whether one or the other received a plurality of the votes was to be submitted to the committee under the recount.

There appears on page 61 of the hearings and on page 4 of the report a direct copy of the record in this respect. On the 20th day of July, when the supervisors were instructed as to their manner of procedure, the question was asked with reference to how long it would take to make the recount, and Colonel Thayer, the Secretary of the Senate, said:

As near as we can estimate, about 740,000 to 760,000; somewhere along there.

That is, the number of votes.

Senator ERNST. How many were there in the Texas contest?

Mr. THAYER. There were 340,000; but there were more complications arising in that contest. This is just a straight count.

Senator ERNST. I take it that all of you want the count expedited just as much as possible. Is not that the desire?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, Senator.

Mr. PARSONS. Certainly.

Mr. Mitchell, as all know, is the attorney for Senator Brookhart, and Mr. Parsons is the attorney for Mr. Steck. They were informed, "All you are seeking to get here, all you have asked for, all you want, is a straight count of this vote." Each one said that was what he wanted, and he wanted it as quickly as he could get it. That question is settled.

In that same conference each of the attorneys was informed that he ask his client's auditor, as the representative of his client, to make whatever objection to the ballot that his client wanted him to make. That was settled. The recount was had. There were some irregularities; the committee permitted the board to settle them for itself; but the record discloses that at any time all three members of the board should fail to agree, the three being, as I have said, Senator Brookhart's representative, who, for a part of the time, was his brother, Mr. Steck's representative, and the Secretary of the Senate, then the vote in disagreement would come to the Senate committee for its determination.

There were, as I have stated, some irregularities. That was known all the time. When the attorneys came here to examine what their supervisors had done they knew about it, and on the 2d day of December, 1925, as will be found on pages 61 and 62 of the record, this question was discussed.

Mr. Mitchell, representing Mr. Brookhart, said that, except as to the challenged votes, question would only arise as to two or three hundred votes. They reviewed everything their supervisors had done; they ratified everything they had done and reduced the number of votes in contest down to a little over 4,000, though they had started in with 9,000. They themselves stated what they desired, as will be found, if Senators want to read the record, on pages 61 and 62.

Mr. Mitchell, representing Mr. Brookhart, had stated that there were certain things they wished to discuss. Then he said there may be a dispute as to two or three hundred votes. They agreed they would go over them, and they did.

Later on in his statement he discussed certain votes which he alleged came here unsealed. The record is conclusive that he was in error about that; that is, that only two envelopes left Iowa unsealed. Then the difference in the number of ballots and the poll list was discussed. He was given the opportunity to introduce, and was asked if he wanted to introduce, any evidence on that question. He said he did not. There is no question, then, that the committee was never asked to pass upon anything except how many votes each had received as disclosed by the recount.

Some Senators say there was a discrepancy of 3,300 or 3,500 between the poll list and the number of ballots counted. There is more than that if you take the machine vote.

It is said the case ought not to be decided without taking into consideration those votes. I am sure those votes were all accounted for; but if we go back to the official count we will not only settle this case on a less number than that by more than 7,000 votes that were cast for somebody in the election in November, 1924, in Iowa. More than 7,000 votes will be disfranchised by the official count, because the number of ballots that came here in excess of the number of votes credited to any candidate for Senator was greater than 3,300. Add that 3,300, and we have 7,000.

This 3,300 came from 2,200 or 2,300 precincts in the State of Iowa; and the average would be less than a vote and a half to the precinct, taking the State as a whole. Including the number of townships that the record shows were short, they averaged between two and three to the township. Take those that were conceded to be short, the 198 about which we hear most, and we have less than 2 to the township, the average township casting more than 500 votes.

I am satisfied that if anybody had cared to take it up when the recount was going on practically every discrepancy could have been accounted for, but Senator Brookhart's agent, who much of the time was his brother and always the man that he wanted, did not want it done; Mr. Steck's representative did not want it done. They conceded that that was the vote that was cast.

Here is the question: Which do Senators think is the more accurate and which ought to be relied upon—the ballots found in the ballot boxes or the names on the poll list? Which would Senators count if they were judges of election to determine how many votes a candidate received in a particular township? Would they count the names on the poll list or would they count the legal ballots in the ballot boxes? That is the question that we shall settle in this controversy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Without referring to any particular case, I desire to ask the Senator a question only for the purpose of giving an illustration. If in a precinct the number of voters who had voted as shown by poll list did not correspond with the number of ballots which were sent down here for that precinct, what would be the proper procedure, in the Senator's judgment?

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator were a judge—and he one time graced the bench and made a reputation of which all who know him are justly proud—and if two reputable lawyers, representing hostile interests, were employed to ascertain the condition of a complicated account, and each had an accountant, and they went over it and agreed, and then said, "These are the only disputed facts," what would the Senator, as a judge, do?

Mr. NORRIS. If I did not examine the facts, I would accept their count. Will the Senator now answer my question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will ask another question. Would not the Senator have accepted that?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; if I had never made an examination of the facts. Notwithstanding that statement, if it were an election contest and two attorneys said, "Here are the ballots, we agree on these," if it developed at any time in that contest that they were both mistaken, if it developed that in a precinct, we will say, there were 100 people who voted and only 90 ballots counted, I would accept the official count and disregard the ballots, no matter who agreed to it.

Now I have answered the Senator's question; will he not answer mine?

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to ask the Senator another question. If the Senate committee had rejected the agreement of the representatives of the contestant and the contestee in one or two townships, then ought it not to have rejected it in every township where the conditions were similar?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; if they found a discrepancy, I think so.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator another question.

Mr. NORRIS. Whether I am right or wrong, the Senator is questioning me while he is the one who ought to be questioned. I have answered his question, I think, fairly, and I should like to have the Senator answer my question.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator can not answer by putting me on the witness stand and asking me a lot of questions, although I have conceded his right to do it and have, as frankly as I can, answered his question as to what I would do. Now will he answer my question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not answer the Senator until he allows me an opportunity to speak.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is what I think about it: I believe, I will say to the Senator, that every vote in a township that was a legal vote was counted, and I believe every discrepancy could have been accounted for if it had been brought to the committee when the facts were available. The committee, with reference to the precinct where 198 ballots were missing, allowed the board of auditors to accept the official count; nobody questioned it. I think the board representing Mr. Steck and representing Mr. Brookhart was right about it, and the committee accepted their conclusions without question. It took the official count.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, will the Senator answer my question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought I had answered it. What was the Senator's question?

Mr. NORRIS. I will repeat it. I said I was not referring to any precinct in asking the question; I am putting a general proposition to the Senator as a lawyer. If it was determined that in a certain precinct the number of voters, as shown by the official poll list, was different from the number of ballots sent here from that precinct, what would the Senator say ought to be done? I am assuming that such a condition existed in some instances.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought I had answered that; I am merely unhappy in my language. Here is what ought to have been done: If there was any reason to believe that there was anybody being deprived of a vote, then those who represented the contestant and the contestee ought to have submitted that question to the committee; but if the representative of the party to the contest took out of that township the votes they objected to and put them in the general lot of objected-to votes, and brought them to the committee, and threw all the other votes back, I think there was but one thing for the committee to do, and that was to accept their agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. With due respect to the Senator, I submit he has not yet answered my question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have answered it. I said I would have accepted their statements, because they examined all the facts and they knew whether or not there were defective votes.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well, if that is the Senator's answer. My question, however, if in a precinct the number of voters, as shown by the poll list, was different from the number of ballots from that precinct which were sent down here, what would the Senator do?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have told the Senator what I would do.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would have looked into the votes in that township, just as I would look into the votes of other townships, if I were the representative of one of the parties to the contest and had the votes before me, and, if I thought there was something wrong about it, I would have objected and brought it to the committee. If, on the other hand, I believed, as they evidently believed, that it was only one of those discrepancies that could be accounted for either by defective ballots or by the duplication of names on the polling list, I would do what they did; I would accept the recount. The Senator would not do that.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Nebraska has not said that he would not do it. The Senator from Arkansas has put up a question of his own and answered it; he has not yet answered my question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought I had answered the Senator's question.

Mr. NORRIS. Let the Record show whether the Senator has answered it or not.

Mr. CARAWAY. I said—and I will say it again—that if I were the representative of Steck or Brookhart, and I found any discrepancy between the number of votes and the poll list, I would examine that fact, and if I believed, after examining it, that there were more votes there than ought to have been there, and some of them were dishonest votes, I would not have accepted them, or if there were less votes than names on the poll list, and I believe some of them had been stolen, I would not have accepted that count; but, on the other hand, if I had the whole record before me, and made up my mind that the discrepancy between the poll list and the ballots was one that was honest and that an honest number of votes were cast and they ought to be counted and were before me, I would so count them. Now, is that an answer to the Senator's question?

Mr. NORRIS. No; that is in answer to the question the Senator from Arkansas has asked himself; it is not an answer to my question. I concede the Senator can answer it in any way he pleases, and if that is his answer, we will let it stand.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator asked me, if there were more votes or less votes in the box than the poll list showed, what would I do? Was not that the Senator's question?

Mr. NORRIS. Practically.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did I not answer the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator said he would investigate so-and-so. He says a whole lot of things. I have assumed the blanket proposition that there is a precinct in which the number of voters who voted as shown by the poll list is different from the number of ballots sent down here from Iowa for that precinct. Are we going to accept the ballot or are we going to accept the official count?

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator from Nebraska mean to imply in his question that no fraud was shown and that the ballots were all safeguarded?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not imply anything not contained in my question. The question speaks for itself.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know it does.

Mr. BAYARD. If you assume that the ballots were safeguarded, then it necessarily follows that they must take the ballots, because both sides of this case asked for a count of the ballots and not of the poll list.

Mr. NORRIS. All right. If the Senator wants it that way, I am not complaining. I answered the question that the Senator submitted to me.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and I answered the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I may be wrong about it. I am not contending anything different, but I told the Senator what I would have done.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator would have rejected it?

Mr. NORRIS. If there was a discrepancy between the number of ballots sent here from any particular precinct and the number of people who voted in that precinct, I would have rejected the ballots; and if it had gone that far, and nobody had decided whether there was fraud or whether there was anything else, it shows on its face, in my judgment, that it is an impossibility to determine from the ballots what the result was.

Mr. CARAWAY. In other words, the Senator would say that the names on the poll books should control?

Mr. NORRIS. As to the number of people who voted, yes; and that the official count, therefore, would have to be taken.

Mr. CARAWAY. Regardless of the fact that there may have been, and the evidence shows that there were, defective ballots which could not be counted?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not said that. The Senator must not put anything in my mouth that I have not said.

Mr. CARAWAY. All right.

Mr. NORRIS. If there were any defective ballots, of course, I would count those defective ballots. If there were any defective ballots in separate packages, as the Senator has said there were, I would open every one of those packages and count them. If they were good ballots, I would give credit for them to the people who were entitled to them.

Mr. CARAWAY. Regardless of whether the Senator ever had that chance and could do it or not, if the people had already settled this question and thrown the ballots back, the Senator would still go back, and, by so doing, and taking official count, disfranchise 7,000 voters?

Mr. GILLET. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. GILLET. Can the Senator state roughly how many precincts there were in the State where there was an exact agreement between the number on the poll list and the number of the ballots?

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not do it exactly. I can give it approximately.

Mr. GILLET. Roughly, then?

Mr. CARAWAY. There were 1,068 precincts, or 1,058—I do not recall which; it is a matter of record—in which there was a difference in what are known as the paper ballots. There was a greater number in the machine ballots; so it might be safely said that there are not in excess of 400 precincts out of the 2,200 precincts in which the poll book and the count agree.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has said that there was a difference in the machine ballots.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It has been stated here on the floor of the Senate that the total number of people who voted at the machine-ballot polls was not taken. Is not the Senator counting the number of—

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I am not. The Senator from Nebraska took the statement made by the junior Senator from Nebraska, which if he had looked at the record he would know was a mistake.

Mr. NORRIS. There is a difference between the total number of people who voted at the machine ballots and the total number of people who voted on Senator. If you take only those who voted on Senator, of course there would be more ballots than there were people.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is not an item in the whole record that justifies that statement. The truth about the matter is, to show you how absolutely incorrect that statement is, the poll lists themselves were gone in some cases, and to say now that they agreed is purely a guess. The books were gone. It is in testimony, and not disputed by anybody until it comes here on the floor of the Senate, that the discrepancies were greater in the machine precincts than in the paper-ballot precincts. Now, if you are to insist that the precincts in which there was a difference between the poll list and the ballots shall be rejected, then I submit that you must reject every one of them, because you can not separate them.

I repeat to the Senator from Nebraska that if the Senate can not rely upon the agent and representative and in most instances the brother or secretary of Mr. Brookhart and the representative of Mr. Steck and accept their conclusions the whole recount is gone, because there are over 900,000 votes that nobody questions, and yet every one of them rests upon the agreement of these particular people. If you can not trust them for 9,000 votes, I want to know how you can trust them for 900,000 votes. If you can not trust them in 4 precincts, how can you trust them in 2,200 precincts? If some one may be able to satisfy himself on that question, I can not.

To show how the Senate committee acted, at least it accepted in good faith everything the committee of recount did. It never went back of it on a single ballot; and there is nobody here now who knows anything more about what those particular ballots showed than I know about what is in the mind of the Senator from Nebraska, and I never have been able to find that out. I do not know; he does not know. He is going to vote on this case without ever knowing, because the men who settled that controversy said that this vote ought to have been counted this way, and the committee accepted it.

Nobody ever looked at it after the attorneys had gone through with it. They had a chance to raise every question they wanted to raise that had been raised by the recount, and they did not do it. After they had gone through it they put 150 votes in class 1. There is not a man on this floor who ever saw one of those ballots. They said:

Neither one of these ballots constitutes a vote for Steck or for Brookhart.

Their reason for so determining is not given; but it was thought that Mr. Mitchell, representing Brookhart, and Mr. Parsons, representing Steck, would not have given away a vote that belonged to their clients, and therefore nobody looked at them.

Senators are here on the floor asking that you reject the conclusions of the committee, and they, when opportunity was afforded, never asked to look at those ballots. They could have looked at them if they had wanted to, but they did not want to see them. They accepted agreements that they thought were not hurtful to Brookhart, and now try to reject those that are hurtful.

The question of whether or not the committee ought to have received and recounted those votes I think as a legal question is also clear. The Supreme Court of Iowa has decided over and over again, and the supreme court of practically every jurisdiction in America has decided, that where the ballots are found in the custody of the officer charged by law with their care, and he is charged by law with the duty of preserving them, the presumption is that he did it. Now it is urged to overturn that because it is alleged the presumption is that the official count is correct. That presumption does not prevail when each one of them says it is not correct. Steck said it; Brookhart said it over his sworn statement. As it appears in his response in the record, he swore that the official count was incorrect. Now, can we believe Mr. Brookhart when he swears it? I do. He swore it, and we accepted it. Steck swore it, and nobody questioned it. Therefore they agreed on a recount, and then we gave it to them under rules to which they agreed, because there were irregularities that ought to be straightened out. Both of them swore it, and neither one of them denies it to-day. The only ones who deny it are Senators on the floor of the Senate. The men who held up their hands and swore before Almighty God that there is something wrong with the official count of these ballots and that they ought to be recounted were Smith W. Brookhart and Daniel F. Steck. They swore it; nobody denied it, and the committee found they were right about it. Now they want to overturn that and say you ought to take the official count, because they say first that the ballots from 67 precincts left Iowa unsealed.

The record is against them on that. Nobody will seriously contend that. There never were but two that were unsealed until they were broken in the mail. One of those was a township in which there were 198 votes short, and their representative who counted it said:

There are too many short votes here, and we do not think you ought to count it, and therefore you ought to take the official count.

And that was agreed to, although the recount, if they had all been there, would have given Steck 28 more votes than he got. The refusal to take the recount and the agreement to take the official count gave Mr. Brookhart the advantage. Nobody thought of complaining of it then. The other one was an Estherville precinct that left Iowa unsealed. It was short 20 votes. Afterwards they found those ballots that everybody concedes were voted there. A recount of the found or excess ballots would have given Brookhart fewer votes and Steck more votes, and they rejected them, and the committee let them do it. Steck lost by both, and nobody complained until it was observed that the result as to all the records was apparent that Mr. Brookhart did not win.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President—

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. STEPHENS. May I inquire of the Senator what precinct he first referred to?

Mr. CARAWAY. The first one was the first precinct of Winterset.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will; yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether the courts have laid down any rule to be applied in case of discrepancies of ballots in the absence of fraud?

Mr. CARAWAY. If so, I do not know it. Here is what they declare: I take it for granted that until this case came up everybody admitted that if the ballots were the actual ballots cast they ought to govern, and not the names on the poll list, which could be an error of a clerk; but the votes could not get by unless the man actually went into the polling booth and three judges and two clerks found that he cast a legal ballot. We got the ballots from the auditors in Iowa, who under the law had their custody. The Supreme Court of Iowa said that under the circumstances under which they came here they were evidence of the intention of the voter. The case is Ferguson v. Henry (64 N. W. 292, Iowa):

At the trial in the district court the contestants put in evidence ballots as returned to the auditor from the different voting precincts, under rulings of the court, and the ballots so counted gave to the contestant a majority over the incumbent of 13 votes, which the court held to be a prima facie case contestant. The incumbent then put witnesses on the stand, who against objections were permitted to testify that certain of such ballots shown them were not as they were voted or counted by the judges of election. Contestants insisted that it was error to admit the testimony, for the reason that no such issue was made by the pleading. We think that there was no error in the ruling of the district court in this respect. The issues were such that contestant assumed the burden of showing that he had received a greater number of votes than the incumbent, and to do that he put in evidence the ballots now in question, with others, which gave him a majority. The ballots thus in evidence were valuable as such because of their identity as those cast at the election. The proof that they came through the channels and from the custodian provided by law for their preservation and keeping gave to them such a prima facie character. It was then the right of the incumbent to discredit this evidence.

That is what the Supreme Court of Iowa said should be done, and that is exactly what we did.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I caused a search to be made, if I may be permitted to say so, to satisfy myself concerning a question addressed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the Senator from Arkansas as to whether, when there is a discrepancy between the number of ballots found in the box and the number of names on the poll list, the ballots in the box determine the contest or whether the official count in that case must be referred to.

I was a little surprised to find no adjudications upon the subject; but in any election machinery with which I am familiar, the first duty of the canvassers is to see that there is entire conformity between the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll list. The statute of my State apparently contemplates that there might be more ballots in the box than names on the poll list; that some one might by chance slip in 2 ballots; that the ballot box might be stuffed—but it does not seem to contemplate such a thing at all as a smaller number of ballots in the box than names on the poll list. So it provides that the first duty of the canvassers is to count the number of ballots in the box and to see if they correspond with the number of names on the poll list. If there are more ballots in the box than names on the poll list, it then becomes the duty of one of the judges, blindfolded, to draw from the box, one by one, ballots in sufficient number so that the number of ballots in the box shall conform to the number of names on the poll list.

That is a system which I think is quite general, at least in the Western States. So that it would seem as though in the ordinary election machinery there must be identity between the ballots in the box and the names on the poll list. It would seem, therefore, if that system is pursued, that when the ballots come here less in number than the names on the poll list, subsequent to the election, some must have been extracted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, I am not passing on the law of Montana, because that does not concern us here. I have just read all I know about it.

Mr. WALSH. I did not hear the Senator discuss that.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am about to discuss it now, if the Senator please.

As I said a moment ago, I am not concerned with the law of Montana.

I read the decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa—and I take it that it is conclusive on the point in this very case—and I want to read it again. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Montana. Here is a contest. One candidate said he got more votes than were given him, and evidently more votes were found on the recount.

At the trial in the district court the contestant put in evidence ballots as returned to the auditor from the different voting precincts, under rulings of the court, and the ballots so counted gave to the contestant a majority over the incumbent of 18 votes, which the court held to be a prima facie case contestant. The incumbent then put witnesses on the stand who, against objections, were permitted to testify that certain of such ballots shown them were not as they were voted or counted by the judges of election. Contestants insisted that it was error to admit the testimony, for the reason that no such issue was made by the pleading.

No such issue was made here.

We think that there was no error in the ruling of the district court in this respect. The issues were such that contestant assumed the burden of showing that he had received a greater number of votes than the incumbent, and to do that—he put in evidence the ballots now in question, with others, which gave him a majority. The ballots thus in evidence were valuable, as such, because of their identity as those cast at the election. The proof that they came through the channels and from the custodian provided by law for their preservation and keeping gave to them such a prima facie character. It was then the right of the incumbent to discredit this evidence.

He did what?—

What did the court accept? It accepted the ballots which came from the auditor, and counted them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in that particular case does not the Senator think the question as to whether there were more or less ballots than there were people voting was important?

Mr. CARAWAY. There is this question, "and others." Evidently more ballots were presented that came from the auditor, than had been counted by the official counters. The court said that these are the ballots that came from the auditor, and that they ought to be counted. If they give the contestant a majority, then he has made out a prima facie case. If the incumbent, the contestee, does not want to accept this, then he may offer evidence to show that they are not the ballots. He did not do it, and that is the record here. That is the decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa, in a case arising under circumstances almost identical with those in this contest.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator take from that that the decision would determine the course the committee ought to take if they found in a given precinct that the number of voters and the number of ballots sent from that precinct did not correspond?

Mr. CARAWAY. Unless there was some charge of fraud that somebody had stolen some or somebody had padded the ballot box, I would say yes.

Mr. NORRIS. In the case, the decision in which the Senator has read twice, the question of the difference between the number of ballots in the ballot box and the number of voters voting was not at issue at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. This is what was at issue. The court held you must take the ballots as they appear in the ballot box, as they have been taken from the auditor, because he is the proper custodian, and that must govern, unless it is proven that it is wrong. The burden is on the contestee to prove that.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with that.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. May I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska this thought, that in this particular case now before the Senate neither side had rested on the returns. Both sides had demanded a count of the ballots and not rested on the returns or the poll sheets. The contestant and the contestee rested their case on that, and that being true, and taking the suggestion of a moment ago of these things controlling, we must assume that it was a count of the ballots, and the question of the returns evidently was not in the Iowa case.

Mr. NORRIS. Evidently in the Iowa case, just read, the question of discrepancy between the number of voters and the number of ballots was not at issue, but there were a good many other questions, questions very likely to arise, as to whether the ballots there had been properly counted, and when you come to count the ballots, that, of course, is the thing to determine. I concede, I will say to the Senator, that if the ballots correspond with the poll lists and are properly identified they are the best evidence. If they do not correspond, then it is an impossibility to determine from the ballots what the result of the vote was.

For instance, if the Senator will permit me to further answer the Senator, suppose we had a case where there were 1,000 people who voted at the election, and when the ballots were sent here from that precinct there were only 5 ballots in the box. The Senator would say, "We will count those five ballots," and the 995 people who voted there are disfranchised at once. Could the Senator reconcile such a position?

Mr. BAYARD. I would not say that at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Then there is only a difference in degree. If there was a difference only of five votes, the same principle would be involved.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask a question at this juncture?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Suppose at a polling place 25 persons appeared and were recorded on the poll book as voting and 10 of them spoiled their ballots and did not in effect cast their votes; what disposition would be made of the spoiled ballots?

Mr. CARAWAY. It seems, from looking at some of the envelopes that were obtainable, that it was the duty of the officer to put such ballots in a separate envelope, because they were not good ballots, and could not be counted for anybody, although they would account for names on the poll list.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In that case, then, there might be ballots in the ballot box of 15 voters, and 10 spoiled ballots in separate envelopes?

Mr. NORRIS. Still, the committee, or the court, or whoever was passing on that question, would count those spoiled ballots, as far as accounting for the number of voters is concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If no question were raised on the ground that the 10 ballots in the spoiled-ballot envelope were actually spoiled, or if it were admitted by all the parties that they could not be counted, that would very readily account for a discrepancy between the number of ballots and the number of persons voting in that precinct.

Mr. NORRIS. The envelope containing the spoiled ballots, the one exhibited here by the Senator, would show on its face that there were spoiled ballots contained in the envelope. Whether it is a court or a jury or a committee or the Senate, if they are trying to determine the result of an election in that precinct, they will open that envelope, just the same as any other, and when they do, they will give to one or the other more votes than they got before. But, at least, they would count those in ascertaining whether the number of voters voting and the number of ballots cast corresponded.

Mr. CARAWAY. In the committee, of course, we were not favored with the views of the Senator. Nobody ever thought about trying to settle this election on an illegal ballot. Nobody ever thought a spoiled ballot ought to determine who should sit in the Senate until the matter was brought here.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator the number of precincts from which such envelopes were sent?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no way of knowing, because the auditors—who were the representatives of Steck and Brookhart; who were their chosen representatives, in one case Mr. Brookhart's brother, or secretary, or his near friend, whom-ever he wanted—went over this whole question, and they made up the count and threw all the ballots back, and we were never asked to pass on it, and that question never arose.

I think the question which the Senator from Nebraska contends is not in this case is in the case. I read from this Iowa case again:

The issues were such that contestant assumed the burden of showing that he had received a greater number of votes than the incumbent, and to do that he put in evidence the ballots now in question, with others, which gave him a majority.

He put in evidence every one he got from the auditor, and he was adjudged elected to the office, and the Supreme Court of Iowa ratified that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, I would like to say a word—

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Because the Senator seemed to speak slightly of the statute of the State of Montana.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not intend to.

Mr. WALSH. I read now from the statute of the State of Wisconsin:

As soon as the poll of the election shall be finally closed the inspectors shall proceed immediately to canvass publicly, in the presence of all persons desiring to attend the same, the votes received at such poll, and continue without adjournment until the canvass is completed, and the statements hereinafter required are made. They shall commence by a comparison of the poll lists and the correction of any mistakes therein, until they shall be found or made to agree. The box shall then be opened, and the ballots therein taken out and counted by the inspectors, unopened, except so far as to ascertain whether each ballot is single, and if two or more ballots be found so folded together as to present the appearance of a single ballot, they shall be laid aside until the count of the ballots is completed; and if, upon a comparison of the count and the appearance of such ballots, a majority of the inspectors shall be of opinion that the ballots thus folded together were voted by one elector they shall be destroyed. If the ballots in the box shall be found to exceed in number, after any such ballots folded together are destroyed, the whole number of votes shown by the poll lists, they shall be replaced in the box, and one of the inspectors shall publicly draw therefrom by chance, and without examination thereof, and destroy so many ballots unopened as shall be equal to such excess. The number of ballots agreeing, or so as aforesaid being made to agree, with the poll lists, the inspectors shall then proceed to open and count and ascertain the number of votes.

So the animadversions of the Senator concerning the law of the State of Montana must also be directed against the law of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator think either question has anything to do with the statute law of Iowa?

Mr. WALSH. No; but I asked the Senator, as I thought, in a very respectful way—

Mr. CARAWAY. And I answered the Senator that I did not know.

Mr. WALSH. If he could advise us if the law of the State of Iowa contemplated in the same way making the number of ballots in the box conform to the number of names on the poll list.

Mr. CARAWAY. I told the Senator I did not know. I could have said I did know, and it would not have been the truth, but because I answered honestly the Senator thinks I was discourteous.

I do want permission, if I may have it, to read for whatever it is worth a sketch of an article appearing in the Washington Post, which is, of course, a Republican paper, saying that this question is to be determined on political lines. I shall not read the entire article, but it is headed:

The Senate tangle from Iowa. The Senate deals with and probably will dispose of the Brookhart-Steck contest in a political rather than judicial atmosphere.

The best evidence that the committee was not actuated by partisan motives, whatever the Senate may do, is that the committee accepted every finding of the representatives of the contestant and the contestee. It did not play politics by disagreeing with a single one. If it had done that, then it might be said that it was playing politics, that it accepted a conclusion when it was helpful to one party or the other and rejected it when it was not helpful. But the committee accepted every one of them without question. They were made by the parties who represented the contestant and the contestee. Now, how in the name of common honesty could it be said that the committee was trying to play politics when it did not overturn a single agreement? There was not a vote—and I challenge anybody to the contrary, whether a member of the committee or any Senator not a member of the committee—given to Mr. Steck which Smith W. Brookhart's representative did not say he ought to have. There was not a vote given to Senator Brookhart that the representative of Steck did not say he ought to have, until we got down to the list with which the lawyers dealt. Every vote about which they agreed was given to Brookhart, and not a vote was changed by the committee in a single instance where the board of auditors representing Steck and representing Brookhart agreed. The committee never changed one of them. They are here counted just as those representatives agreed to them. The only thing the committee did was to pass upon those votes about which the representatives of Steck and Brookhart could not agree, and they were submitted to the committee for the committee to determine, and the committee passed upon them, and they consist of less than one-half of 1 per cent of all the votes involved in this contest. If there is any politics in that procedure, I do not know it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer another interruption?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I can furnish the Senator information concerning the statute of the State of Iowa. It is as follows:

Whenever the counting board receives from the receiving board the ballot box, they shall also be furnished a statement from the receiving board giving the number of votes as shown by the poll books up to that time, which shall equal the number of votes in the ballot box. The counting board shall, on opening the ballot box, first count the ballots therein. If the number of ballots found in the ballot box exceeds the number as shown by the statement received from the receiving-board the counting judges shall proceed to examine the official indorsement of said ballots, and, if any ballots are found that do not bear proper official indorsement, said ballots shall be kept separate and a record of such ballots shall be made and returned under the head of excess ballots. The counting board shall then proceed to count the ballots as now provided by law.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what they did. The counting board determined the regularity of those votes and nobody said they were fraudulent. They returned them to the auditor. Nobody says the auditor was crooked. We got them from the auditor, and nobody says the counting board or auditors here were crooked. So there we have exactly the things that the statute of Iowa says we should have.

Here is copy of letter from Mr. Parsons, Steck's attorney, which I began to read and then passed:

DES MOINES, IOWA, February 2, 1926.

HON. RICHARD P. ERNST,
Chairman Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of January 30, 1926, at hand with reference to the subpoenas from Sergeant at Arms of the Senate for the ballots and containers in Iowa in the Steck-Brookhart contest.

There were a couple of stipulations signed between Mr. Mitchell, representing Mr. Brookhart, and myself, representing Mr. Steck, providing for the issuing of subpoenas and providing for the representatives being present and O. K.ing the packages with the county auditors.

While Colonel Thayer was here superintending the inspection of the voting machines the subpoenas were ordered out by him. A form of subpoena was submitted to us. The question then subsequently arose as to our representative being present in each county. Colonel Thayer took it up with both of us and we both waived the presence of any representative, trusting all the county auditors to send in the returns as then existed in their various offices. Colonel Thayer will recollect this very well when his attention is called to it, and we both told Colonel Thayer to go ahead and have the returns sent in from the various county auditors without the presence of representatives. From time to time the county auditors all over the State telephoned in as to the right to send the ballots without our inspection and they were always informed by both Mr. Mitchell and myself of the waiver and to go ahead and send them in. Furthermore, as to Brookhart's counsel, he knew that these ballots were being sent and was present at the time the recount started in July. It was known at that time that the ballots had been so sent in, and no objections whatever were made at that time or at any other time by reason of the fact that no inspector for either party was present at the time the auditors packed and transmitted the ballots and records, and that was, of course, again a waiver of any right to object on that ground.

I am sending a copy of this to Colonel Thayer, and I think he will recollect the situation as I do.

I am inclosing herewith my affidavit and the affidavit of John W. Pandy, who is the supervisor for Mr. Steck in the recount. He has heard this letter dictated and has personal knowledge of the facts therein set out.

Furthermore, in all the counties of Iowa in which there were not machines, there were more or less discrepancies in various precincts of each county, showing differences between the official count and the count as made by the tabulators at the recount, and that in at least 100 precincts there were either shortages of ballots, or some more ballots, or some less ballots than the number of names upon the poll books. That, however, in each of these precincts various ballots were objected to either on the part of Mr. Steck or Mr. Brookhart, and the ballots so objected to went into the "objected to" ballots, which were canvassed by Messrs. Mitchell and Parsons, beginning about the 1st of December, 1925. That no question was made of the right by either party to claim votes from such contested ballots from the various precincts until the entire list of contested ballots had been gone through, when, seeing that Mr. Brookhart would be behind, the questions as to shortages of ballots or as to the improper returns, etc., were raised for the first time.

That to locate these protested ballots and put them in the various precincts to which they belonged, would necessitate a recanvass of the entire vote.

That Mr. Brookhart and Mr. Steck have each had the advantage of the various ballots that were objected to in the different precincts in which there were discrepancies.

Very truly yours,

J. M. PARSONS.

(Written notation: Am sending affidavit of Mr. Pandy and myself.)

ANNIVERSARY OF DECLARATION OF WAR WITH GERMANY

MR. MEANS. Mr. President, nine years ago to-day the United States declared war with Germany. I realize that to break into the debate might not please some of the Members of this body, but upon this date questions crowd themselves to my mind which I believe require an answer.

I also realize that a custom has existed for so many years in this body that it has become an unwritten law, that a younger Member of the Senate should remain in his seat and not participate in the deliberations of this body until he has become seasoned. It is his duty to sit and listen to the words of wisdom as they drop from the lips of his seniors. But I to-day do not address this body alone as a Senator but as a service man. I make no pretensions of representing any organization. I want to speak what is in the heart of the service man as I know him, and this day is an appropriate one.

Nine years have elapsed since war was declared with Germany. During my brief service in this body I listened to distinguished Senators address us upon the League of Nations, the World Court, and other treaties, and even now the unfinished business is the question of the debt settlement with Italy. As I have heard Senators discuss those questions, statements and assertions have dropped from their lips which astonished me. Have we forgotten the reasons for the declaration of war? Have we learned nothing during the past nine years? I have even heard it said that America had no definite policy which we must have in mind when we undertake to consider questions relating to affairs with other countries.

Yes, Mr. President, I have heard distinguished Senators say that in discussing the unfinished business now before the Senate we could approach the question solely from the attitude of selfishness. I have heard it said that we should consider it solely from a selfish viewpoint. I have also heard the remarkable assertion that the affairs of other countries are no concern of ours, and that we should not interfere in the internal affairs of other countries of the world.

Only recently I visited the city of Philadelphia as a guest of my comrades of the Spanish War. They escorted me to Independence Hall. I went into the room where those great men gathered for the purpose of creating a government for the United States. One could not visit that room without being a better American after he left it. I think many Members of this body would do well to visit it during the sesquicentennial exposition. The original furniture is there. The original chair and desk occupied by George Washington are there. I could visualize the room and the men who were there discussing the life of this Nation. I could not help remembering the remarks of that great man, the eldest of them all, Benjamin Franklin, when he stated that he had been continually watching the sun carved upon the back of the presiding officer's chair. He said he had continually wondered whether it was a setting sun or a rising sun, but that now upon the completion of their task he realized it was a rising sun.

Yet in that instrument—and that is the reason why I call it to your mind on this day—was written the first foreign policy for America. It provided for the office of President, which was a new office in the government of peoples. There was placed in his hands the power to make treaties and to conduct all negotiations with foreign governments. The States, mark you, surrendered their right to make treaties, surrendered their right for preparation for defense, surrendered their right to negotiate with foreign governments. They placed that power in the hands of one man—the Chief Executive of this Nation. And, Mr. President, fearful that that tremendous power might be misplaced, they provided that the Senate of the United States, which was to be composed of two representatives from each State, must consent to any treaty growing out of negotiations conducted by the Chief Executive.

But what I want particularly to call to the attention of the Senate to-day is that there was written therein one provision little thought of and little discussed. They provided the qualifications of the Chief Executive, and then said, "But the Chief Executive must be a man who has been engaged in this conflict for liberty or he must be native born." I ask you why that provision was written into the Constitution of the United States? Surely they did not mean to offend those who would come here from other countries; they did not mean to infer that they would not become just as loyal Americans as those born here. Oh, no. But they wanted to be sure that no man who had been given this great power should have any connection, either directly or indirectly, with any other nation in the world. They wanted to be sure that those who negotiated treaties or alliances with foreign governments should be purely Americans. They wrote the American policy into that instrument that in dealing with foreign nations we should be truly and purely American.

Mr. President, George Washington in the address which has only recently been read to this body, warned us against foreign entanglements and alliances. I also call your attention here to the fact that he outlined what was America's policy in a letter written to General Lafayette, dated December 25, 1793, in which he said:

I wish well to all nations and to all men. My politics are plain and simple. I think every nation has a right to establish that form of government under which it conceives it may live most happily, provided it infracts no right or is not dangerous to others.

This policy has lived on through. It is not my purpose to recite here the history of our Nation; but I wish to emphasize that it is not a new policy; it was one which was first uttered by the Father of His Country.

I want to come on down to the period of 1898, when we engaged in the war with Spain. That war brought us into the whirlpool of international politics. Then we come to the World War, into which we were plunged nine years ago to-day.

O Senators, mayhap you care not to think of that day; perhaps it does not bring home a lesson to you; but it seems to me the lessons of nine years ago and the sacrifices incident to the action we then took should be written upon the hearts of every man who pretends to be a lawmaker of this country.

Why did we go to war? I have only recently read the resolution of the Congress of the United States declaring war. It declared that Germany had been guilty of acts of war toward the United States and therefore we were already at war, and it also declared that we formally entered the war. It seems to me rather an unusual resolution.

I also recall that many people say we entered the war because Belgium was invaded. If so, we were a little late. I have also heard it said that we entered the war because the Germans sank the Lusitania. If so, we certainly were late. Oh, yes; the President of the United States declared that we entered the war "to make the world safe for democracy." That is a beautiful phrase; perhaps other Senators understand it, but to me it is merely a glittering generality.

We entered the World War, as any service man will tell you if you ask him, for the purpose of driving the House of Hohenzollern from the throne of Germany. The Kaiser was a menace to the peace of the world and we declared him an enemy of mankind. As proof of that, so soon as the Kaiser abdicated the throne of Germany an armistice was signed and the sacrifices ceased. Was that a lesson? Were we following out the American policy or were we merely in and could not get out? Oh, I can not believe that we have so soon forgotten those days.

I am going to indulge in a personal allusion, because it is a recollection that crowds itself upon my memory to-day. I commanded the Fourth United States Infantry in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. That regiment took over the front line on the 30th of September and was relieved early in the morning of October 27. Almost every day they had been engaged in one place or another, and their losses had been tremendous. On the 22d of October we made our last advance, took over the Bois de Foret and the woods clear to the Andon River. We had completed our mission; there was comparative quiet, inasmuch as the Germans were making a retreat and the American Army was preparing for its next advance, which began November 1.

Division headquarters told me they could get trucks into the Bruilles-Cunel Road. I did not want to leave the woods without attempting to bring out the bodies of those who were lying there. Somehow I just felt as if I could not leave without at least attempting to bring those bodies out. So I placed every available man to work, and they brought the bodies from the front line, the support, and the reserve and laid them two deep on the left side of the Cunel Road from the rock quarry, where my first-aid station was located, to the top of the hill, a distance of more than half a mile. Some of those bodies had been in there for 11 days, some but a few hours. Some were black from the effect of gas, some were torn by high explosives and were unrecognizable. I went out to count them, but could not complete my self-assigned task. I can not forget that day. I looked up into that cold, dreary, pitiless French sky and I asked the question of myself, "Why this sacrifice? Is it all in vain? Is it needless?"

The flower of America had tendered their lives as a sacrifice upon the altar of patriotism. The sacrifice had been accepted. Could it be that it was for nothing, that it was all in vain, and that subsequently, in the brief period of nine years, the world, and my own country in particular, could forget? No; the comforting thought came to me that my God is a just God and that that sacrifice was not in vain but was given for the welfare of human kind.

We found a tyrant on the throne of Germany. We had no quarrels with the German people, and to-day the service men wish them well and hope they will be prosperous; but a tyrant on the throne of Germany, surrounded by a military machine, had become a menace to the peace of the world and an enemy of mankind. So the blood of America was given to drive that militaristic government from the throne of Germany.

Did we have an American policy? Is it so little understood that I must sit here and listen to learned Senators say that we should consider in dealing with other countries only the selfish viewpoint, and that we have no business interfering with the internal affairs of other countries and how they are governed is no concern of ours? You, Mr. President, can imagine the thoughts that pass through my mind when I hear such statements made.

It is easy to criticize, but have we a constructive measure to present to carry out the policies which I have enunciated? I know there are some who claim that we should be isolationists; I know there are some who claim we should be pro-leaguers; I know there are some who claim that we should be militaristic! yes, and there is a great body who claim we should be pacifists; but I say to you, Mr. President, we are none of those things; I say to you, we have peace in our hearts and are awaiting anxiously the time to come when conditions in the world will be such that we shall have no more war and peace will reign. I say to you, selfishness is the cardinal sin of the world to-day.

My friends, if I were permitted to speak America's policy, I would say that it is our duty to tie Old Glory to the mast-head of the ship of state and sail the international seas unafraid, with peace in our hearts but fear of no nation; and when we find a government, which its people have selected, anxiously waiting the time when peace shall reign in the hearts of men, when we find they are willing to assist in the promotion of peace, when we find a government that is willing to submit to the spirit of arbitration, we will extend to that government the hand of fellowship and say it is a friend of the cause of peace. But when we find a government that is a menace to the peace of the world, it is our duty to stand up manfully and say: "That government is an enemy of mankind." I understand no other policy than that which could be appropriately called American.

Sirs, we can not have peace until the governments of the world understand and accept a law. A law is a rule of conduct. International law is a rule of conduct which has reference to the dealings of one nation with another. International law is but a rule of conduct. If nations understand the law and respect it and obey it, there can be no war. We may try other schemes; but I look back upon the nine years just elapsed, and the fruitlessness of the efforts of the countries of Europe convinces me that it is time for this Nation to take the lead and to ask that international law be determined, be amended if need be, restated when necessary, and that we have an understanding by the peoples of the world as to its meaning, and then insist upon its being respected and obeyed.

The good citizen in this country is the citizen who obeys the law. The good citizen of the world and the good nation and government of the world is the one that is willing to obey the law, respect it, and observe it. So it is necessary, as I view it, to go to the fundamental reason why war exists; and when that is done I believe we will see that the only way in which peace can come to the world is through an intelligent understanding.

I believe that it is absolutely necessary, and that the time has come, after this lapse of nine years, to have a proposal for an understanding of international law, and that we should urge all the civilized nations of the world to respect and to obey it. For that purpose I have taken these few moments of the Senate's time, not in a prepared address, but merely pouring out my own heart and my own belief and the heart of the service man as I understand it.

I realize that my thoughts have been but crudely expressed; but the loyalty of my heart and the intensity of my purpose must be my advocates for the sincerity of my desires. So, Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution which I have prepared, and ask unanimous consent that it may be received and read from the desk.

PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL LAW

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIAMS in the Chair). In the absence of objection, the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS] will be received and read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 87) to request the President of the United States to invite an international conference for the codification of international law was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the United States of America is desirous of promoting peace on earth and establishing as a rule of international conduct that "right is master of might"; and

Whereas the peace and security of nations and the happiness of peoples require the establishment and respect for international law; and

Whereas the existing rules of international law require restatements, amendments, and additions thereto: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be requested to call a conference of delegates from all the civilized nations of the world for the purpose of making more definite, certain, and comprehensive the body of law by which international conduct is to be ruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MEANS. I will not ask that it be considered at the present time. Many Senators are not in the Chamber. The subject is a big one. I want it distinctly understood that I have not presented the joint resolution to embarrass the executive branch of the Government or the Committee on Foreign Relations. I would not have presumed to present it were it not that to-day is the day when all of us should think of the World War, its consequences, and what caused it. If there is a way of avoiding war in the future, it is our duty to follow it.

I want the subject carefully considered. I do not want hurried action. I am going to ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will ask them to give it their consideration. The subject is an appealing one; it is one in which I sincerely believe; and therefore I will ask the Presiding Officer kindly to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat let me ask, if the Senator desires action on his joint resolution, why he does not let it lie over under the rule and take it up to-morrow?

Mr. MEANS. I should be delighted to do that; but, as I have tried to say, I do not want to presume upon the Foreign Relations Committee. Its members are elder statesmen. They are learned. I want the benefit of their advice. The joint resolution may be crudely drawn. I have no pride of authorship, but I do believe that I could yield to no man in sincerity of purpose. The education, the refinements of diplomacy, and the experience which is the gift of those who serve upon the Foreign Relations Committee compel me to have the joint resolution go to that body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I have been much impressed by the patriotic remarks of the Senator from Colorado; and it really seems to me too bad to have a joint resolution which is born of such an impulse placed in the burying ground, because of course the Senator realizes that if it goes to the committee it never will be heard of after this morning.

Mr. MEANS. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee assured me—I have not presented the joint resolution to others—that he was heartily in favor of it and would take action. If I thought the joint resolution was going into an ice box I certainly would not submit it; but I am not one of those precocious Senators who think they know it all, and I really want the advice of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, Mr. President, my advice would be of no value to the Senator; but, regardless of what has been told him by the chairman of the committee—and I do not doubt his patriotism or that of any other member of the committee—the Senator from Colorado must realize that the tenth anniversary of our entrance into the war will be upon us before any consideration is given to this worthy joint resolution if it goes to the committee.

Mr. MEANS. I did not know the Senator was such a pessimist, but he may be right.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not a pessimist; I am simply a prophet.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MEANS. I do.

Mr. DILL. I listened to the reading of the joint resolution. As I understood it, the joint resolution provides for the calling of a conference to codify existing international law.

Mr. MEANS. That is not quite a correct statement of the provisions of the joint resolution.

Mr. DILL. I want to be clear on that.

Mr. MEANS. The first preamble also sets forth that the present laws need codification, they need amendment, they need restatement, they need enlargement, and so forth.

Mr. DILL. Of course, the Senator knows that present international law in no way prevents war, and that when war comes the nations in desperation disregard and destroy all international law that ever has been invented.

Mr. MEANS. Yes; and the reason therefor is that the peoples of the world understand but little of international law. I could take a much longer time to discuss the reasons for the several wars we have had and the spirit that entered the hearts of our people that brought them on. In my viewpoint law does not prevent war. You will never do away with war until you change the hearts of men, and you will never end war so long as selfishness is the crowning motive of all negotiations. I am not one of those who believe that the millennium has come, but I do believe that we should start in the right direction; and as we need laws to govern individuals and States, we need laws to govern the nations. I do not believe that present international law is understood nor broad enough, and I believe that this step should be taken.

Mr. DILL. I want to say, in commenting upon what the Senator says about preventing war, that it is not enough merely to convince the people of the respective nations that there should be no war, but the people must have the power to stop a few men—call them kings or emperors or parliamentarians or Congressmen or Senators—from starting war. Those men can not be made to fight or die in the war they start.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senator from Colorado would ask that his joint resolution be considered now.

I do not think the people of this country are the only ones who are ignorant as to international law. I do not think the Senate knows anything about it, and I am absolutely certain that the officials of this country do not know anything about it. If they did, and if there were any such thing as international law, they would not be allowing certain people openly and flagrantly, both by night and by day, in the face of the American people, to violate that law and the laws of this country without giving any consideration to it. When a bill is introduced in the Senate to endeavor to correct the evil and to put foreigners on the same footing in the enforcement of law that the American people are forced to submit to, it is buried in an ice box in a committee room of the Senate and not reported back; no hearing is given on it, and absolutely no consideration is given to it, in order that this open, flagrant violation of the law may continue right under the dome of this Capitol and all over this country; and the officers of the law who see it openly state that they are supposed to be blind when they have eyes to see, and to be deaf when they have ears to hear.

I heartily indorse this joint resolution, and believe it should be passed. If we have any such thing as international law, the people of this country and the servants of the people of this country should know what it is. If we have not such law, the people certainly should be made to obey the laws of the United States, regardless of what position they hold, whether official or otherwise.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 12, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 5, 10, 11, and 14.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,

Except amendments numbered 18 and 19.

JOHN N. SANDLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the report may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the Senator from Wyoming state as to which amendments the Senate receded. I would also ask the Senator whether any disposition was made of the item to which the Senator from Tennessee challenged attention and which was stricken out on his motion, as I recall?

Mr. WARREN. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. KING. I may have the wrong bill in mind. His item was one which dealt with a very large appropriation for the prosecution of war frauds.

Mr. WARREN. That is not taken care of in this bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain the items as to which the Senate receded?

Mr. WARREN. The items which appear as disagreed to have not been really disagreed to in conference, but under the rules of the House must be taken back to the House. One of the items is the matter of the salary of the Alien Property Custodian, which had been fixed at $7,500, and they agreed with us on $10,000. But they stated they would have to take it back to the House.

There was another matter, involving the new memorial bridge. There was a matter of $50 for newspapers and the matter of the Federal Oil Conservation Board, which were agreed to but which had to be taken back to the House. Then there was the public-buildings item of $250,000, involving removals asked for by the committee presided over by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot].

Mr. KING. Those were amendments agreed to in the Senate and which have been agreed to by the House?

Mr. WARREN. Practically; yes.

Mr. LENROOT. What became of the $10,000,000 fighting-ships fund?

Mr. WARREN. That was left as we passed it. There were three items on which the Senate lost out. One was a small matter involving a steel gallery in the Smithsonian Institute.

Mr. KING. Were the others important?

Mr. WARREN. Very unimportant. They were of little consequence.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the adoption of the report.

Mr. WARREN. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

Mr. William Tyler Page, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House has impeached George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois, for misdemeanors; that the House has adopted articles of impeachment against the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, which the managers on the part of the House have been directed to carry to the Senate, and that EARL C. MICHENER, W. D. BOIES, IRA G. HERSEY, C. ELLIS MOORE, GEORGE R. STORRS, HATTON W. SUMNERS, ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, JOHN N. TILLMAN, and FRED H. DOMINICK, Members of the House, have been appointed such managers.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. EANSW], informed me a few moments ago that he desires to speak for 10 or 15 minutes, and I have agreed to yield to him for that purpose. After he concludes I shall address the Senate.

Mr. ERNST. Mr. President, upon the death of Senator Spencer I was appointed chairman of the subcommittee to hear and determine the Steck-Brookhart contest.

In my judgment, I owe it to the Members of the Senate to let them know briefly something of the character of the work done by the committee. It was long, tedious work, occupying many months of time, and received the most careful and painstaking attention of the committee.

Both contestant and contestee had filed pleadings in which they made affidavit that the official count was not correct and asked that a recount be had. Nothing remained for the committee but to direct a recount as requested, and that was at once done.

Both Senator Brookhart and Mr. Steck were represented by lawyers of high standing at the Iowa bar. They were not only learned in the law but men of exceptional character and known ability. Senator Brookhart's attorney was Mr. J. G. Mitchell, and Mr. Steck's attorney was Mr. J. M. Parsons. They were thoroughly posted as to the facts and as to the law.

As usual in cases where attorneys of such standing are employed, these gentlemen proved of the greatest help to the committee. They did not indulge in useless discussion, but aided the committee by directing its attention to those questions which were essential. These are the gentlemen who, after a careful survey of the situation, prepared the various stipulations and agreements in this case. These agreements were honestly and faithfully carried out in every particular.

There was not the slightest intimation at any time, or from any source, that such was not the case. The utmost good feeling and harmony existed between counsel of both parties from first to last. Never was there one word by either of them calling in question the actions of the other. I do not have to explain to those Members of the Senate who have had practical experience how helpful this action by the attorneys was to the committee.

Senator Spencer, while acting as chairman of the subcommittee, had selected Mr. Edwin P. Thayer, now Secretary of the Senate, as the chief officer to see that the ballots were properly brought to Washington and that they were cared for after reaching here. Mr. Thayer was appointed also to superintend the recount. Mr. Thayer had acted in the same capacity in the contest brought by Mr. Peddy for the seat of Senator MATFIELD, of Texas. He had discharged his duties with such ability and fairness as to gain the high commendation of both sides to that controversy, marked as it was by much feeling.

In the contest now under consideration Mr. Thayer acted with the same fairness and ability; indeed, both parties united in presenting him with a gold watch as a recognition of his most efficient services. Not a single act of his in connection with bringing the ballots here and in supervising the recount, which lasted many weeks, was called in question.

Those who assisted in the recount—the "counters," as they were called—were selected with great care, and in nearly every case were appointed only after they had been recommended in writing by some Member of this body.

From first to last every step in the recount of these ballots was taken under the direct supervision of a representative of Senator Brookhart and a representative of Mr. Steck.

There was appointed for Senator Brookhart, and upon his express request, Mr. Lewis H. Cook, who served well and faithfully; and when he ceased to act, upon Senator Brookhart's request, Roy Rankin was appointed and acted for a few days. Thereafter Senator Brookhart asked that his brother be appointed. That was done, and his brother continued to act until the count was concluded.

Mr. Thayer was instructed by our committee that when any question was raised over a ballot by either of these personal representatives, the ballot should be at once put aside, to be later laid before the committee for its consideration. That was done in every case. Not a single complaint was made by the representative of either Senator Brookhart or Mr. Steck.

All this was so fairly and impartially done that counsel for both sides at the end of the hearing made special mention of the fact. They stated that no complaint could be made as to the handling of the ballots and the work done by the committee in reference to them.

Mr. President, some of the questions asked by Senators during the discussion yesterday would indicate that those who asked them forgot for the moment that when a recount of a vote is necessary it is not possible for the members of that committee to personally make that recount. Contests involving a recount could not be made if the members of the committee had to do the work. It must be done by agents appointed by the committee or it can not be done at all.

After all of the ballots had been counted, some 900,000 in number, there were laid aside for the consideration of the committee 8,721 ballots, concerning which some question had been raised by the representative either of Senator Brookhart or of Mr. Steck.

The attorneys for the contestant and contestee then requested the committee that time be given them to examine these ballots, stating that they thereby hoped to lighten the labors of the committee by endeavoring to agree as to how certain of these disputed ballots should be counted. These attorneys worked hard and faithfully, and after a number of weeks agreed that although the representative of each party had questioned them that there was in fact no doubt as to how 3,847 of this 8,721 ballots should be counted, and thereupon submitted to the committee 4,854 votes for its consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that every agent appointed by the committee was certified to and approved by both the contestant and the contestee or by their respective attorneys?

Mr. ERNST. They were. The Senator may have heard me state that, even when it came to the counters for the clerical work, before there was any appointment made a letter was received from some Senator, and they came from both sides of the Senate, approving the applicant, and the appointment followed. No greater care could have been exercised?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERNST. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator contend that if the counters made a mistake, or those men whom the committee selected made a mistake, as to what ballots should be counted, that necessarily we should take them because one of them was suggested by Senator Brookhart?

Mr. ERNST. I think it is perfectly clear that there may have been mistakes made in counting 900,000 ballots, but what I do say is that there is no other possible way of getting a count except by having the count made by agents. No human agency will ever be perfect. When that count is carefully made and reported we have to rely upon it. If the attorney who represented Mr. Steck or the attorney who represented Mr. Brookhart could have shown us that an error had been made, of course it would have been corrected; but that was never done; it was never asked to be done, and the count was closed and final arguments were made, and no complaint of any error in the count has been made to this day.

Mr. WHEELER. Did not Senator Brookhart in his final statement, as reported in the hearings, state to the committee that the committee had made a mistake or that the counters had made a mistake, and that the committee should not have accepted—

Mr. ERNST. Mr. Brookhart for three days presented arguments in behalf of his side of the case.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator does not allow me to finish my question.

Mr. ERNST. He made many statements with which the committee could not agree. The committee was perfectly clear that nothing said by Mr. Brookhart and no evidence introduced by him made it necessary for the committee again to go over the count. I am of that opinion now.

Mr. WHEELER. I say the Senator not only had these men make the count, but he also took their views upon the law questions as well, did he not?

Mr. ERNST. I do not follow the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. The committee not only took the views upon the facts of these men who were their agents, but they also took their legal conclusion as well, did they not?

Mr. ERNST. To what persons does the Senator refer whose legal opinions were taken?

Mr. WHEELER. I am talking of the men who made the count.

Mr. ERNST. Let me see if I understand the Senator, because I have to understand him before I can answer him.

Mr. WHEELER. I will try to make it plain. The committee selected certain men to make the count, did they not?

Mr. ERNST. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Those men went out and made the count and brought back certain ballots, did they not?

Mr. ERNST. No; they did not. As the count went on, unless it were a perfectly clear, simple ballot, about which there could be no question, the attention of both the representative of Mr. Brookhart and the representative of Mr. Steck was at once called to it. Then these two representatives either agreed on what should be done, or, upon the objection of either one, that ballot was laid aside for the consideration of the committee. Now let me proceed.

Mr. WHEELER. That does not answer my question. I should like an answer to the question. You selected the committee to make the count. Then, after you selected the committee to make the count, you—

Mr. ERNST. Now, what is the Senator talking about? Let us be exact. What committee is he talking about?

Mr. WHEELER. I am talking about the men the committee selected to make the count. It selected certain individuals to make the count, did it not, as the agents of the committee?

Mr. ERNST. That is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. They went out and made the count, did they not?

Mr. ERNST. They made a count in a room provided for the purpose under the supervision of Mr. Thayer and a representative of each of the parties to the contest.

Mr. WHEELER. And they opened up certain packages and took the ballots out, did they not?

Mr. ERNST. Yes. Go on and state the question. What is it the Senator wants to know?

Mr. WHEELER. That is the fact, and I want to make it clear.

Mr. ERNST. They had to count the ballots, and the ballots had to be removed from the bags in which they were contained.

Mr. WHEELER. In some of the precincts where the ballots disagreed with the tally sheets they took the official count, did they not?

Mr. ERNST. I am not going into a discussion of that question. The Senator has said everything that he could have said on that subject. I have heard him repeat it some 10 or 15 times, and in my view of the case it has no bearing. I do not care about being interrupted in the statement I am making to repeat what I have already said at least a dozen times.

Mr. WHEELER. But I want to get it clear. If the members of the committee—

Mr. ERNST. It has been made just as clear as it could be made, but the Senator is asking me the same question. That will not make it any clearer.

Mr. WHEELER. It will if the Senator can answer it; but if he does not care to answer it, of course, I do not want to interrupt him.

Mr. ERNST. The Senator from Montana and I can not agree upon any answer that I might give.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, we could if we got the facts, probably.

Mr. ERNST. Not unless I took the Senator's view of it.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator does not want to answer, I will not interrupt.

Mr. ERNST. The facts about it are perfectly clear. There is no fact with reference to this entire count about which there can be any doubt.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, if the Senator does not want me to interrupt him, I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. ERNST. I certainly do not want the Senator to interrupt me by repeating questions that he asked on yesterday and this morning.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator so that I may not do it again and be discourteous to him, in case he has taken the position that I assume he is taking? Does the Senator object to being interrogated by questions that have been previously asked?

Mr. ERNST. Yes; I object to being interrogated and asked questions which were asked of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] this morning and on yesterday.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator himself, then, does not want to answer any questions that have been asked of preceding speakers?

Mr. ERNST. No; because I can see from what has gone before that it would not satisfy the Senator from Nebraska nor would it satisfy the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and it would not throw any light upon the question, because the matter has been gone over again and again.

Mr. NORRIS. But some of us would like to have the viewpoint of the chairman of this great committee. However, if the Senator from Kentucky does not want to be interrogated on any subject as to which preceding speakers have been interrogated, of course I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. ERNST. On the subject to which the Senator has referred I certainly do not wish to be and will not be interrupted.

Mr. President, in my judgment it is perfectly clear that the committee not only should have accepted the conclusion of the attorneys as to these votes, but that no other course was practicable. The attorneys were learned in the law, of high character, and each keenly alert to protect the interest of his client. The only course left open for the committee would have been for its own members to have examined every one of these 8,721 ballots. If this course is urged, then it may just as well be argued that the committee should itself have counted every one of the 900,000 ballots cast in the election—an impracticable and impossible task. This, as previously stated, would prevent any contest for a seat in the Senate where a recount of the vote would be necessary. Judging from some of the questions asked by the Senators during the discussion yesterday, they seemed to have overlooked this fact.

The Senate must remember that the Committee on Privileges and Elections must adopt the same practical methods of obtaining evidence and in getting at the facts that are elsewhere followed. No impossible task can be imposed upon it. It must employ agents to make the count. It must use every precaution to see that the count is fair. When this is done, it is justified in relying upon that count.

Those upon whom the committee is perfectly justified in relying, namely, the attorneys representing both sides, make agreements as to what the evidence discloses. Can it be fairly contended that the committee should not rely upon such agreements?

Something has been said in effect that there can be no stipulation waiving the right to a seat in the United States Senate; that the State steps in; that its right has to be considered and can not be waived by agreement. Who for one moment doubts this statement? Your committee which passed on this contest would be the last to question it. Nevertheless, your committee stoutly asserts that in endeavoring to ascertain the truth, common-sense methods long in use and long approved must be followed. There is no other way left to ascertain the truth. The sovereign will of the voters of a State must be followed, but how shall that will be ascertained? By the same methods which would be employed to endeavor to ascertain the truth in other matters and in other jurisdictions.

Stipulations by counsel, learned and of high character, as to the character of evidence, have ever been recognized as one of the best methods of arriving at correct conclusions. Honorable counsel ever has the interest of his client at heart; he waives nothing to his client's prejudice that he does not believe is fully justified by the facts. In the case now before us I do not hesitate to state that not a Member of this Senate could have heard Mr. J. G. Mitchell, the personal attorney for Mr. Brookhart, without being deeply impressed by his evident honesty, his signal ability, and his earnest desire to be helpful to the committee. No Member of the Senate need for one moment imagine that Mr. Mitchell would waive by stipulation any substantial right or interest of his client. The stipulations made by him in this case were made for no other purpose than to assist in arriving at correct conclusions.

I confess some amazement at the statement by one of the Senators, in substance that, because there was no fraud the committee had no right to recount the ballots.

It is a well-known fact that an honest mistake in the count is not an infrequent occurrence in elections. The Senator would have us believe that the Senate could not, although it knew that an error in the count had been made, determine by recount that error and give the seat in the Senate to the person entitled to it. Such argument would deprive the Senate of its constitutional right to determine for itself who is entitled to membership in the body.

The Senate should understand that this case clearly presents the question as to whether or not the Senate will continue, as it has always done, to count the ballots in accordance with the intent of the voter, or whether it will permit the law of a State to control its action. Your committee followed the time-honored custom of the Senate, and whenever the voter's intent was clear the ballot was counted accordingly. To adopt any other rule will permit a State to practically control the action of the Senate.

I do not desire that any Senator should be of the opinion, without at least an opportunity to know the truth, that there was any disposition on the part of the committee to treat Senator Brookhart in any manner other than with the utmost consideration and fairness. Ballots which, under the law of Iowa, could not be counted for Senator Brookhart were given him in every instance where the will of the voter could be ascertained. Sample ballots where the word "sample" was erased and the word "official" written on the ballots were counted for Senator Brookhart.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERNST. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask how many of those sample ballots there were?

Mr. ERNST. There were only a few of those sample ballots. I think it was stated upon the floor yesterday that there were only 3 or 4, but they were accepted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There were 4.

Mr. ERNST. There were 4; and I am mentioning them because in a contest where so few votes might determine the result—4, 5, 6, or 8 might have determined the result—wherever the intention of the voter could be ascertained it was followed.

Whenever we found a vote which we thought was intended for Senator Brookhart, regardless of whether it had the cross in the proper place, it was counted for him. We also counted ballots for Mr. Steck when the intention of the voter was plain; but my memory is clear that Senator Brookhart obtained the benefit of more of what might be called irregular ballots than did Mr. Steck, simply because there seemed to have been more irregular Brookhart ballots than irregular Steck ballots.

In my judgment the recount establishes beyond all question that a plurality of the votes cast were intended to be cast for Mr. Steck. About this I have not the shadow of a doubt.

I wish now to call attention to a fact which I believe has not been presented to the Senate. As the count progressed, this fact, much to my surprise, and I believe to that of other members of the committee, was brought out: Almost from the first the count began to show a decided gain for Mr. Steck. This was not true only in one part of the State but throughout nearly every part of the State. The recount increased Mr. Steck's lead. This increase continued at a rate which left no doubt as to the final outcome.

During all this time not one word was intimated or suggested by anyone that there was anything wrong or fraudulent. Let me add that in my judgment there was not the slightest foundation for anyone so thinking, nor do I believe that anyone, including Senator Brookhart and his counsel, were of this opinion for a single moment. Why do I say this? The ballot containers from only two precincts had broken seals, and there was not a suggestion or suspicion that this had happened other than during the transit in the mail from Iowa to Washington and in that rough handling which mail bags receive.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the suggestion was made that there was a great show of gain in favor of Mr. Steck.

Mr. ERNST. If the Senator will permit me to finish the subject I am on, I shall be happy to endeavor to answer any question he may have to ask.

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. ERNST. Further, these gains for Mr. Steck were, as above stated, from nearly every precinct in the State. The ballots evidencing these gains had been received in good order and were carefully counted.

I do not wish any Member of the Senate to be under any wrong impression about these ballots or concerning this count. There was no fraud; there was no injustice anywhere. It should be borne in mind that there was everywhere throughout Iowa among Republicans, beginning with the Republican State organization and extending through the various minor organizations, a feeling that Senator Brookhart had obtained the Republican nomination unfairly; that he had, as they charged, deserted the President and the Republican Party, and he should not, therefore, be reelected. It was this that caused the great defection and was the reason for many Republican votes being scratched for Mr. Steck. Many thousands of the Republicans did not vote at all, and many thousands of those who did vote carefully scratched their ticket. All Republicans throughout Iowa were urged to scratch Mr. Brookhart in favor of Mr. Steck, not only by the Republican State organization, but by the leading Republican newspapers and press of the Republican Party. This accounts for the gains which a careful recount gave to Mr. Steck.

There are 99 counties in Iowa. In nearly all of these counties there were net gains for Mr. Steck over Senator Brookhart. In the few counties where there were not net gains for Mr. Steck there were many precincts in these counties where there were net gains for Mr. Steck.

The effect, therefore, of this general propaganda by the Republicans of the State against Mr. Brookhart was everywhere felt, and showed its results in all the 99 counties.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I simply wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the suggestion that there were very marked gains for Mr. Steck might be misleading. There were about a million votes cast, and all that Mr. Steck gained was 2,237 out of a million votes, so it is very evident that he did not gain very rapidly throughout Iowa, because this was the only difference that was shown after the whole canvass of nearly a million votes.

Mr. ERNST. I repeat my statement, and the Senator will see the reason for it—that, as I recall, and I looked at it with great care—out of the 99 counties there were about 79 where Mr. Steck, on a careful recount, made a net gain. Whether

It was large or small he continued to gain; and in the 20 counties outside of these 79, in many, many precincts he gained. One would not suppose that the gain would be great in number where there had already been an official count, and I should like to state now how, I think, those mistakes in the count occurred.

A Republican would place the cross under the Republican emblem. In the hurry of a count upon an election night the officials see the mark under the emblem, and count it as a straight ticket, when a more careful examination of the ballot would have disclosed that the ticket has been scratched. This propaganda by Republicans against Senator Brookhart went on everywhere. It was conducted by the leading Republicans of the State of Iowa. Its effect was everywhere seen and everywhere felt. You can hardly pick out any precinct or any county where the tickets were not scratched.

Because there are some slight discrepancies between the number of ballots in the box and the number of names upon the books, you can not conclude that therefore something was wrong. It is not true. Nowhere were there even rumors of illegal practices or fraudulent ballots. It was simply a case where there was a reaction against the nominee of the party because the voters felt he was not a Republican, that he had gotten his nomination under false pretenses, and the Republican Party, from the top to the bottom, endeavored to show how they felt by scratching the ballot.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERNST. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I can not quite get the point with regard to why he got his nomination unfairly at the primary election.

Mr. ERNST. I am stating to you what the opinion of the voters was. You have seen it in the record. It was so stated by the Republican State central committee and its representatives who appeared before the committee. I am not going into the discussion of how Mr. Brookhart obtained his nomination. I am stating the matter solely to let the Members of the Senate know why there was this general change in the Republican vote. Whether the charge was true or whether it was not true, does not change the fact that the Republicans of that State believed it, and that they acted upon it, and that that accounts for the vote. Whether or not it is justified, I do not care to consider.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Republican organization filed a contest, did they not?

Mr. ERNST. The Republican Party organization asked to be a party to this contest and wanted to present their side of the case. We refused to permit it after hearing the evidence. It is in the record.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator why that was done?

Mr. ERNST. Because we thought we could not possibly determine whether Mr. Brookhart was entitled to a seat in the Senate because he was or was not a good Republican. The only question we had to determine was who was elected as disclosed by the ballots. It would have been absurd for us to investigate into the political fights and controversies in Iowa. After the Republican committee had submitted its evidence we took no further note of it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ERNST. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. If it will not disturb the course of the Senator's argument, I wonder if he will not explain the action of the committee touching the 1,344 ballots that are mentioned both in the majority report and in the minority report. It is not clear to me what action the committee took.

Mr. ERNST. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] will follow me. He will explain fully the committee's views on that subject; and if the Senator will pardon me, I will not go into that matter.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERNST. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator explain just what conclusion he draws from the fact that the Republican organization had carried on so much propaganda against Senator Brookhart? How did that affect the ballots or the judges of election in the election precincts?

Mr. ERNST. Evidently I did not make myself as clear as I thought I had. I mentioned that matter solely for the purpose of showing that it was not in any one precinct or in any one county that votes were cast about which there was any doubt; that these votes were cast all over the State in the same way. They were cast by regular Republicans, who did not desire to vote for Mr. Brookhart. I have mentioned that for two reasons. It showed that there was no fraud; it shows that there was no attempt to stuff the ballot boxes or to put in illegal votes; that the election was absolutely fairly conducted; but in every one of these counties—99 of them throughout the State—there was a revolt against Mr. Brookhart, and in the most counties—about 80—there was a net gain for Mr. Steck.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator does not mean to imply, then, that the propaganda which had been carried on led the judges of election in the different precincts into any carelessness with regard to how they decided about the votes, and with regard to whether or not a ballot was to be accepted?

Mr. ERNST. I said nothing about carelessness. I indicated to you what I thought on that subject when I stated that frequently, in my practical experience in looking at ballots after they have been cast, I have seen election officers in a hurry put aside a ballot thinking it was a straight ballot, when in fact it was a scratched ballot. I mentioned it for that reason. I am not reflecting upon the conduct of any of the officials. I think it was an honestly conducted election. I have no question about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERNST. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand the position of the Senator, it is that the propaganda, as he terms it, that was carried on by the regular Republican organization against Mr. Brookhart accounts for the changes in these various precincts.

Mr. ERNST. Absolutely.

Mr. JOHNSON. What accounts for the changes in favor of Mr. Brookhart where the voting was mechanical?

Mr. ERNST. I do not know. I can not give you of my own knowledge any statement on that point. I do not know that that is the fact.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have understood it to be the fact that where voting machines were used Brookhart gained on the recount. Is not that so?

Mr. ERNST. I will not answer that, for I do not know. It may be true.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator does not know, very well.

Mr. ERNST. I do not recall at the present time which counties they are.

When the evidence was all in—excepting three days, which were subsequently given exclusively to Senator Brookhart—and argument was being made, and that at a time when it was perfectly clear to Mr. Mitchell, attorney for Senator Brookhart, that the recount had been fatal to Senator Brookhart, it was then stated by Mr. Mitchell in substance, and the committee heard for the first time, that inasmuch as Mr. Steck was the contestant it devolved upon him to show that the ballots from the time that they were cast up to the time they were brought to Washington had been kept and preserved in Iowa as the law of that State required, and that they had not been tampered with.

It was admitted by Mr. Mitchell that there was no charge of fraud or irregularity or any evidence thereof.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERNST. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The law of the State of Iowa is as Mr. Mitchell contended it was; is it not? That is the law of Iowa; is it not?

Mr. ERNST. I am not accepting the Senator's statement as to the law of Iowa.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not making a statement. I am asking the Senator the question if it is not the law?

Mr. ERNST. No; I do not so understand it. If it is, the Senator can read it. Whether the law is or is not a certain way does not control the action of the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator means that the committee is not being determined or controlled by the law of Iowa?

Mr. ERNST. Absolutely not. Nothing is clearer than that the Committee on Privileges and Elections is its own judge, and it does not have to follow the law of Iowa and has not done so and has not attempted to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. It has not attempted to follow the law of Iowa in this case, has it?

Mr. ERNST. The Senator heard me make the statement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the committee had followed the law of Iowa, what would have been the result?

Mr. ERNST. I have no idea. I will let some other person guess.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senator says the committee did not follow the law. How about the voters in the State of Iowa? Were not they supposed to follow the law?

Mr. ERNST. Absolutely.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then, if they followed the law, why did not the committee follow the law of the State of Iowa?

Mr. ERNST. The committee sought to get the intention of the voter. I hope that is satisfactory to the Senator who asks the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, has the Senator finished?

Mr. ERNST. I have not. The fact is that Mr. Mitchell realized that his case was lost and that there was nothing left for him to do except to endeavor to introduce an issue into the contest that was entirely new and strange until that moment.

I fear from what transpired upon this floor yesterday that some of my fellow Senators are permitting matters to dim their vision which do not go to the real merits of this controversy.

There was much discussion yesterday and again to-day in reference to the precincts where there was a difference between the names on the books and the ballots in the box. It has caused me to wonder why neither of the distinguished lawyers who gave months of time to the study of this case, who live in Iowa, and who have an intimate knowledge of its laws, and who knew all of the facts, did not see fit, in the interest of either contestant or contestee, to call attention to what was done. If it was thought by either of these distinguished lawyers that it was of sufficient importance to be considered, I wonder that it was not brought before the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ERNST. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The burden of proof in all contest cases is always upon the contestant to prove his case, is it not?

Mr. ERNST. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. And the burden of proof was upon the contestant in this case to show that those ballots were kept in accordance with the laws of the State of Iowa from the time they were voted until they were brought to Washington.

Mr. ERNST. That is the Senator's conclusion. I do not think that is at all correct.

Mr. WHEELER. I am asking the Senator whether that is the fact.

Mr. ERNST. The Senator has heard my answer.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator stated that the discussion yesterday had caused him to wonder why the lawyers for the contestant and the contestee did not take up this question of the shortage of ballots. May I say to the Senator that, as one Senator, I have wondered why the members of the committee did not take up this subject, even if the lawyers and the counters did not, and I would like to know how it happened that the committee did not take it up. Did the committee discuss the question at all?

Mr. ERNST. Not at all. The committee discussed, and very thoroughly examined into, every question which counsel for either side presented to the committee. After a careful study of the case—and I wish again to say that they were as able lawyers as there are in Iowa—they presented the case to us. We took up the case as it was presented. They made stipulations, which we observed. After a careful examination of the ballots they said to us, in substance, "This will decide the case either for contestant or contestee. Pass upon these ballots and give us the result." And that we did.

Mr. DILL. And the committee did not say to the lawyers, "Why do you not go into these cases?"

Mr. ERNST. They did not, so far as I have any knowledge or information.

Mr. DILL. It was not discussed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ERNST. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. You say you passed upon all questions that were presented to you, and I understood you to say a moment ago that Mr. Mitchell did call your attention to a discrepancy between the ballots and the official count.

Mr. ERNST. And you also heard me, if you were listening, say that the committee considered what he had to say, and determined that they would not again go over 900,000 ballots when he could have raised that question at the start, when we could have considered it when we first took up the case; that inasmuch as he did not raise the question at that hour, we would not permit him to force our committee to count 900,000 ballots. Both parties had submitted the case upon the evidence then before them, and we did not think that anything which Mr. Mitchell said was at all sufficient to make us again open up the case and again spend nine months, with the consequent expenditure of money, in going over the matter.

Mr. WHEELER. But he did present the question to you before you made a report to the Senate, did he not?

Mr. ERNST. I stated that.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DALE in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ERNST. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. There was a shortage of 3,570 ballots in 1,068 precincts, in none of which the poll books tallied with the number of ballots. In fact, every precinct was short. Did not the committee think that was of sufficient importance to take up?

Mr. ERNST. The Senator asks me that when he has just heard me state that that matter was never presented to the committee by either of the eminent gentlemen who had this case in charge. That statement still stands.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. ERNST. Two or three.

Mr. BINGHAM. I apparently did not succeed in getting at the point which the Senator was trying to make with regard to the result of the propaganda.

Mr. ERNST. The Senator means I did not answer it the way he wanted me to. Try again.

Mr. BINGHAM. Am I to understand it this way, that the Republican organization in Iowa carried on very active propaganda against Mr. Brookhart so that the voters would vote for Mr. Steck, and as a result of that propaganda a great many voters marked their ballots in an illegal manner and cast illegal ballots?

Mr. ERNST. I did not say that. The Senator is making that up wholly. I did not say that therefore they marked their ballots in an illegal manner on account of the propaganda. What I did state, and state clearly, was that in the effort to vote the Republican ticket they put their mark under the circle, which would carry all the ticket. That then they went over and put a cross opposite Mr. Steck's name, and I said that I thought these errors in the original count were occasioned by the fact that the officials counting ballots very often looked at the top of the ballot, and, thinking it was a straight ticket, counted it as a straight ticket, when if they had gone more carefully about the counting of the ballots they would have seen that one or more names were scratched. That is the statement I made.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the Senator does think that the laws of Iowa with regard to legal ballots should not prevail in this case?

Mr. ERNST. What has that to do with the question the Senator asked a moment ago? The Senator said he wanted to straighten me out on some question. Suppose he tries again.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am trying to get it straight in my own mind. It was apparent from the Senator's statement that certain propaganda had been carried on to lead the voters to scratch ballots.

Mr. ERNST. That far the Senator is entirely right. Now, take the next step.

Mr. BINGHAM. That that frequently led to the scratching of ballots, which made it difficult to count them.

Mr. ERNST. Difficult to count? It would have been easy enough if care had been exercised. I gave that as my reason for believing the errors were made in the count.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it not true that probably a large part of that propaganda led to the casting of a number of ballots which the judges of election in Iowa threw out because they considered them illegal but which the committee counted, because they believed that the intent of the voter should prevail over the laws of Iowa with regard to voting?

Mr. ERNST. I do not follow the Senator at all, probably because I am dense. I can not follow that reasoning.

Mr. LENROOT. As I followed the Senator, he stated that when Mr. Mitchell first raised this question of discrepancies the committee declined to consider it because they did not propose to go into a recount of these 900,000 ballots.

Mr. ERNST. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Did not the committee at that time have in their tabulation the actual figures as to the discrepancy from each precinct?

Mr. ERNST. I think they had all the figures which we now have before us.

Mr. LENROOT. And a further recount would not have affected that question at all in any way?

Mr. ERNST. How could we determine what he wanted us to determine without going over the ballots? I do not follow the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Going over the ballots could not have determined it, because there was a discrepancy, presumably, from the tabulation, and therefore it could not have involved a question of re-count. But what I am anxious to know is whether the committee actually passed upon the question of this discrepancy, and as to what effect could be given to it.

Mr. ERNST. I thought the Senator was in the Chamber when I discussed that. I said that the committee did not.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, may I ask, why not?

Mr. ERNST. Because counsel never presented it to the committee for its consideration.

Mr. LENROOT. But Mr. Mitchell did at this time.

Mr. ERNST. Mr. Mitchell presented it when the evidence was all in, when we were ready to submit a report and determine the case, and we were of opinion that to obtain what was necessary, under his view of the case, an entire recount would have been necessary.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I really rose to get information about. How could another recount affect that question one way or the other, presuming the tabulation to be correct?

Mr. ERNST. I do not think it would have been possible to have determined what I understood Mr. Mitchell to ask without a recount, and that was the opinion of others, so far as I could learn. We thought he knew that the result was adverse, and this was the straw at which he was grasping.

Mr. LENROOT. Was not the real question which the Senate must determine, if the committee did not, as to whether or not, where there is a discrepancy, the official count should be taken, or the recount taken?

Mr. ERNST. I think that where the ballots have been cast, where every one of them has been honestly counted as marked, where that work has been faithfully performed, there is no other thing the Senate need know to properly determine this contest. Every ballot submitted to the committee was honestly counted. You may suppose a hundred different things that might have happened. There is no evidence that any of them did happen, but every single ballot which was brought from Iowa to Washington was honestly and fairly counted, and the count showed that Mr. Steck was elected.

Mr. LENROOT. May I say to the Senator—I would like to have him know what troubles my mind—a slight discrepancy of a few votes would be natural; but if there is a very large discrepancy, say, of a hundred votes, in a precinct, what must be said about it? There may be no evidence of fraud, yet there must have been some mistake of some importance, or there would not be so great a discrepancy.

Mr. ERNST. The Senator may have heard the explanation that was made this morning. I do not profess to be able to answer that satisfactorily, because I think no one knows. I think that the discrepancies in hundreds of cases were accounted for by the envelopes containing ballots which had been rejected. I think that accounts for the discrepancies in part, but I am not now pretending to account for all discrepancies. If I knew, I would be only too happy to tell the Members of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. ERNST. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that that explains it, then would it not be the duty of the committee to count those ballots which were in those other sealed packages to find out whether these 3,500 ballots were cast for one or the other of these candidates?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that under the law of Iowa the election managers are not required and neither are they authorized to return certain packages of spoiled ballots or ballots which they themselves rejected in the package of ballots which they send for the final count.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; and from one of those envelopes exhibited here I understand they are put in separate envelopes.

Mr. ERNST. Let me say to the Senator that we carefully examined every envelope, every ballot, everything that was brought to us to examine.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but—

Mr. ERNST. Now, wait until I get through and then I will listen to the Senator again. Everything that was brought to us to examine we did examine.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the committee examine those ballots?

Mr. ERNST. Each lawyer representing his own client gave us to understand that that was all there was for us to do. They said, in effect, that those ballots would determine the result. We accepted the representations of the attorneys for their clients. We did the only thing we could do—we counted every ballot that was brought to us.

Mr. GEORGE. They are put in a separate envelope. In a few instances the managers evidently included those separate envelopes in the general package of ballots. They ought not to have been so included at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia a question. Strictly speaking, a spoiled ballot is either spoiled by the judges or is spoiled by a voter and returned to the judges, and the voter gets another one in place of it. I am not contradicting that, but the Senator has undertaken to give what he said is perhaps an explanation of the discrepancy by saying that the spoiled ballots were in separate packages. I am asking him now if they did not open those packages and count those ballots; and if they did, then they would know whether there was any discrepancy or not.

Mr. GEORGE. That is, strictly speaking, a spoiled ballot.

Mr. NORRIS. It would not be necessary to count those in ascertaining whether there was a discrepancy between the ballots and the number of people who voted.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, then the explanation offered by the Senator from Kentucky, which he said may be an explanation, falls to the ground.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; and they do not take into account other classes of ballots, either spoiled ballots or rejected ballots or contested ballots and protested ballots. There were several different classes of ballots. Spoiled ballots were not included in the general sack that came back to the counting board.

Mr. NORRIS. As I take it, in counting those votes, if they got a ballot that, for instance, in their judgment had an identification mark on it, they would not put it in a separate package. If they got a ballot that was good only in part, that ballot would go in the regular parcel.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, certainly; but I am trying to make the point clear to the Senator. Under the law of Iowa certain ballots are handled by the managers on the day of election and are not returned in the general package, but are inclosed in separate envelopes or packages or containers and sent up to the county auditor.

Mr. NORRIS. But as I understand it, such ballots spoiled in that way would not be taken into consideration.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; but the rejected ballots might under that law be placed in a separate envelope.

Mr. NORRIS. But as I understand it, in this case there were hundreds of those.

Mr. GEORGE. It might very well be, if the Senator will permit me, when a voter went in to vote that he might have given his name, and the clerk might very well have put his name on the poll list, but his ballot might have been rejected. He might not have been a qualified voter in that district. He might not have been entitled to vote and the election managers might have put his ballot outside of the box and sent that ballot up in a separate envelope.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, they might have written fictitious names.

Mr. GEORGE. Or might have duplicated names.

Mr. NORRIS. But we are not assuming that they did anything contrary to law, unless it is affirmatively shown that they did. It would be the duty of the clerk to write down the name of the voter, not when he got the ballot and went into his booth, but when he came back and the ballot was delivered to a judge and dropped in the ballot box.

Mr. GEORGE. That would be his duty. But what I am trying to make clear to the Senator is that a rejected ballot under the law of Iowa is not put into a ballot box, but it is returned in a separate envelope and is placed with the spoiled ballots.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ERNST. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I would like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question, if I may.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Kentucky has no objection.

Mr. ERNST. I shall be glad to have the Senator answer the question if he can.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I would like to inquire by what standard the committee measured the validity of these contested ballots? Was it by the law of Iowa?

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator asking me the question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator means those contested ballots handed to us by counsel for Steck and Brookhart—

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I mean the disputed ballots, where there was a dispute as to their legality.

Mr. GEORGE. So far as I am concerned, I tested them by the manifest intent of the voter in the light of the law of Iowa. I did not throw out any ballot upon a purely technical ground. I did not assume and never shall assume that a voter will take the pains to vote, go to the polls, and carefully mark a ballot which unmistakably evidences his intent to vote for a particular candidate, and then will purposely do something which in technical law might invalidate his act. I do not invoke that kind of technical law, nor did I apply it in this case. The law of Iowa, as the law of every other American State, mentions the intent of the voter. Senators talk about the intention of voters and talk about a ballot marked according to law. The law of every American State proceeds upon the basic principle that the intention of the voter is to control, and one should never invalidate a ballot because of any shortcoming upon the part of a manager of election unless it amounts to such fraud that we are compelled to reject the whole election. We should never invalidate the voter's ballot which he has been at pains to cast if his intent is clear, because the purpose of every election law is to reflect the intention of the voter.

Mr. WILLIS, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ERNST. I believe I still have the floor. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I notice at page 29 of the report, that being the minority report, this statement is made:

It will be observed that in reaching this result there have been included the 1,344 votes that the majority refused to count, and that Senator GEORGE and myself held should be counted for Brookhart.

Does that statement correctly represent the Senator's view of that matter?

Mr. GEORGE. That is the conclusion I reached.

Mr. WILLIS. I should be very grateful to the Senator if he would explain to the Senate the contention of the majority of the committee and his own contention touching these 1,344 votes. I think that is very material.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be pleased to do so, but I hesitate to do it in the time of the Senator from Kentucky. I expect to make a short statement after he concludes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I would like to ask a question. I do not care who answers it.

Mr. ERNST. If the Senator from Missouri will wait for about one moment, he may ask the question of anyone he desires excepting myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ERNST. I wish to finish what I have to say, because I have almost concluded. In the first place, there seems to be some misapprehension as to what was brought before the committee by Mr. Mitchell, and the questions which have been asked time and again do not, in my judgment, correctly state what Mr. Mitchell said at that time. The point which I understood he then made had nothing to do with the matters which we have just been discussing here or the difference in the votes as shown by the ballots and the names as registered. The point that he made and insisted upon was that it was up to Mr. Steck, as he stated, to show that from the time the ballots were cast in Iowa up until the time they were counted here every precaution was taken, as the law of Iowa requires, to see that they were not tampered with; that Steck had to show affirmatively, being the contestant, that those ballots were not fraudulent and that no change had been made in them in any way. The question which the Senator from Montana stated a little while ago was not, as I recall, raised by him at all.

Mr. WHEELER. The question I asked the Senator was if Mr. Mitchell did not contend and if the Senator did not admit that the law of Iowa places the burden of proof upon the contestant to show not only that the ballots were not tampered with but that there was not any possibility of having them tampered with.

Mr. ERNST. Granting all that the Senator may say about the law of Iowa is correct, and I have no desire to dispute that fact—

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator—

Mr. ERNST. Pardon me. Let me make my statement. The view which I take of it is that it does not control our committee; that an issue was clearly made by two of the best lawyers in the State of Iowa, that the issue was fought out before our committee, that we solved every question which they gave us to consider, and we counted every ballot they brought to us to count. We announced the result. There is not the slightest evidence of fraud or of overreaching or improper conduct anywhere. Therefore I state, bearing in mind my oath as a Senator, I could not do other than vote to seat Mr. Steck, because he received a plurality of votes honestly cast and which were honestly intended to be cast for him. Without relying upon some technicality, without placing it upon some ground for which there is no good reason, and without abandoning the long and time-honored custom of the Senate to follow the intention of the voter, I can not do other than seat Mr. Steck.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ERNST. I will yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator please state to the Senate what the law of Iowa is with reference to that matter?

Mr. ERNST. I am willing to have the Senator state it, and I will probably agree with any statement the Senator will make about that law. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator does not contend that the committee followed the law of the State of Iowa at all?

Mr. ERNST. I think I have stated that to the Senator three times, and I will state it with great pleasure the fourth time. We did not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I had the honor of being a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I was not placed on that committee until some time after the organization of the Senate. I was not notified that I was to be a member of the committee until after the hearings had been had, the evidence was all in, the arguments of counsel made, and the committee practically ready to make its report.

I attended a committee meeting and heard a statement made by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which was very illuminating, but no minority views were presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. I felt disinclined to join in either the majority report or the views of the minority, because I felt that my name on the report would add nothing and might subtract nothing from the conclusiveness of either of those reports. I therefore asked to be excused from voting in the committee. I think it was the consensus of opinion of the members of the committee that I should be excused, and so I did not join in either report.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we may define the issues in this case somewhat clearly and get out of what seems to be an entanglement, clarify our views, and determine this case along rather broader lines, possibly, than may have been suggested to the Senate.

In the first place, I wish to say—and if I am not correct in this the members of the committee will correct me—that there is no plan, that there are no rules which have been adopted by the committee for contests such as this. There is nothing to indicate to a contestant what it is necessary for him to allege and to prove; there is nothing to indicate the form of the answer which the contestee may make.

There is now pending before the Committee on Privileges and Elections another election contest. The committee has gone over the petition or the complaint in that case and has decided that the allegations are not sufficient to justify a recount. It is too palpable and plain upon the face of the petition in that case that it is merely a "fishing expedition." There is no definiteness, no certainty in the allegations of the complaint; but the allegations in the complaint in that case are not dissimilar from the allegations in this case.

I think there is no member of the Committee on Privileges and Election who as a lawyer would say that the petition or the complaint in the pending case states a cause of action, for the reason that it is so lacking in certainty and so lacking in definiteness. The complaint in this case alleges that those who made the count were guilty of errors and irregularities, but those averments are general in their character, and the errors and irregularities to which the attention of the Senate is called, according to the words of the complaint itself, exist in 99 out of the 99 counties of the State of Iowa. It is my belief that if this petition were filed with the committee to-day the committee would have to say, basing its judgment upon its action in another case, that the averments of this complaint are not sufficient to state a cause of action, and that, without evidence outside of the record to support the allegations of the complaint, no recount would be ordered. That is, first, that the petition itself is not sufficient.

The second point to which I desire to direct the attention of the Senate is that this is not a contest between Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart; that they are not the real parties in interest. The paramount issue in this case will not be determined for Steck or for Brookhart but will be determined for the people of the State of Iowa. It is their representative who must appear in the United States Senate; it is their representative whose election is to be determined upon. Neither Mr. Steck nor Mr. Brookhart has any property interest in this case. We decide in all election cases that no costs will be assessed against the losing party. The costs in this case will be borne by the Government, and the attorneys on both sides will be paid by the Government. The expenses will be borne by the Government. It is not a contest between Steck and Brookhart but is an effort to determine the registered will of the people of the State of Iowa as legally expressed in that State.

If I am correct about the complaint in the case, and if I am correct as to where the paramount issue lies, then the question naturally arises as to what would have happened in this case if Mr. Steck had filed this complaint and Mr. Brookhart had appeared before the committee and had proceeded in this wise: Suppose Mr. Brookhart had said, "Gentlemen of the committee, a contest has been filed for the seat in the United States Senate from the State of Iowa. The interest of the public in that State is paramount. I shall take no part whatsoever in the proceedings; conduct the contest as you will. When you have determined it, advise me of your decision; when you have finished your deliberations, let me know, and I will decide at that time what I may do as I may be advised." Suppose, the interest of the public being paramount, that Mr. Brookhart had proceeded in that way, what would have been the result? The chairman of the committee stated what the result would have been. He has already told us that the result would be in doubt and that the committee could not advise us. Is not that the question in this case?

The sharp issue which the Senate has got to decide in this contest is whether the laws of the sovereign State of Iowa are to be recognized and observed or whether a committee appointed by the Senate can examine the ballots cast in the State and determine for themselves, regardless of the State law, whether one man has been elected or another. That is for us to decide. The rule in the House of Representatives runs one way; here it runs another. Is there a principle involved? If there is, we ought to know what it is and decide now once for all what that principle is and should continue to be.

For example, the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Georgia have decided under the laws of Iowa in force on the date when this election took place. Mr. Brookhart is entitled to 1,344 votes. Under the laws of Iowa there can be no doubt that he is entitled to those votes. What does the committee say? It says there are three methods of voting. An elector may cast a straight Republican or a straight Democratic vote, as the case may be, by putting a cross in the circle at the top of the ballot. The elector may also put a cross in front of the names of the candidates for whom he wishes to vote and if he does not put a cross in front of all the names, but puts a cross in the circle, it is still a straight Republican or a straight Democratic vote. The methods of casting those votes and of counting them are not mutually exclusive. Under the laws of Iowa those 1,344 votes, in my humble judgment, must be counted for Mr. Brookhart. That leaves only 70 out of approximately 1,000,000 votes cast. The Senator from Mississippi has analyzed those votes.

My purpose is not to indicate that Mr. Steck or Mr. Brookhart has been elected, but to try to define the issue and determine the big question upon which this contest must be determined. There has not been a more interesting question at this session nor a greater problem presented than is involved in this case. The question involves the right of the State of Iowa. I believe in State rights. I may not believe in that doctrine in the same sense that my friend from Nevada believes in State rights, because I believe sovereignty resides in all the people; but I believe in the right of local self-government.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will be glad to yield in a few moments. When a voter in Iowa votes he does not vote for himself alone; no voter does. As voters at an election we vote in a representative capacity. We vote for all those who have not attained the age of 21; we vote for all those who are absent; we vote for all those who are in insane asylums; for all those who are non compos; for every citizen of the United States we cast a vote. No man voteth to himself alone. He votes for himself naturally, but also for all other persons whom he presumes to represent. Sovereignty resides in all the people of the United States. "We, the people of the United States!" Yes; it resides there, but sovereignty is exercised by the great electorate and not by the people as a whole, those who are citizens of the United States. These are the issues to be determined. These are mighty issues. This is not a case between Steck and Brookhart; it is the attempt to register the sovereign will of a sovereign people.

Now I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, holding the view that the Senator holds—and I think he is correct when he says that the title to this seat is vested in the people of Iowa—when the question arises here as to whom they intended to confer this title upon it must, then, be self-evident that any agreement or stipulation that may have been made or agreed to between the contestant and the contestee can not affect the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, it must follow that if this right belongs to the people of Iowa, and if the public interest is paramount, then it is not competent for one man or any two men, contestant and contestee, by stipulation, waivers, and estoppels to thwart the will of the people.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is what I wanted to have the Senator make plain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Non constat, that a poor man running for office, a contestee, venal in his nature, might enter into an unholy agreement with the contestant.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there is no disagreement between the Senator from Missouri and myself as to who are the real parties at issue in this case, but I want to ask the Senator if all private rights and all public rights are not asserted, upon the one hand, and advocated, on the other hand, by individual citizens?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Therefore, is it not fundamental in morals and in law that, with respect to mere procedure, the citizen who asserts a public right or a private right may waive mere rules of procedure or practice?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It depends upon the attitude of those who hear.

Mr. GEORGE. How can the right of the citizen depend upon the attitude of anybody?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The rights of the citizens of the State of Iowa devolved upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections in this controversy.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator to answer my first question that both private rights and public rights—

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think he did not say "public rights." I understood the Senator to say "private rights"; but if he said "public rights," I must change my answer.

Mr. GEORGE. I will reframe my question. Do not public rights depend upon individual citizens in the last analysis?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Private rights?

Mr. GEORGE. Public rights. Who asserts public rights save the citizen?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amicus curiae, the friend of the court.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sorry the Senator states that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no!

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Committee on Privileges and Elections represents the Senate here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What would have happened, if it pleases the Senator from Georgia, if Mr. Brookhart had made no appearance whatsoever before this committee, by himself or by his counsel?

Mr. GEORGE. Then we would have tried the case at arms' length.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Exactly; and will the Senator dare say what the result of this contest would have been?

Mr. GEORGE. I did not count all of the ballots, if the Senator means from my personal knowledge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean, can anybody say what the result would have been if Mr. Brookhart had not appeared?

Mr. GEORGE. I think so, and I propose to discuss that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will pardon me, but—well, I will not refer to a previous colloquy of ours on this subject.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I propose to discuss that later, and I shall be pleased to say why.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I say just this in closing, and then I will yield:

I want to say that according to the time-honored usages of the Senate and of the committee there has never been a harder working body of men, and I yield to them fully all the credit that is most rightfully and properly due them for the work they have done in this hard contest. I want that distinctly understood. I am simply trying to determine the issue, to define it, if I may, and state what we have to decide in this case.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. In view of the question asked by the Senator from Georgia, I should like to ask both Senators if it is not the general rule that in judicial proceedings stipulations or waivers made between the contesting parties will not be accepted unless joined in by the representative of the public, the attorney general, in quo warranto proceedings?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that would follow.

Mr. GEORGE. In quo warranto proceedings?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; is it not the rule that where public rights are involved the contestants in election cases can not make stipulations or waivers?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; the contestants in contested-election cases do make stipulations and waivers. They make them in Iowa; they make them in every American State.

Mr. LENROOT. I have cases here where they were not accepted or received unless the stipulations or waivers were also agreed to by the representative of the public, the attorney general.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, the attorney general may be made a party to a quo warranto proceeding. He is a party or he may become a party. He is a party in fact or he is a party in interest, and every party in interest has a perfect right to pass upon every stipulation made in the case.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri one other question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Assuming the law of Iowa to be applied and assuming that the theory of the minority with regard to the discrepancy in the recount between the ballots and the poll list should be accepted, is it the Senator's view that the Senate has any information then upon which to render a final judgment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the last question I asked the Senator from Georgia would answer that, if you please. We can not get anywhere on any such theory. We can not answer the question. It is not answerable from any data before us.

Mr. LENROOT. It might be, on the minority's theory, if the contested ballots from these precincts where the vote and the poll list tallied could be passed upon by the committee and ascertained; but that has not been done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; that has not been done. Of course, the Senator understands that the committee did not feel that it was its duty to do that, because the contestants were represented by counsel and by counters.

Mr. LENROOT. In other words, they accepted the waivers and stipulations as binding?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct; they did.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it the opinion of the Senator that the conclusion stated in the minority report touching the 1,344 votes is correct? I know that the Senator did not join in the report, but I am anxious to have his opinion on those votes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator understands that I have no opinion as to the 76 votes. As to the conclusion arrived at by the Senator from Mississippi on those, I expect that he will state that, and I shall listen to it for information and advice; but as to the 1,344 votes I have not the slightest doubt that under the laws of Iowa they were cast and properly counted for Brookhart.

Mr. WILLIS. But, as I understand, Mr. President, in this report made by the majority they are not counted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are not given.

Mr. WILLIS. They are counted as "no votes."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; "no votes." They are taken off the Brookhart vote.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they had been conceded to Brookhart, the majority report would have left Brookhart minus 76 votes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, before I begin a discussion of the law and the facts of this case, I desire to make one or two preliminary remarks.

As has been indicated by other Senators, this is a very important matter—one of the most important that has come before this body at this session. I realize that each Senator recognizes the importance of the proposition involved here. I know, too, that only a few of the Senators have had an opportunity to go into this matter very carefully. I am referring, of course, to those who were not on the committee. For that reason I am going to say that I shall be very glad to have any question asked me by any Senator who cares to ask a question, and I feel that it is needless for me to say that I shall endeavor to give a courteous answer to each question propounded.

I am going to say, too, before I reach the law and the facts that on yesterday there was some reference to the conduct of one of the parties to this contest with regard to discussing the matter with various Senators. I am not going to defend Senator Brookhart. I am not here for that purpose. I have no personal interest in him nor in the fight that is being waged for the seat he now occupies as a Senator. I am not going to discuss whether or not he breached the proprieties in approaching Senators on this matter; but I am going to say that so far as I know there never has been a single intimation made that he has made an improper suggestion to any Senator, and I am going to say further that he had as much right to discuss the matter in private conversation with Senators as did many others who were not parties to the contest.

I have here numerous letters and telegrams making appeals to me to vote for Mr. Steck because he is a Democrat. I said to some of those people: "This is not a political question; it is a judicial question. The law and the facts are involved; and whenever you ask me to make it a political question you are offering the grossest kind of an insult."

On yesterday I clipped from a paper edited by one of our colleagues, the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE], the following. It seems that some constituent of his had written him saying:

You are being talked about because it is understood that you are going to vote for Brookhart. You know, ordinarily, your constituents expect one to stand by his party men.

And the Senator very properly replied:

I will sit on that case as a judge and shall be governed entirely by the law and the evidence as presented to the Senate; and when I am satisfied from that as to who won, then he shall receive my vote.

This is no political contest, but a judicial contest; and a man who would vote for either one or against either one because he is a Democrat or a Republican would be unworthy to sit on a magistrate's jury, much less to be a representative of the great State of South Carolina in the United States Senate.

Spoken like a man and a statesman!

Mr. President, whatever political principles I may have have been gained by a study of the political thought of some of the great men of our Nation, and more particularly the men of my own State. I have not only gained from that study ideas upon political principles but I have also gained some other ideas that impel me to follow the course that I shall follow in this case.

Mr. President, we are not sitting here to-day as a legislative assembly; but the Senate, for the time being, has resolved itself into a judicial tribunal. I hope you will pardon me if I read for a moment the words of a great Mississippian. He was discussing a contested-election case in the House. He said:

There is, perhaps, nowhere in the Constitution a power conferred upon the Government, or any of its departments, more important and delicate. And, sir, in the hands of a corrupt and factious majority it might be made a dangerous instrument of oppression, for it opens an avenue through which Federal power can effect an entrance right into the heart of a State, and going behind the acts of its authorities march up to the very fountains of political power. And hence I respond fully to the sentiment of the gentleman, that we should decide these questions impartially and without reference to party prejudices. Sir, he who would drag such a question into the arena of party debate trifles with the rights of the people. The Member who, in this matter, is prompted by any motive less pure than truth, who raises his voice or gives his vote with even a glancing thought of party profit, is untrue to the high responsibilities of his position, and guilty of crimes less majestic.

Those words occurred to me when I received a telegram from my State saying:

I am wondering why you are supporting Brookhart, against Steck, a Democrat.

I hope that my friend in Mississippi may read the language of L. Q. C. Lamar, one of the greatest men who ever lived in the State of Mississippi, and one of the great men of the Nation.

Mr. President, I am following my conscience in this matter. It may be that my conscience is too sensitive and too tender, but I have reached the conclusion that under the law and the facts Senator Brookhart is entitled to a seat in this body, and I am unwilling to trample under foot the laws of the State of Iowa, or the laws of any of the 48 States in the Union. I am unwilling to be a party to the setting of a precedent which will give the opportunity, as Mr. Lamar said, to march up to the very fountains of political power, and trample upon the rights of the State. As much as I would like to see the Democratic membership of this body increased, I can not, I will not, make a political question of a judicial one.

We have heard much in this discussion with reference to stipulations, with reference to agreements, with reference to waivers, and many charges have been made that there has been an effort on the part of some one to go back upon an agreement. I want to say that I defy any man—and there will be others to follow me—I defy any man in this Chamber to point out a stipulation that has not been lived up to.

Let me follow that a little further. Let us see, in the first place, what the stipulations were. Mark you, Mr. President, there is not in the printed hearings any stipulation with reference to a change of method with regard to bringing the ballots from the State of Iowa to the city of Washington in order that they might be counted here.

There is nothing in the record to show that any such agreement was ever entered into. I say in all fairness that there was an agreement entered into, but I deny that it goes to the extent to which Senators on the other side of this question allege it goes. It was merely a verbal agreement. I did not hear it, nor did you; but there was somebody who did hear it. I notice in the record that an affidavit is referred to in which Mr. Parsons, attorney for Mr. Steck, states that a letter, I believe, as I recall it now, which he wrote, contains that agreement. I find on page 15 of the majority report Exhibit A, and Mr. Parsons says this:

That the facts set forth in Exhibit A, attached hereto, and by reference made a part hereof, being a copy of letter written to the Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST, are true; and that the affiant has personal knowledge of such facts, and knows them to be true.

I have not seen that letter. I do not know what it contains, but I have been told that it is to the effect that there was a later agreement between him and Mr. Mitchell with reference to bringing the ballots here.

Instructions were given, by the attorneys, I presume, to Colonel Thayer, the Secretary of the Senate. On yesterday the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] referred to Colonel Thayer in very complimentary terms. If it would not require time, I could say just as splendid things about Colonel Thayer myself. I do not question his honesty, his integrity, or the correctness of any act performed by him in this matter. But what I am getting at is just this: That he was given information as to what the agreement was between counsel for these parties, and I feel sure that I was right in what I had to say in the minority report about the matter, although at that time I had not seen a copy of the letter; in fact, I procured it only yesterday afternoon.

I argued in the minority report, as I recall, that the stipulation that was made orally went only to this extent, that the parties waived the right of having a personal representative go to the different county seats and inspect the containers and everything connected with the ballots before they were sent here. What did Colonel Thayer say in writing to these county auditors? He stated:

The attorneys for both sides have waived the instructions requiring a witness from each side to be present when the ballots are placed in the mail sacks and sealed.

Ah, Mr. President, it was argued very forcefully here yesterday that Senator Brookhart, or some one representing him, had repudiated an agreement. What was that agreement? Simply that Brookhart waived his right to have a man go to the 99 county seats in his State and make a personal investigation of the matter, but that he was willing to leave it, and did leave it, to the various county auditors to comply with the request of this committee.

Let us see what the order of the committee was. I hold in my hand a copy of the subpoena issued to the various county auditors, and let me read what it says. Before I do that, however, I will refer to the stipulations. This is the stipulation, and I want Senators to listen carefully to it, because they will see that there was not a waiver of any right that either party might have had with reference to the lack of care in preserving the ballots or in complying with the laws of the State in any particular.

I want to say this, further, that although everything mentioned and referred to in this stipulation had been carried out to the very letter, still either party had the right to make legal objection to those ballots, to the condition in which they had been kept, to the manner of their preservation, and so forth. This stipulation provides:

That immediately prior to the transmission of the said books, papers, and documents the envelopes and containers thereof shall be examined by the county auditor in the presence of a representative of each of the contesting parties, who shall be designated for that duty by their respective counsel for the said parties, and the said examiners and county auditor shall sign their names on each and every envelope or container, which shall be sealed in such manner that they may not be tampered with or opened except by authority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate without evidence of such tampering or opening appearing thereon.

There is another sentence there which I shall discuss later. It is not applicable just at this moment.

What was that stipulation? That the auditor, and a representative of each of the parties, should jointly make an examination, and that each one of them should write his name or his initials upon each one of the envelopes or containers. But this oral agreement or stipulation, if you please, was entered into, to the effect that the whole matter was left in the hands of the auditors, and this subpoena followed the stipulation. Each auditor, under this, was required to write his own name or his initials upon each one of these containers. Yet, as I can show, there are many where no such thing was ever done. In fact, so far as I have seen, this subpoena was followed only in one county. I do not say, of course, that it was not followed in others, but I do have here envelopes and containers from several counties which show that this agreement was not complied with.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If I understand the Senator correctly, the only modification of the written stipulation that was made by the subsequent oral agreement, was that the parties waived the right to be personally present, leaving all the other conditions of the stipulation standing.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is very true.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Mississippi was not upon the subcommittee.

Mr. STEPHENS. I was not.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Mississippi came in after the record was practically made up.

Mr. STEPHENS. I did.

Mr. GEORGE. Will not the Senator from Mississippi read the language so that that portion of the subpoena providing for the joint duty and the joint act of the representatives of Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart and the county auditor may be made clear? Does not the next sentence, which the Senator has not yet read, refer to the separate duties of the auditor? How could the auditor, jointly with representatives of Steck and Brookhart and in their presence, sign his name along with theirs when they waived their right to be present?

Mr. STEPHENS. First, I want to say—

Mr. GEORGE. Will not the Senator read the language?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; in just a moment.

I am going to answer the question, but I think I have a right to answer it in my own way. The Senator will remember that I stated that there was another sentence immediately following what I read to which I should direct attention in a moment. I shall do that. I have no desire to avoid reference to anything that is in the record.

Mr. GEORGE. No; I did not intimate that; I merely wanted the Senator to read that statement.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will read it again. Does the Senator mean the part I omitted?

Mr. GEORGE. No; the part the Senator read.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right; I will read it again.

That immediately prior to the transmission of the said books, papers, and documents the envelopes and containers thereof shall be examined by the county auditor in the presence of a representative of each of the contesting parties, who shall be designated for that duty by their respective counsel for the said parties, and the said examiners and county auditor shall sign their names on each and every envelope or container.

Mr. GEORGE. My question is if that does not provide and stipulate for the joint act of the representatives of Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart and the county auditor?

Mr. STEPHENS. I said that in the very beginning.

Mr. GEORGE. And two of the parties having waived their presence, in other words, having made a novation of that part of the stipulation, it was quite impossible for the auditor to comply. Now, the next sentence or the next stipulation places upon him an individual duty. Will the Senator read that sentence?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will come to that in just a moment. I want to say, however, in regard to the matter I was discussing, that it was only a waiver of the right to have these representatives present. It was not a waiver of the right to have those ballots identified—not at all. There was no such waiver by anyone. There still rested upon the auditors the duty to send the ballots to Washington properly identified. The point I am trying to make is simply that so far as I have been able to ascertain, although I did not go through the whole matter, because I could not do that, I find that in county after county there is not a single thing pinned upon the envelopes or containers to identify them as being the papers turned over to the various county auditors by the judges or holders of the election.

Mr. GEORGE. Now I understand the Senator to assert that if the stipulation had been carried out exactly as it was made, it would not have waived and would not have extended to a waiver of proper identification and proper showing that the ballots had been preserved as required by law.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not think so.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator to make that assertion.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the Senator state the proposition again?

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator to insist now that under the stipulation there was no waiver nor intention to waive the proof that the ballots had been properly preserved and that they were the identical ballots cast at the election.

Mr. STEPHENS. I still contend that the language itself does not show that there was any intention on the part of either one of the parties to waive any legal right he might have.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me call the Senator's attention to Mr. Brookhart's own interpretation of the stipulation. I think that is a fair way of getting at the case.

Mr. STEPHENS. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. GEORGE. From page 329 of part 2 of the hearings, I understand Mr. Brookhart contends that the stipulation was not complied with, but here is the interpretation to which I am seeking to direct the Senator's attention:

We had made it easy so that the preliminary proof of identity and the care and keeping were unnecessary and signed this stipulation to make it easy for the committee.

I do not know how the Senator could misunderstand and misinterpret that stipulation. If he had been on the subcommittee as those of us who were he could not do so. If there is any reason for misinterpretation or misunderstanding of it, certainly Senator Brookhart's understanding of what he meant by entering into the stipulation is a fair and just and reasonable interpretation.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, it makes no difference what interpretation Senator Brookhart may have put upon this particular stipulation.

Mr. GEORGE. Then do I understand—

Mr. STEPHENS. Wait a moment and let me answer. As a matter of fact, that does not enter into the equation at this time or at all. Admitting for the sake of the argument that Mr. Brookhart's construction was right and that my construction is wrong, how does it help the contention of the Senator? How does it help the proposition the Senator is advancing? It is admitted here, or will have to be admitted, that various auditors did not comply with the provisions of that stipulation, and I contend that, no matter what stipulation might have been made, it has no right to be considered unless the terms of the stipulation are carried out.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not asking the Senator that question, and he knows I am not asking that question.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the Senator ask another question, then?

Mr. GEORGE. I asked the Senator what his interpretation of the stipulation was, and he answered me that it extended only to the bringing down of the ballots. That is the effect of it, at any rate, and he said that it did not extend to the preliminary proof or waiver of proof of proper identification of the ballots, proper preservation of the ballots, and proper keeping of the ballots. Then I called the Senator's attention to the interpretation placed upon the stipulation by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] himself. The man who made the stipulation certainly has a right to interpret it. I am not discussing whether the stipulation was complied with. That is altogether a different question. The Senator may take his view about that matter.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose that we take it for granted, and suppose I admit that my construction is wrong and that the one the Senator says Mr. Brookhart placed upon it is the correct interpretation. Is that a matter of any importance in this case if the stipulation itself was not complied with?

Mr. GEORGE. But I contend that it was complied with.

Mr. STEPHENS. That does not answer my question. If the stipulation was not complied with, then what does the Senator say?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, if the stipulation was made and it was subsequently set aside by the parties, it would have no efficacy.

Mr. STEPHENS. Not at all, if it were not complied with by the parties who should have carried it out.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not arguing that with the Senator. I am merely asking his interpretation of the subpoena or his contention about two facts only. One was that when the clause in the subpoena requires joint action by the auditor and representatives of Steck and Brookhart, and Steck and Brookhart have waived that right and failed to carry out their part of the stipulation, it of course could not be carried out by the auditor, inasmuch as the next provision of the subpoena specifically provides for the individual act and return of the auditor. Of course, I concede that if the stipulation is entered into and not carried out, that ends the matter, and it has no bearing on the question.

Mr. STEPHENS. What I have been attempting to argue is that here was a stipulation entered into which first required three parties to make an examination and all three of them to sign their names or initials upon the envelope and containers. Later on the contestant and the contestee said, "No; we agree that our representatives shall not go there, but that these matters shall be brought to Washington under the signature of either the name or the initials of the auditor." Is there any contention that there was any further agreement than was stated by Colonel Thayer in his letter of instructions, that the representatives of the parties should not be required to go to the various county seats?

Mr. GEORGE. The next sentence provides what the auditor was to certify. He was to certify if there was any opening or any mutilation of the bags.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will come to that in just a moment. I am taking one proposition at a time. I was careful to call attention in the very outset to the fact that there was another sentence that I should read just a little later, and it would have been read long since but for the interruption.

Mr. GEORGE. I wanted to make plain that the Senator was giving an interpretation of the stipulation and the subpoena which follows it which Senator Brookhart himself flatly contradicted.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the Senator contend that there ever was a stipulation to the effect that the auditors of the counties should not write their names or their initials upon the various containers?

Mr. GEORGE. There never was an agreement in the original stipulation that they should do that except in the presence of the representatives of Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then it is the Senator's contention that the auditor owed no duty whatever with reference to identifying the ballots because of the fact that the representatives of Steck and Brookhart were relieved from going there.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is a lawyer. What good would it do in the case of a will, where the law requires three witnesses to the signature, for one person to witness the signing of the will?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is an entirely different proposition, because that is controlled by statute.

Mr. GEORGE. And this situation is controlled by stipulation.

Mr. STEPHENS. Here was an agreement by the parties, as the Senator claims.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator wants me to tell him the facts about it, I will do so, because he was not on the subcommittee. I do not want to take his time to do it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am perfectly willing. I want to know the facts.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to take the time of the Senator to do it unless he is willing.

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. The first is a provision in the stipulation and in the subpoena which Mr. Brookhart himself interprets to mean, and could only mean, that it was a waiver of all this preliminary proof which the committee might have had to make if they did not waive it. It was only a question of bringing down here the auditors from the various counties in Iowa. That is all. We could have got them and we could have proved those facts. But they entered into these stipulations in order that we might not have to do it. Then Mr. Steck's counsel and Mr. Brookhart's counsel got together and decided that they did not care to go into each one of those counties and have the auditor examine those packages in their presence, so they said that since the auditor was sending down those votes any way, and since he was required to know whether any damaged or opened or mutilated or altered or changed ballots were involved, that they would waive their presence. Each one of the auditors in the several counties in Iowa had served upon him a subpoena from the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate containing that stipulation; each auditor in the State of Iowa, without an exception, bundled up the votes in his custody and control, sent them down to the Sergeant at Arms, with a statement of the number of the mail bag in which he placed each one, with a statement of the number showing on the disk of the rotary lock attached to the mail bag, and each of the bags came here under the exact number indicated by each of the auditors of the State of Iowa, with the disk number showing, proving beyond any question of doubt that there had been no tampering with those ballots after they had left the auditor and until they reached us.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; with the permission of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator from Georgia contend that by that stipulation the Senator from Iowa, Mr. Brookhart, waives any legal objection that he might make to the introduction of these ballots for the purpose of overcoming the official count?

Mr. GEORGE. I have read what the Senator from Iowa himself said it was intended for.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sure the Senator would understand it if he would stop and think about it merely for a moment. The mere agreement that all ballots might be counted is a waiver of every preliminary question as to the safe-keeping of those ballots.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not agree with the contention of the Senator from Georgia at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not see how the Senator can arrive at any other conclusion, but I am not arguing the point now. I am simply stating what the Senator from Iowa said was the purpose of this agreement.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator from Georgia says that "the mere agreement that all ballots might be counted is a waiver of every preliminary question as to the preservation of those ballots." But this is only an agreement that the ballots might be sent here. It did not go to the extent of agreeing that the ballots had been properly preserved or that they should be counted.

Mr. WHEELER. I tried to find the statement here a moment ago.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator will find it at the top of page 339.

Mr. WHEELER. There is another statement, as I recall, where the Senator from Iowa said that the stipulation that these ballots were to be sent down here was only for the purpose of the convenience of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. No; I think not. I do not recall it. I said in justice to the Senator from Iowa that he contended that the stipulation was not complied with and that the committee had departed from the agreement which he made. There is, however, no dispute upon the part of the Senator from Iowa himself concerning the purpose and intention and effect of the agreement, but he merely reserved the right to say that we did not comply with the agreement.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a statement which I made a while ago.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to get this matter perfectly clear in my mind. This stipulation, as has been repeatedly stated, contemplated that representatives respective of the parties should be there when the containers should be first taken from their repository; that they should be then examined, and a notation made if there was any evidence of tampering with them; that is to say, both sides would have an opportunity to see them and make objections to them if there were any objection. Apparently they did not do that and had no opportunity to know about them there and had no chance to see them until they arrived here in the city of Washington; but would not they then, in the city of Washington, have an opportunity to make any objection that they might have made had they been present at the time that the packages left the hands of the auditors?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I do not think so, if they were making the stipulation in order to avoid the preliminary proof.

Mr. WALSH. The statement to which attention is invited by the Senator from Georgia, at the bottom of page 338 and the top of page 339, reads:

They came down and started the count of these ballots. Nobody knows about their condition, because we had not examined them in the State, as this stipulation provided, and it was not my fault that that was not done. The committee had the right to do it the way it did.

Mr. COPELAND. Who is saying that?

Mr. WALSH. This is the statement of the Senator from Iowa.

There is no challenge of that whatever. We had made it easy—

He is referring to the stipulation. What he really meant to say was by the stipulation he intended to make it easy—so that the preliminary proof of identity and the care and keeping were unnecessary, and signed this stipulation to make it easy for the committee, but the committee did it the other way.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand he contended they did it the other way. He said that.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, they did it the other way.

Mr. GEORGE. No.

Mr. WALSH. Their representatives were not present as provided by the stipulation.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. So that they did it the other way; that is to say, they sent the ballots on without this preliminary examination, as they left the hands of the auditor, by the representatives of both parties.

It would seem to me there may be a very serious question as to whether the Senator from Iowa by his actions in Washington did not waive any objection he might have urged against the admission of these ballots or the counting of them.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. WALSH. That is another question.

Mr. GEORGE. That is another question.

Mr. WALSH. But it seems to me that this statement made by the Senator from Iowa constitutes no waiver of anything. It seems to me he is insisting here that he still had a perfect right after the ballots got here to object that they had not been kept as required.

Mr. GEORGE. No; the Senator from Iowa is insisting here that he has a right now to raise the objection because the committee has departed from the original agreement which he and Mr. Steck entered into. That is the whole proposition. The Senator from Iowa is contending that there had not been due observance of this stipulation. That, of course, is an open question.

Mr. WALSH. I think it is quite a serious question, when the Senator from Iowa allowed the count to go on here in Washington without objecting that the ballots had not been properly kept, as to whether he did not waive any right later to do so.

Mr. GEORGE. As to that, I may say to the Senator that I have not a doubt that would be true should the Senator from Iowa be held to a strict technical requirement; but I will say that the Senator waived it by his own stipulation.

Mr. WALSH. That is the point. I can not understand that as the Senator seems to.

Mr. GEORGE. Was the Senator in the Chamber when I asked the first question?

Mr. WALSH. I think I was.

Mr. GEORGE. If so, I think the Senator can understand it. The Senator from Mississippi was making the contention—which it was open for him to make, I say in all candor—that under the stipulation and under the subpoena issued by the Sergeant at Arms which followed the stipulation, had there been a strict compliance, there was no waiver of anything so far as the identity of the ballots, the safe-keeping of the ballots, and the proper preservation of the ballots are concerned. I merely directed his attention to Senator Brookhart's own interpretation of what the original stipulation and subpoena meant. I coupled it with the statement that Senator Brookhart, of course, contended that he was not bound by it at all, because there had been a departure from the method provided by the stipulation.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, all this is really aside from the matter involved here for the very reason, as I suggested a few moments ago, that the stipulation was changed and that the stipulation as changed was not complied with.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator and I will have to argue that, of course, in my own time; but, as I understand him, he says the stipulation was changed?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will notice, first, it was provided that the ballots be sent down by express, and then there was an agreement that they might be sent by registered parcel-post mail. I have a letter in my own possession in which assent is given to that change. Then, there was to be the joint examination by the representatives of the parties and by the auditor, and that was changed by the subsequent agreement of Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart. But there was no change of the other provision that the auditor should send down the ballots and should note on each package whether or not there was any opening of the package or any mutilation of the package or any interference with it in any way so as to destroy its integrity.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me ask the Senator, before he takes his seat, if there was ever any agreement entered into by Senator Brookhart or anyone representing him that the auditor, for the purpose of identifying the ballots, should not write his name or initials upon the envelopes or containers?

Mr. GEORGE. The stipulation speaks for itself. The auditor was to write his name on the packages in the event there had been any opening of the package or any mutilation of the package.

Mr. STEPHENS. But does not the Senator know that there are two sentences here; the first requiring that the three shall write their names?

Mr. GEORGE. Providing for joint action; yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. That they shall write their names upon all of the packages?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; that is joint action.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, my contention, however, is, as the Senator knows, that the agreement was that the two of them should not go, but the matter should be handled by the third man, the auditor. Was there ever a stipulation entered into by Senator Brookhart that the auditor himself should not place his name on the packages?

Mr. GEORGE. No; there was a requirement that he should place his name on the package wherever it had been opened or bore evidence of tampering.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator confuses two propositions.

Mr. GEORGE. No. One provided for joint action and the other for individual action, and the one providing for individual action was complied with.

Mr. STEPHENS. The other provided for joint or several action?

Mr. GEORGE. No; joint action.

Mr. STEPHENS. I mean the last one.

Mr. GEORGE. The last one refers to individual action. It is plain, I think, if the Senator will pardon me, as language can make it.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me read it:

Should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any original package prior to the said examination by said county auditor and examiners, notation of the character thereof shall be made upon the envelope or container by the said county auditor and examiners, or either of them.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator reading from the stipulation for the subpoena?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am reading from the stipulation on page 57.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know whether the Senator is reading from the stipulation for subpoena.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am reading from page 57; the Senator has the record before him.

Mr. GEORGE. One of them says "by each of them or either of them," while the other says simply the "county auditors."

Mr. STEPHENS. It says by "all of them or either of them."

Mr. GEORGE. Either of them implies individual action.

Mr. STEPHENS. But I said it might be joint or several.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true, but the one to which I refer, the previous provision, did not provide for joint or several action.

Mr. STEPHENS. I understand that. Of course, it provided for joint action; the signature of the three parties; but my contention, as I have said two or three times, is that the agreement went to the extent that two of them should not be required to go and sign it. I ask the Senator from Georgia again whether there was ever an agreement, either written or oral, to the effect that the county auditor should not write his name or initials on each one of these packages and bags of ballots?

Mr. GEORGE. The first provision there was entirely done away with by agreement.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is the Senator's answer?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.—That was the information that we received, and it was verified, and Mr. Steck's counsel and Mr. Brookhart's counsel knew of the existence of it.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then nobody was to identify the bags at all?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bags came from the county officers charged by law with the keeping of these ballots and the safe preservation of them, and every presumption is that they were properly kept; and anybody who wants to dispute them or raise the contrary question has the burden of offering evidence.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into a discussion of that phase of the matter just now, but later I shall read some authorities that will, as I understand, contradict the position taken by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think the Senator can find any authorities. He may find extreme cases and cases under extreme statutes, but the general proposition—

Mr. STEPHENS. I think I can cite the Senator to Cooley on Constitutional Limitations and decisions from many courts.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator can not cite any law that will dispute the general proposition that where an officer is by law charged with the receipt of ballots and the safe preservation of them, and the ballots are received from that officer, and there is nothing to indicate any fraud or any lack of safe-keeping, there is but one presumption that can arise, and it arises in fact.

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall discuss that a little later, Mr. President; but right now I desire to call attention to the sentence I omitted to read, and which I stated at the time would be read later, and to which the Senator from Georgia has directed attention:

Should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any original package prior to the said examination by said county auditor and examiners, notation of the character thereof shall be made upon the envelope or container by the said county auditor and examiners, or either of them.

I am reading now from page 57 of the printed hearings.

Now, I want to direct attention to this; and I am reading again from the instructions sent to the various county auditors by Colonel Thayer, the chief supervisor. Here is what he tells the auditors:

The auditor for each county will seal all envelopes containing the ballots and place them in the mail sacks, lock same, then deliver them to the postmaster; thereupon the responsibility of the auditor ceases.

This stipulation says—and I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he has agreed with me that this is both a joint and a several requirement or responsibility—

Should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any original package prior to the said examination by said county auditor and examiners, notation of the character thereof shall be made upon the envelope or container by the said county auditor and examiners, or either of them.

But that is not what the auditors are told here. They are told not to note anything, but to "seal all envelopes containing the ballots and place them in the mail sacks, lock same, then deliver them to the postmaster," and thereupon their responsibility in this regard ceases.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know what the Senator is reading from now.

Mr. STEPHENS. I told the Senate some time ago that I was reading from a letter sent by Col. Edwin Thayer, chief supervisor; and I say, for the purpose of identification, that Colonel Thayer himself on yesterday gave me this document.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is not reading something that is in the record? That is all I want to know. It is not in the record?

Mr. STEPHENS. It is not in the printed record; no. But every document connected with this matter and every letter written by any officer of the committee is in fact a part of the record of the case.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not understand that. I am just making inquiry. It is perfectly all right to read the letter, but it is a letter not in the record; and I direct the Senator's attention to this fact: The subpoena served on the county auditors, who under the law of Iowa are required to keep these ballots and keep them safely, was not served by Colonel Thayer nor issued by Colonel Thayer. That is the subpoena from the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, sent to these various auditors; and they, in response to that subpoena, sent down here the sacks of the ballots from their respective county seats.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, this letter is dated Des Moines, Iowa, April 25, 1925, and is addressed to the county auditor. It appears over the signature of Edwin P. Thayer, chief supervisor, acting for the committee. I presume no one will question that Colonel Thayer wrote this letter just as I have read it.

I presume that he wrote this letter after the change in the stipulation, after the oral stipulation or agreement was reached, because it tells in effect that the parties to the contest had made a different agreement with reference to the handling of these ballots. It says:

The parties will not come out to your office to go over this matter with you. It is left for you to handle.

And it tells the auditors how they shall handle those ballots, and how they shall be sent here; and they were not told in this letter that they must make notations. They were not told that they should do anything save seal the envelopes, put them in a mail sack, and send them here.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator must recognize that his argument now is hardly fair to the committee. The Senator does not want Senators to infer that a county officer out in Iowa, a sworn officer of the law, would disregard a solemn subpoena issued by the Senate in response to a letter which Colonel Thayer may have written, but concerning the proof of the mailing of which there is not a bit of evidence, or concerning the actual delivery of which to a single one of these auditors there is no evidence. It is not a part of the record; but, assuming that Colonel Thayer wrote it and assuming that each auditor received it, the Senator would not have us infer, would he, that the county auditors disregarded the solemn subpoena of the Senate, especially when the county auditors duly responded to that subpoena, which the Senator may verify by an examination of the records now in the office of the Sergeant at Arms?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I am defending the county auditors.

Mr. GEORGE. So am I.

Mr. STEPHENS. It is entirely reasonable to suppose that the auditors followed the written instructions of the chief supervisor, who was the agent of the committee. I am going to show that they did not write or make notations upon various packages that had not been preserved as required by law, and I have called attention to this document in order that it may appear why they failed to carry out the agreement that was entered into.

I heard the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] on yesterday say that on only two batches of ballots were there notations that the bags of ballots came to the auditor in an unsealed condition, and he argued that therefore it must follow that no other bags of ballots were unsealed; that no one except the parties in charge of these two particular bags of ballots had failed to comply with the law; in other words, that the law had been complied with with reference to the preservation of the ballots in every case except these two.

This matter does not properly come in the line of argument that I wanted to make just at this time; but since the question has arisen I am going to go to the record, and I am going to show that the several auditors in the State of Iowa did not comply with the stipulation with reference to noting upon the bags any evidence that these ballots had not been preserved in the manner required by law.

The stipulation says:

Should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any original package—

Now let us see what the law regards as an original package. Let us see what is required.

Under the statute the law has this to say with reference to this particular matter: That the judges of the election shall, after counting the ballots, put them upon a wire, knot the end of the wire, and seal them, and that they shall place certain ballots in envelopes—disputed ballots, rejected ballots, spoiled ballots, and so forth—and seal those things. Also, the auditors were required to put all these things in a bag and seal them. I want to show that that requirement was not complied with, and for the purpose of showing that I am going to refer to pages 224 and 225 of the hearings.

We heard a great deal of discussion about the matter of unsealed bags. There were many other things here besides unsealed bags. Let me say, before I begin to read from page 224, that there is not a line of evidence in this entire record to show how any of these ballots were preserved in the State of Iowa—whether they were strung on wires, whether they were sealed, or how they were kept—not a line of evidence on that subject. Now, did the auditors place them in bags and seal them? Were they sealed as required under the statute by the judges of the election when they went into the hands of the auditors?

As I say, they speak all the while with reference to 67 unsealed bags. Mr. President, I want to show the Senate one of these bags. This is the kind of bag they used in the State of Iowa to preserve the ballots. While I have it in mind, I want to say that there is no notation upon this bag, the bag that is supposed to have contained the ballots that were cast in this particular precinct—Lincoln Township of Cerro Gordo County. There is absolutely nothing here to indicate that it has been certified as such by the county auditor.

When gentlemen talk about unsealed bags they simply mean that bags like this had once been sealed, as it is shown this one was by evidences still upon it; and that they had come unsealed, or had been unsealed in some way. The string that was on this bag is gone. There is a torn place here. Most of the sealing wax is gone. I know nothing, of course, as to how it happened. But what I am trying to say is this, that on these two pages I find such notations as this:

Paper-covered bag, unsealed.

Then I read again:

Part sealed, part tied together; names on poll list, 1,132.

This is not a precinct where the auditor wrote and called attention to the fact that that bag was unsealed when it came to him. Yet, as a matter of fact, when it came here it was found "part sealed, part tied together," showing that the ballots themselves had been separated, part of them sealed, part tied together.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. With reference to those facts, where the seal had apparently been broken and they had been opened, did the official count tally with the number of ballots cast?

Mr. STEPHENS. I have not run through all of them. I can not answer the Senator right now. I see right here that Senator Brookhart gained 2, and Mr. Steck 17, making a difference of 15 in the vote in the particular precinct to which I have just directed attention.

I find here reference to another tied bag, not a sealed bag. It is stated it was unsealed, and a tied bag. Here is reference to another one. It does not say anything about sealing or unsealing. It says, "Roll bound with cord." Mark you, what I am calling attention to are notations made, not by the auditors in the counties, but made by the workers here, the ones who went over the bags, who examined the condition of things, and placed upon what is known as the work sheet notations of the conditions in which they found things.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment at that point?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is making the point that it is incumbent upon the contestant to show that the ballots were all preserved in accordance with the law?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is my idea exactly.

Mr. ASHURST. In order to overcome the prima facie case made out by the State certificate?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is true.

Mr. ASHURST. And the Senator makes the point that the ballots upon which the contestant relied to overcome the prima facie case were not kept in accordance with the law and were not sent here in accordance with the law.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is very true.

Mr. ASHURST. And of course he who seeks to overthrow a prima facie case must not only show that these are the identical ballots but that there was no opportunity to tamper with them; and that has not been shown. Is that true?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is true.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me say just one further word, and then I will yield to the Senator.

In addition to what the Senator from Arizona has just said, I am calling attention to these things for two reasons; in the first place, to show that the auditors did not comply with the subpoena. I have endeavored to excuse them by reading to the Senate the instructions later sent them by the chief supervisor.

I am calling attention to these things for a second reason. I assert as a proposition of law that if it should be admitted that these ballots had been properly identified, so far as showing they had come to the committee from the proper custodian—the legal custodian, the county auditor—and if we should admit that then the burden of proof shifted upon Brookhart to show that they had not been properly preserved, that burden, although it may have shifted to Brookhart, had been taken by him and sustained by the very fact that the counters found that these ballots, owing to the condition in which they were when they reached here, had not been preserved in the manner required by law, and that on the face of things it was apparent either that somebody had willfully tampered with them or that because of carelessness or negligence some of the ballots had been mislaid. Brookhart is not required to show any fraud. If there was carelessness, if there was negligence, which resulted in the loss of ballots, it was just as hurtful and just as objectionable as if fraud itself were shown.

SENATOR GEORGE AND I AGREE

Mr. President, I want to say just one word more and then I shall yield the floor for the day. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself have agreed on a very important question involved in this matter. I do not intend to discuss that this afternoon, but it is with reference to the construction that should be given to the law of the State of Iowa. Under our view of the law a batch of 1,344 votes should be counted for Senator Brookhart, and if the Senator and I are correct in that, that number should be taken from the 1,420 votes which the majority of the committee claims is Mr. Steck's plurality in this case, leaving Mr. Steck, therefore, a plurality of 76 votes.

I agree with the Senator with reference to the 1,344 votes. I want to discuss that question to-morrow. I am going to say now, in that connection, that I expect to show by the record that the 76 plurality which the Senator from Georgia claims was received by Mr. Steck is overcome by votes cast in the 4 precincts and in the 67 precincts. I expect to show, if I may state this matter in advance of my argument upon the subject, that Mr. Mitchell, representing Senator Brookhart, made due and timely objection to the recount; that he made due and timely objection to the admission of the ballots, and to the way they were admitted and counted in four or five precincts, which will make a difference of 149 in Brookhart's favor, overcoming the 76 which the Senator claims for Mr. Steck.

I expect to show by the record that Mr. Mitchell, representing Brookhart, made due and timely objection to the admission of the ballots as they were admitted and counted in the 67 precincts, which, if properly considered and counted, will make a difference of 309 in Senator Brookhart's favor.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator expects to continue his remarks to-morrow?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; I was just stating some of the things I expected to discuss to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIS. I wanted to make this request of the Senator, that in the course of his observations to-morrow he give attention to a matter which I am sure several Senators would be glad to hear him discuss, namely, the extent to which the committee and the Senate are bound, if at all, by the stipulations which have been discussed so extensively in the last two days' debate. To what extent are those stipulations entered into by the representatives of Senator Brookhart and Mr. Steck binding upon the Senate in its effort to decide who has been elected a Senator by the people of the State of Iowa? I have a rather definite view about it, but I hope the Senator will discuss it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall be very glad to discuss that to-morrow. I am going to say right now, however, that they have no binding effect whatever.

Mr. WILLIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall be able to show unquestionably, I think, that that position is correct.

NOT A PRIVATE LAWSUIT

I am going to take just a moment further to say that the Senate under the Constitution is the sole judge of the returns, the qualifications, and the election of its own Members. I state further, as was said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS] this afternoon, that there are other parties in interest besides Steck and Brookhart. The whole people of the State of Iowa are parties in interest. I say that no single contestant can come in here and make stipulations and agreements contrary to the law, contrary to the will of the people. In other words, the people of the State had a right to vote. They did vote, and what the Senate wants to know is which one of these two men was the choice of those people for United States Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is one thing that is intensely interesting to me in the minority report. That is what is contained on page 32. On page 32 of the minority report it is asserted that one precinct was recounted; I will not say the ballots were recounted, but a shortage being found in the ballots, the official count was taken at the instance of Mr. Steck; that there were three other precincts with a shortage of ballots where the official count was not taken by the committee; and it is asserted that if all four of those precincts had been recounted in the same way and the official totals taken in these four challenged precincts, Brookhart would have a majority. Is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. Let me say that is correct; and there are 68 other precincts which, if we should come back to the official vote where there is a variance and take the official vote, Mr. Steck would have a majority.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator from Georgia refers now to only 68 precincts. Let me say if we take the official count at the 1,068 precincts where there are discrepancies between the poll lists and the ballots found in the boxes, Brookhart would have a majority.

Mr. JOHNSON. Would that be true if we took the official count of all the precincts where there was a shortage?

Mr. GEORGE. Let me answer the Senator's question.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I am merely undertaking to say that we can not pick out a few precincts—

Mr. JOHNSON. The reason why I picked out a few precincts, if the Senator will pardon me, is that there were four mentioned on page 32 of the minority report that seemed to have been in a category by themselves.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON. I asked the Senator from Mississippi concerning those four precincts.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Mississippi probably thought they were in a category by themselves. I am glad the Senator from California has brought up the question. They are exactly in the same position with every other one of the 1,068 precincts in which there is a variance, either an overage or shortage.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia if we take the 1,068 precincts where there is a variance—that is, where the number of ballots does not tally with the poll list—and if we take the official count in those 1,068 precincts, who wins?

Mr. GEORGE. That depends on what we do with the ballots.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am asking if we take the official count in the 1,068 precincts.

Mr. GEORGE. That depends on what we do with the machine votes. That depends on what we do with the machine votes in the other precincts.

Mr. JOHNSON. The machine votes, I assume, are in a different category, because the machine votes are merely mechanical and the processes are arithmetical.

Mr. GEORGE. They do not tally with the poll lists.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would like to say a word in this connection.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me say another word in the same connection. They not only do not tally with the poll lists but when Mr. Brookhart's own representative in Iowa was reading the machines he deemed it of no importance to compare the total number of votes registered by the machines with the poll lists.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am sorry to say that I can not attach the importance to the stipulations that has been attached here.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not a stipulation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Whatever it may be, and I do not care whether Mr. Brookhart's attorney said one thing or whether he said another thing. I want to arrive at a conclusion as to who had the most votes. Now, I propound to the Senator from Mississippi the query, if in all of the precincts where votes were missing the official returns were taken and tallied, who would win?

Mr. STEPHENS. Brookhart by 1,131.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to be absolutely accurate. Brookhart wins by 1,131 provided the Senator from Georgia and myself are correct that the 1,344 votes shall be counted. If the majority of the committee are correct, Brookhart still wins by 600 or 700, because it must be recalled that those 1,344 votes that were objected to because of the manner in which they were marked come from 1,800 or 1,900 precincts, but there are only 1,068 precincts in which there is a discrepancy. We can not tell exactly how many, but taking the law of averages, which is fair and which is legal in many instances, that still leaves Brookhart—admitting that the majority is correct in contending that Brookhart shall not be given those 1,344 votes—with a majority of between 600 and 700 according to my recollection.

Now, I want to say just a word about machine votes.

Mr. GEORGE. Before the Senator starts on that subject let me ask the Senator how he determines, because I say frankly that I have been unable to determine that the four thousand and odd votes that were cast at these precincts in which there is a variance, should be counted and what those votes are.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will tell the Senator the basis of the calculation.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator admits it is speculation, does he not?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will tell the Senator why it is speculation.

Mr. GEORGE. It is just speculation.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me tell the Senator how far it is speculation and how far it is not.

Mr. GEORGE. I thought the Senator could answer that question. How does he know where those 4,500 votes should go?

Mr. STEPHENS. I said a moment ago that I do not know. I take the law of averages. Let me explain what I mean. There were 789 paper-ballot precincts, as we might term them. That does not include the machine precincts. There were 789 precincts where paper ballots were cast where there was no discrepancy between the poll list and the number of ballots found in the bag. There were 1,068 paper-ballot precincts where there were discrepancies up or down. Those 1,344 come from one thousand eight hundred and odd precincts. I do not know how many came from one precinct or how many came from another precinct. The committee gave me no light on that subject. They seemed to care nothing about discrepancies and did not consider discrepancies.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, the Senator is making a statement of facts. The committee did note the discrepancies.

Mr. STEPHENS. In the 1,068 precincts?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; and let me state the fact.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is what I am speaking about—the 1,068 precincts. Did the committee, before it declared itself in this case, have the tabulators make a table showing what precincts there were which had discrepancies, either up or down, with reference to ballots? Was that done?

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me to answer, I will tell him what was done.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right; let us have it.

Mr. GEORGE. The first precinct was counted by the supervisors, one of whom represented Mr. Steck and one of whom represented Mr. Brookhart, and he was, in fact, the political campaign manager of Brookhart out in Iowa in his election of 1924, and the third being Colonel Thayer, Secretary of the Senate. When the first precinct was counted, on July 20, 1925—and I wish the Senator would note this—the tabulators then discovered that there was a discrepancy between the poll list and the actual ballots, and that was brought to the attention of Mr. Brookhart's personal representative.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me ask the Senator another question. We had a lot of open discussion, and I presume it is proper.

Mr. GEORGE. It is inevitable, because we could not keep a stenographer around with each tabulator.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am going to call names now. Is it not a fact that at one of the last meetings we had, after I had raised the question or suggested the proposition that there were discrepancies in those ballots and in the poll list, that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is at this moment sitting behind you, asked that a tabulation be made showing the shortage and overage of ballots in the 1,056 precincts, as the Senator then thought it was? Did he not ask that that be done, and was it not stated that it had not been done and was not necessary to be done?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know what was stated. The Senator from Missouri made some inquiry in substance as the Senator has recounted.

Mr. STEPHENS. I hope if I misunderstood the Senator from Missouri that he will rise in his place and say so.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator from Missouri asked substantially that.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to say further that it was declared then and there that such a table had not been prepared, that it was not necessary to be prepared, and it never was prepared until the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] went to the tabulators, and at his request such a table and statement was prepared. Up to that time nobody knew, except perhaps in a general way as to a precinct here and there, in what precincts these shortages and overages occurred. Even the tabulator thought it was only 1,050, but when he began to count he found there were 1,068 such precincts. That is how the information happened to come to anyone. The committee itself did not have it.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the tabulation shown in the hearings all of the facts are set out.

Mr. STEPHENS. By precincts?

Mr. GEORGE. By counties.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am talking about the 1,068 precincts.

Mr. GEORGE. By counties. It shows the variance by counties.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly it does.

Mr. GEORGE. They had not been segregated; that is all.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to say that this table, which was prepared by the tabulators and made a part of the hearings in this case, shows on its face that there were thousands of missing ballots, and I term them missing ballots because there were 3,570, I believe it was, fewer ballots than there were names on the poll lists. It may be stated that this tabulation was not filed with the committee until weeks after objection had been made by counsel for Brookhart on the ground of discrepancies. I wish to say whenever that fact appeared upon the table prepared by the representatives of the committee that of itself was enough to put the committee upon notice either that they had failed to count all the ballots which had been brought here or that all the ballots had not been brought here.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator let me say that when the first work sheet was made up in which the discrepancy occurred that particular fact was called to the attention of the committee?

Will the Senator also permit me to say again that the total disparity between the votes which we actually counted and the poll list—not the official count, but the poll list—amounted on the average to about three to a precinct in which there was any disparity at all? It was simply one of those ordinary errors that we thought might occur in the course of any election.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, the Senator says it amounted to three to a precinct.

Mr. GEORGE. I said on the average.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is no way in the world for the Senator to know about that.

Mr. GEORGE. There were 1,168 precincts.

Mr. STEPHENS. There were 1,068 precincts.

Mr. GEORGE. Well, 1,068; multiply that by three, and how many are there? It is a simple matter of arithmetic.

Mr. STEPHENS. No, it is not; and I will show the Senator that it is not, if he will give me a chance.

Mr. GEORGE. Before the Senator shows me, let me say that I am afraid he is going to show me why we could not make a recount of these ballots after that discrepancy was called to our attention.

Mr. STEPHENS. The proposition I have in mind is this: There were 1,068 precincts where there were discrepancies.

Mr. GEORGE. More or less.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, the Senator is right; more or less. There has never been a table prepared showing in how many precincts there were more ballots than there were names on the poll list, nor has there been any table prepared showing how many precincts there were where the names on the poll list exceeded the number of ballots. Therefore the Senator does not know what to take as a divisor for these 3,570 missing ballots.

Mr. GEORGE. I know, Mr. President, they must have occurred where there was a variance.

Mr. STEPHENS. Of course, but there are a thousand precincts where there was a variance. Now, how many votes would that involve?

Mr. GEORGE. There were only two or three to a precinct.

Mr. STEPHENS. Has it been tabulated?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it is tabulated in the back of the record.

Mr. STEPHENS. For all the counties?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; for all the counties.

Mr. STEPHENS. We can not take the counties and find out, because it might happen in one county and not in another.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may ask for an agreement which will enable the Senator to conclude his remarks in the morning?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir; I will yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I hope to discuss this question to-morrow, and I shall then endeavor to answer the question which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] propounded to me just as the Senator from Kansas interrupted me. I shall not forget it.

TRUNK-LINE SEWER THROUGH FORT MYER, VA.

Mr. CAMERON. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 3221) to authorize the Secretary of War to enter into an agreement with the Clarendon Community Sewerage Co., granting it a right of way for a trunk-line sewer through the Fort Myer Military Reservation and across the military highways in Arlington County, Va., and to connect with the sewer line serving such reservation, and I submit a report (No. 559) thereon.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the bill just reported by the Senator from Arizona from the Committee on Military Affairs proposes to permit the construction of a trunk-line sewer across a little piece of land that belongs to the Government in Arlington County. The Secretary of War recommends the passage of the bill. It is very important that this work should commence for the summer on account of sewerage conditions. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, which has, of course, already been passed by the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War, if in his opinion it is not inconsistent with the interests of the Government, to enter into an agreement with the Clarendon Community Sewerage Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Virginia, granting it a right of way for a trunk-line sewer through the Fort Myer Military Reservation and across the military highways in Arlington County, Va., subject to such terms and conditions and providing for such compensation to the United States as may be agreed to by the Secretary of War and the Clarendon Community Sewerage Co., and to connect with the sewer line serving such reservation, such agreement to be limited to a period of five years, renewable from time to time thereafter for five-year periods, within the discretion of the Secretary of War, upon terms and conditions acceptable to him, and revocable at any time within the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess, the recess being until noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate, pursuant to the previous order, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 7, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, April 6, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, do Thou dwell in our thoughts and hearts, bringing assurance and peace. Show us what it means to master the world and give us the strength which can serve it effectively. Renew our spirits, and may we seek by wise, persistent effort constructive good. Help us always to give Thee our emphatic faith; our unquestioning loyalty; our impassioned love; our entire and hearty obedience, and our country shall be richer in character and our fellow men happier and better. Thus we shall pass into a sweet reasonableness, into that quietness and hopefulness which are the strength of life. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LECTURE BY DOCTOR MYERS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for just a quarter of a minute to announce a lecture at the War College to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock by Dr. William Starr

Myers, professor of politics at Princeton University, on Government problems. I thought perhaps some of our colleagues might want to hear him.

INDIAN COMMISSIONER BURKE TO "ANSWER QUESTIONS"

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon Indian affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend remarks, permit me to say that through a newspaper published in my district in Wisconsin I find printed a letter sent by Indian Commissioner Burke to Chairman LEAVITT, of the Indian Affairs Committee, in which Mr. Burke offers to "answer questions" that may be propounded to him by the Indian Committee. As Mr. Burke's letter was dated April 1 and the paper was published 1,200 miles distant on April 4, it shows the excellent publicity bureau now maintained by Mr. Burke that enables him to have published a letter apparently not sent by any press service so far as the news item discloses.

In order that the record may be properly made up to date I call attention to the fact that on March 4, 1926, I spoke in the House on the "Indian Bureau's chains and manacles," which term was applied both to person and property of the Indians now controlled by Indian Commissioner Burke. At that time I set forth in a dozen or more pages of the Record facts that were vouched for by many witnesses of numerous evidences of mismanagement, robbery of the Government's wards, and systematic oppression. On that same day and about four weeks before the Burke letter was written I introduced in the House a resolution of investigation of the Indian Bureau in support of many specific charges discussed on that day.

That resolution was as follows:

RESOLUTION FOR INVESTIGATION OF INDIAN BUREAU IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 4, 1926.

Mr. FREAR introduced the following joint resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and ordered to be printed:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 189) authorizing the appointment of a committee to investigate the Indian Bureau and report thereon

Whereas Congress in 1924 granted citizenship to every adult Indian for the purpose of enabling him or her to become a self-supporting, responsible member of society; and

Whereas through 70 years of bureaucratic guardianship the Indian has been held by the Indian Bureau in a hopeless, un-American, and unambitious position, with 240,000, or two-thirds of all Indians, still kept by the Indian Bureau in a restricted condition and declared by it to be incompetent to own or manage property, this status being determined by the Indian Bureau itself without right of court review; and

Whereas the Indian Bureau, directed by Commissioner Burke and Assistant Commissioner Meritt, exercises practically unlimited control over Indian property estimated at $1,600,000,000 in value and has consistently, through administrative usurpation and through a senseless persuasion of Congress, increased its power as a means of politically perpetuating itself in more than 5,000 salaried positions paid for by the taxpayers and by the Indians without the Indians' consent; and

Whereas the Commissioner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs has made rules and regulations and has authorized Indian agents to appoint $10 a month subordinate agents called "judges," who, without trial by jury or any known code of law or legal practice, have confined Indians in jail and compelled them to work on the highways as convicts and to pay fines for infringing such rules, all in violation of the constitutional rights and guarantees given every American citizen, and has further, through his agents, permitted many acts of cruelty and mistreatment of Indians which deprived them of their property and liberty of person; and

Whereas the Indian Bureau has neglected the health of the Indians until disease conditions shocking beyond description have developed and now menace the white population of several States, while destroying the Indians; and

Whereas, cooperating with local interests in using pressure upon Congress, the Indian Bureau has charged to the several tribes, through legislation initiated or approved by the Indian Bureau, many millions of dollars for bridges, roads, irrigation projects, and other public and private work not consented to by the Indians and not intended primarily, if at all, in some cases, to be used by the Indians; and

Whereas the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has advocated laws that have required and will require the Indians to give unjust oil leases reaching many millions of dollars and unwarranted favors to oil producers and speculators, including payment by the Indians of the white producers and speculators' tax, and further has failed and refused to protect the Indians' property, but, on the contrary, in repeated cases involving enormous results has favored legislation designed to cancel and confiscate Indian property rights and to remove the legal protection to which the Indians as wards of the Nation are entitled; and

Whereas after 70 years of Spanish Inquisition guardianship under an Indian bureaucracy that to-day rivals the autocracy of a Russian czar, the Indians are without hope or protection save through an aroused public sentiment and intervention by Congress; and

Whereas the Indian Bureau, with its notorious scandals, robbery of its wards, and systematic oppression, has outlived any usefulness it was supposed to have when first organized; and

Whereas Congress, having granted full citizenship to the American Indian, must now, in tardy justice, enable these wards of the Nation to enter into the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship, which can never be done under the present archaic, tyrannical, and exploiting system of the Indian Bureau: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a committee of 10 Members of Congress is hereby authorized, five to be appointed by the Vice President from the Senate and five appointed by the Speaker from the House; that such committee shall be instructed to investigate any charges of neglect, dissipation of funds, improper treatment, or misgovernment of the American Indians and further report their findings, with such recommendations as may afford the Indians opportunity to improve their conditions without delay and better qualify themselves for rights of citizenship heretofore granted them by Congress. And for such purposes said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths and shall have the right to report at any time. The expense of said inquiry shall be paid jointly in equal proportions out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, to be immediately available.

It was necessary to have a committee fully empowered to subpoena witnesses and hold extended hearings that would not be hushed up or whitewashed, due to the influence of the bureau and its army of employees—a situation not unknown with the bureau in many cases. Word that no committees of investigation were likely to be appointed or any extended hearings would be held prevented pressing the resolution for passage unless a willingness should be manifested therefor by Commissioner Burke, head of the bureau. To date no sign of such willingness has been manifested where witnesses could meet the bureau chief face to face. Presumably some of the charges contained in a hundred or more letters I have received on the bureau would not be probed, but without doubt many charges warrant the reported statement of a former high Cabinet officer that Mr. Burke should resign. My charge is not personal against Mr. Burke, but against a vicious system of which he consciously or unconsciously plays a part, a system that should be abolished.

On March 8, or shortly after the introduction of my resolution of investigation of the Indian Bureau, a large dinner was given at the Lafayette Hotel, this city, under the auspices of the People's Forum, a well-known organization, at which Senators, Representatives, and speakers from abroad were present, and also about 30 Indians' representatives in Washington of several Indian tribes. At that meeting Senators and Members, with several other speakers, including Indians and Indian women, all denounced the present Indian Bureau autocracy and its unjust "management" of 225,000 Indians, who own $1,600,000,000 of property held by the bureau. Before adjournment of the forum a motion was unanimously carried inviting Mr. Burke to be present at a later meeting to defend himself and his bureau. A copy of a letter then sent Mr. Burke has been handed me to-day by Mr. King, director of the forum. It is explicit and is as follows:

MARCH 9, 1926.

HON. CHARLES H. BURKE,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURKE: I assume your attention has been called to the fact that the policies of the bureau of which you are chief were severely arraigned at a forum dinner under the auspices of this organization last night at the Lafayette Hotel.

Permit me to say that this is a forum for the discussion of public issues of moment. In accordance with the unanimous vote of the forum, I shall be very happy to arrange another forum dinner at any time that may suit your convenience for the presentation of the bureau's side of the questions at issue. I should be glad if you yourself would appear, but since that is not customary in official circles I shall heartily welcome any representative that you might choose to select.

I noted with pleasure that two representatives of your bureau were at the meeting last night and trust they have rendered you a very full account of what happened. I am happy that one of them took advantage of the question period to ask questions and defend the bureau. It is our custom to have such a question period always, and I assure you that your speaker or speakers will receive every courtesy and consideration, and undoubtedly will be glad to answer such questions as may arise.

Yours very sincerely,

JUDSON KING, Director.

Two representatives from the Indian Bureau were present, as stated in the letter, and sought to defend the bureau's methods as to two bills then before the Indian Committee of the House. One of these measures related to an Indian oil leasing bill that as introduced and defended was unjust and unprecedented among the long list of unjust methods pursued toward the Indians by the bureau.

The letter of March 9 was replied to by Mr. Burke on March 22, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 22, 1926.

MR. JUDSON KING,
Director National Popular Government League,
637 Munsey Building, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. KING: Returning to the office after an absence of a few days due to illness, your letter of the 9th instant has been called to my attention.

It is noted that you say that at a forum dinner under the auspices of your organization at the Lafayette Hotel recently the policies of this bureau were severely arraigned and that, in accordance with the unanimous vote of the forum, you would be very happy to arrange another forum dinner, to suit my convenience, for the presentation of the bureau's side of the questions at issue. While this action is appreciated, I do not feel that anything would be gained by what you propose. If you or anyone else will present in concrete form any statements that were made on the occasion of the dinner referred to in your letter dealing with matters of administration or legislation for which the bureau was criticized, I shall very gladly reply to same by letter and give full information.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES H. BURKE, Commissioner.

The charges made at the forum meeting, which representatives of the bureau heard presented, among many others, and for which Commissioner Burke was requested to appear and answer, are set forth in the following letter by Mr. Judson King, director of the forum, in his letter to Mr. Burke, as follows:

NATIONAL POPULAR GOVERNMENT LEAGUE,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1926.

HON. CHARLES H. BURKE,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURKE: I have been delayed by the pressure of other work in responding to yours of the 22d ultimo relative to having a representative of the Indian Bureau speak at a forum of this league which we would call for the especial purpose of permitting you to answer the charges which were made against your bureau at the forum of March 8.

In declining you express a desire that I present in concrete form the statements made at this forum.

That is, of course, a fair proposition, and I gladly do it herewith, although the press freely carried statements made, and at least two persons employed by your bureau were present at the forum, I presume to find out exactly what was said.

The following charges were made, in substance, at this forum, and I shall be happy to observe your response:

1. It was charged that the Indian Bureau had indorsed a plan for taking 37½ per cent of the Indian royalties on Executive order reservations and giving it to the States, while at the same time leaving the oil producers exempt from any taxation. It was charged that this plan had been inaugurated by Secretary Fall and the present officials of the Indian Bureau, who were its officials under Secretary Fall, were proceeding, with the indorsement of Mr. Fall's successor, Dr. Hubert Work, to seek the accomplishment through legislation of what Mr. Fall was prevented from accomplishing by administrative act.

In this connection it was predicted by speakers that before this oil bill finally came to a vote it would have been fixed up to validate all of the hundreds of illegal Fall applications. I understand that the bill as reported by the House Indian Affairs Committee does precisely this thing and that no protest has been registered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

As the matter is of gravest moment to the Indians and to the country, and as the Indian Bureau's position is known to be influential in Congress, it would appear that an explanation or, if the facts were misstated at the forum, a refutation is urgent.

2. It was charged at the forum by different speakers that the Indian Bureau had drafted and was promoting a measure which destroyed tribal authority among the Indians, outlawed tribal customs, and legalized the anomalous type of reservation court already existing, which would thus be enabled with statutory authority to continue jailing and fining Indians without due process of law.

It was charged that this bill as a whole was a deadly blow against Indian happiness, Indian morals, Indian self-respect, and the human and constitutional rights of Indians; and that it had been engendered in the bureau, drafted by the bureau, pushed by the bureau, and defended in hearings by the bureau. The question was raised whether such action by a department of the United States Government, the guardian of the Indians, was not a grave matter.

The bill in question is yet pending, as I understand, and is likely to be reported any day with the Indian Bureau's indorsement, and it is therefore an immediate subject. Some response before some forum would appear to be desirable.

3. It was charged by speakers at the forum that in a specific case, which was adduced as an example merely, the Indian death rate was five times the white death rate; that in this case of the Pima Indians the Indian Bureau and the Department of the Interior had engaged in delays based on insignificant and even fictitious technicalities which had not only gravely wronged the Indians but had blocked the will of Congress; that the delays were continuing and the extermination of the Pima Tribe was threatened. The statistics were exact and were based not on annual vital statistical reports of the Indian Bureau alone, but on allotment charts and official and unofficial count of the Indians actually dead. Here again a response appears to be desirable, though I can see your position, the forum might not be the most conclusive place at which to give the response.

On the subject of making response to criticism when formulated by responsible persons and when detailed in its character, I would remind you that Presidents of the United States have not deemed that it was wanting in dignity, or against their constitutional prerogatives, to make public reply before meetings of citizens to charges and criticisms. It is not wholly clear to me wherein the Indian Bureau possesses a dignity, remoteness, and impenetrability greater than that of the successive Presidents of the United States.

Sincerely and respectfully yours, JUDSON KING, Director.

Again Commissioner Burke refused to appear in person or by representation in the presence of those who had listened to specific charges against himself and the Indian Bureau.

Thereafter, on April 1, as though the date was significant of the purpose of the letter, Commissioner Burke sent to Chairman LEAVITT of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House a letter, of which copies were thoughtfully sent to papers in my district at the same time. That letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 1, 1926.

Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,

*Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.*

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: In the remarks of my friend the Hon. Mr. FREAR, of Wisconsin, appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 26, 1926, referring to remarks made on a former occasion and appearing in the RECORD of March 5, 1926, Mr. FREAR stated:

"I would not willingly do Mr. Burke any injustice, but he should come out in the open if any of these statements are incorrect and plead his case before the public, or, better, before a committee of the House or Senate, where the record will be made."

As I do not consider what Mr. FREAR has stated constitutes an indictment, I do not feel called upon to "plead" my case before the public or elsewhere. I am, however, ready and glad to appear before your committee at any time to answer his charges and answer any questions that any member of the committee may wish to ask me. In view of the misinformation, misleading and untrue statements made by Mr. FREAR, if there are as many as three members of your committee who feel that they would like me to answer them, it is my desire and hope that the committee will fix a time and afford me the opportunity to do so, the time to be agreeable to Mr. FREAR, in order that he may be present.

Respectfully,

CHARLES H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Without the presence of witnesses or any means of subpoena of those gone home or others who would be brought here by any real investigating committee, Commissioner Burke finally now says, through the press, he will appear before the Indian Committee and answer charges or questions.

It was shown by me in speech of March 26, to which the commissioner refers, that at that time 35 bills had been reported by the Indian Committee to the House, of which 34 had the O. K. of Commissioner Burke, acting through the Secretary of the Interior. Only one bill passed the committee without that approval—a bill introduced by Chairman LEAVITT, which was put through the committee, but held up in the Senate by Indian Bureau officials who appeared against it in the Senate hearings. Over 100 bills have been referred to the Indian Committee, and as all but 1 of the 35 bills reported by the committee had to have the O. K. of the autocrat of Indian affairs, it can easily be understood why Commissioner Burke, holding a whip hand, is willing to answer questions before that committee, particularly as no accusing witnesses are now present and none can be subpoenaed by the committee. The situation is as simple as the ease with which the commissioner's press bureau managed to get his letter to the committee printed in a district in northern Wisconsin without any delay. If all service by the bureau was as speedy and given equal publicity, the situation of 225,000 "incompetent" Indians would be improved and no longer made subject to ball-and-chain sentences in my own State.

My letter to Chairman LEAVITT, written yesterday, is as follows:

APRIL 5, 1926.

Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,

*Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives, The Capitol.*

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: I note in the United States Daily of April 5 copy of a letter sent by Commissioner Burke, of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, to you dated April 1, which letter states that if three members or more of the Indian Affairs Committee desire him to do so, he, the commissioner, will now answer any questions affecting "misinformation, misleading, and untrue statements made by Mr. FREAR in speeches of March 5 and March 26, 1926."

If any statement made by me is incorrect, the commissioner owes it to both of us and to the public to make correction, and opportunity has been afforded him in every possible way to do this in the past. For over two weeks, at the invitation of members who advised me they would speak in the House, I awaited some one authorized to defend the bureau. The commissioner says he will appear before the committee where every member of a committee depends upon the commissioner's approval for Indian legislation desired by those whom the member represents.

Early in March about 30 Indians representing different tribes then in Washington, together with other speakers, including Rabbi Wise, a noted publicist, appeared at a dinner at the Lafayette Hotel where about 150 guests, including a number of Senators and Representatives in Congress were present. At this public forum Indian and white speakers made serious charges against the Indian Bureau for its incompetency and worse, and Commissioner Burke was unanimously invited by resolution to appear at a subsequent meeting of the forum in person or by a representative to answer the charges there made. This, I understand, he declined to do. That invitation occurred subsequent to my speech on March 5, to which Commissioner Burke now offers to make a belated answer to questions. The Indians then in Washington and others familiar with important facts there developed have now generally returned to their homes or reservations.

Commissioner Burke controls $90,000,000 in Indian money and securities and $1,600,000,000 in Indian property, and holds the purse strings that would enable them, if at all, to return to Washington to testify. Important witnesses that any congressional investigation could properly subpoena can not be produced before the Indian Committee of the House without legislation. Over a month ago I offered a definite resolution for investigation, that Commissioner Burke should have welcomed, to be held before a congressional committee empowered to subpoena witnesses. With our Indian Committee largely dependent upon his favors and approval for any Indian legislation desired by individual Members, and without witnesses recently available, I submit the commissioner's failure to appear before a public forum or offer for a proper congressional investigating committee is without reasonable explanation.

The commissioner offers at this late date to appear before three or more members of our committee to answer questions. Will other witnesses have opportunity to appear, and will the commissioner bring them or permit them to come to Washington at their tribe's expense? Will the committee be empowered to subpoena witnesses or will the commissioner, who controls the Indian purse strings, bring before the committee witnesses who should be here? Is his letter a gesture after the parties have gone home? Speaking personally, questions affecting the past record and policy of the bureau and of the commissioner in handling Indian affairs are primarily matters that should properly be inquired into, and the commissioner dignifies me in his letter by saying arrangements may be made to suit my convenience. I appreciate the courtesy and ask in return, if he appears, if witnesses may be brought here whom I will name, and if I may be permitted to question him and other witnesses without interference? I am certain the chief witness will be amply able to care for himself.

One other suggestion. For over six weeks past the only hearing on the Indian oil bill was held up from printing until just prior to the report, and for about the same length of time or more it has been impossible to get printed hearings on the Indian court bill, both of which bills are vitally important to the Indians. These bills, I understand, the Indian Bureau is seeking to press through Congress at this late day. It is customary, I believe, with committees generally for reports to be printed promptly, and when I was chairman of a committee that took over 4,000 printed pages of testimony, daily printed hearings were laid on our desks within two or three days after each hearing. For this reason I am asking that Commissioner Burke's printed testimony, whether for one day or longer, even if uncontradicted by witnesses, may be made available within a day or so after the hearings for such use as may be proper. That, I believe, is a fair request to make in advance to prevent misunderstanding or delay.

If necessary that some bill should be under consideration when Commissioner Burke appears to answer questions, I suggest that a hearing may properly be called upon one of the several general bills I have introduced affecting Indian welfare, which, I believe, have been uniformly disapproved by the commissioner. Testimony, of course, would not be limited to the bill under consideration. If he will appear when no Indian business is before the House or before the committee, I shall endeavor to be present and request that notice be given at least on the preceding forenoon, which I trust is not an unreasonable request to make.

Thanking you for any arrangements the commissioner may desire to have made, I am,

Very sincerely,

JAMES A. FREAR.

No attempt to repeat charges against the bureau will be here attempted. The whole system of control of Indians and their property by the Indian Bureau is condemned by those familiar with present bureaucratic practices.

For illustration, two recent cases from my own State are alluded to, either one of which would properly require the presence of several witnesses to determine the facts rather than the self-serving statements of bureau officials and bureau agents.

I do not intend to repeat many charges against Indian agents, some of which may not be just, but one charge of many received is quoted, and detailed statements regarding that case have come to my hands, so I have confidence the situation is substantially as presented by Governor Blaine, of Wisconsin, in his telegram to President Coolidge, which I have read, but here repeat:

MADISON, WIS., February 15, 1926.

President CALVIN COOLIDGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Responsible woman, whose word I believe, reports that Paul Moore, an Indian, charged with a misdemeanor, was found on January 26 at Lac du Flambeau (Wis.) Agency Jail, in a cell 6 by 8 feet, with clogged toilet, and with ball and chain fastened to ankle. In same jail were incarcerated Indian women. This condition is abhorrent to the dictates of decency and our vaunted civilization. This is the tyranny of the Dark Ages and the practice of the degenerate dominant to terrorize the Indian, who needs help more than a jail. In the name of humanity, I beg that that sort of thing cease.

JOHN J. BLAINE, Governor.

During my speech of March 4, previously mentioned, my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. PEAVEY] interrupted me to make the following statement regarding the case mentioned in the telegram from the Governor of Wisconsin to President Coolidge. He said:

Mr. PEAVEY. I have in my possession a letter from Mrs. Mary Moore, of Odanah, Wis., complaining about the very thing under discussion. She states that an Indian judge at Flambeau, Wis., sentenced her son to imprisonment; he was given a chance to work it out in the potato fields, and he escaped. Some months later they brought him back and put him into jail with a chain and ball on his feet, and in this particular case the charge was for simply being disorderly. The mother of this boy writes me that her son was tried before an Indian judge who was unable to read or write English, and she claims the superintendent of the Flambeau Reservation wrote out the boy's sentence for the Indian judge. On January 26 I sent Mrs. Moore's letter to the Indian Bureau, requesting an investigation and report. Receipt of my letter was acknowledged, but no report has been made in six weeks' time. I have had many complaints from Indians in my district, but not of so serious a nature as the Moore case.

THE MURRAY CASE OF THIS YEAR

The Murray case, also from Wisconsin, is recent and useful in showing the attitude of the bureau in its treatment of cases where injustice has come through the bureau's autocratic and ruthless methods that to-day have left a poor family practically without protection, excepting as the people of my State may relieve their distress.

First is a letter to Governor Blaine, of Wisconsin, from Commissioner Burke that is introductory and explanatory. It is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 23, 1925.

Hon. JOHN J. BLAINE,

Executive Chamber, Madison, Wis.

My DEAR SIR: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Murray, of Murray Lake, Wis., presented your letter of introduction with the accompanying papers to-day. Their case is very pathetic, and I have had occasion heretofore to consider it and have gone to the extreme in trying to aid them. I am still willing to do whatever I can now, but it is one of those cases where it is hard to accomplish anything, on account of the record.

It is indeed regrettable that the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Murray would advise them to come to Washington at this time when there is not a thing that they can do by being here, and the cost of a trip to Washington and return would have kept them for some little time had they remained at home. Senator LENROOT is going to introduce another bill for the relief of Mr. Murray, and has already called personally at this office, and we have discussed it at length, and both of us are disposed to do everything we can consistently to try to get relief through legislation; but, as before stated, it is a very doubtful case, because of the record and lapse of time since the alleged damage was sustained in 1809. There have been bills at different times introduced in Congress for relief, one as early as 1913, but there never has been, apparently, a favorable report upon any bill, either by the committee of the House of Representatives or the committee of the Senate.

Assuring you that the matter will have our personal attention and that in any way that we can properly cooperate with the Congress we will do so, I am

Yours sincerely,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Senator LENROOT endeavored to give some aid to relieve the Murrays, who were thrown off the reservation under bureau methods.

Whether Commissioner Burke did or did not rewrite his report as stated, and whether the commissioner was speaking frankly to the Senator, may be gathered from subsequent letters in the case. The Senator's letter to Mrs. Murray is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
March 6, 1926.

Mrs. FRANK MURRAY, Barnes, Wis.

My DEAR MRS. MURRAY: I have yours of the 1st instant, and in reply will say that I talked with Commissioner Burke about the case about 10 days ago, and he confidentially told me that he had written a report upon the bill for Frank, but his report had not met with the approval of the Secretary, who makes the report to Congress, and he was compelled to rewrite it in such a way as to secure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

I know the commissioner is very friendly to you, and I am afraid that the trouble is that he wrote a stronger report in favor of the bill than the Secretary would sign. I shall advise you as soon as there is anything to report.

Very sincerely yours,

I. L. LENROOT.

A heart-rending letter from the Murrays state their condition and necessities as follows:

BARNES, WIS., March 22, 1926.

Hon. Congressman H. H. PEAVEY,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Since your last letter both Frank and I have sent an appealing letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs Burke, also to Senator LENROOT. I am inclosing the Senator's answer. Recently heard from Assistant Commissioner Meritt, which I have sent to Senator LENROOT. We have been snowed in since the 11th of January and short of food. I have cut enough wood to keep warm.

Dear Congressman, we surely are enduring hardships of the worst kind. It is heart-rending at times to see Frank break down and cry; it is almost unbearable, but I do try to cheer him and say God will provide. He will open the way and the hearts of our Indian Department. This great and good Government will relieve us.

I desire to tell you that a farmer friend living several miles north of us on the Brule road came on horseback the other day with a loaf of bread, a pint of oatmeal, and a peck of potatoes and some stamps, which we are thankful for.

Our poor daughter, Mrs. Howard Barnes, of Oshkosh, Wis., sent us cereals parcel post. Her husband earns only a living wage for a family of five and supporting and schooling an orphan niece. It takes all he earns for rent, fuel, and food, so we can not look to them for help.

Yours sincerely and truthfully,

FRANK AND NANCY MURRAY,
Brule, Douglas County, Wis.

When Congressman PEAVEY endeavored to find where the trouble lay in this bill's course that had been approved (?) by Commissioner Burke, in an effort to right a serious and inexcusable wrong, he wrote the Claims Committee as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1926.

Hon. CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. UNDERHILL: Early in the present session of Congress I introduced H. R. 4278 for the relief of Mr. Frank Murray, and it was referred to your committee for consideration.

Up to date I have not heard what progress has been made with the bill and will appreciate it if you will advise whether or not the Bureau of Indian Affairs has made a report on the bill to your committee. If it has not, would it be in order to ask that the bureau submit a report at any early date?

Thanking you in advance, I am,
Very truly yours,

H. H. PEAVEY.

Here follows the usual self-serving declaration from the bureau, for it seems incredible that Secretary Work would take into his own hands a detail of this kind properly belonging to the Indian Bureau, although correspondence is ordinarily conducted through the department head.

Commissioner Burke was sad and active with Senator LENROOT (see preceding letter). Then, what of this letter from Secretary Work that protests the Murray relief bill?

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 23, 1926.

Hon. CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. UNDERHILL: The receipt is acknowledged of your communication of January 20, 1926, requesting a report on H. R. 4278, a bill for the relief of Frank Murray.

This bill is based on damages alleged to have been sustained by the beneficiary as the result of an order issued by the department dated February 11, 1909, whereby he was removed from the Red River Indian Reservation, Wis., in pursuance of section 2149 of the United States Revised Statutes, because his presence there was considered to be detrimental to the best interests and the peace and welfare of the Indians. Murray and his wife conducted a hotel and restaurant within the reservation. Complaints were made that intoxicated persons were constantly congregating there and that liquor was being sold to Indians and others. In 1907 Murray was indicted on the charge of introducing whisky into Indian country in violation of the law. In March, 1908, he pleaded guilty and was fined $100 and sentenced to 60 days' imprisonment, but the imprisonment was suspended upon the payment of the fine. In view of subsequent circumstances, Murray, with others, was removed from the reservation under authority of section 2149 of the United States Revised Statutes.

Under date of December 23, 1911, the department granted Mr. Murray permission to return to the reservation. From a memorandum in the record it appears that the order permitting Murray's return to the reservation was based on the following conclusion:

"Without going into the question of the justification for the order of removal or of the correctness of the charges which led to the removal order, Mr. Murray should be permitted to return to the reservation where he has property and from which he has been forcibly separated since February 9, 1909, for whatever moral, legal, or administrative grounds there may have been for ordering his removal at the time, a forced exile from home and property of nearly three years is certainly a most severe and unusual punishment."

He claims that by reason of being removed his business was destroyed, the value of his property impaired, and that he suffered great loss thereby. Information in the files is to the effect that, after being removed from the reservation, Mr. and Mrs. Murray ran a summer resort on Murray Lake, about 50 miles southeast of Ashland, Wis. The claimant is now an old man, and his health is impaired to an extent that he is unable to labor, and it is said that both he and his aged wife are destitute and without means and that in an effort to procure the revocation of the order removing him from the reservation and later to obtain relief legislation, in addition to damage sustained, he has actually expended considerable sums of money. For further information, see report of July 3, 1914, on House bill 1263 of the Sixty-third Congress. The only way that relief can be granted is through legislation. The department does not recommend the proposed legislation.

In this connection your attention is invited to S. 2148, Sixty-ninth Congress, a bill which has been introduced in the Senate proposing the appropriation of $3,000 for the relief of Mr. Murray.

By letter dated March 17, 1926, the Director of the Budget advised that this proposed reverse report is in accordance with the financial program of the President.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

If given time to prepare for Commissioner Burke's questions, I trust I may find enough to occupy a part of his valuable time that will be illuminating in the disclosure of bureau methods, although it is unfortunate that the spirit did not move the bureau head before important witnesses had returned home or that an investigating committee with power to subpoena and give proper findings had not been called into service.

And the chapter will be written so plainly that the commissioner can again send his letters up to my district for the enjoyment of constituents who like such literary efforts as his now famous letter of April 1.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8917) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1, relating to the limitation on the payment of salaries under the classification act: Provides that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade, but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 2: Appropriates $48,973,485 for pay of enlisted men, as proposed by the House, instead of $49,962,144, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 4, 6, 9, 17, 18, 19, 20, 29, 32, 36, 38, 40, 41, relating to participation in the national rifle match: Strikes out the increases proposed by the Senate aggregating $393,490.

On No. 5: Appropriates $160,000 for apprehension of deserters, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $166,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 8: Appropriates $6,501,916 for clothing and equipage, incident to the continuation of existing Army laundries, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,101,916, as proposed by the House.

On No. 13: Appropriates $800,000 from the military post construction fund for construction of permanent barracks at Camp Lewis, Wash., instead of making such sum available for the purpose indicated from the proceeds of the sales of surplus real estate "not heretofore covered into the Treasury," as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 14: Makes the provision proposed by the House with respect to hospital construction at Schofield Barracks apply "toward" instead of "for" the completion of such construction, and makes the sum of $450,000, proposed by the House, chargeable to the military post construction fund instead of to the proceeds of sales of surplus real estate not "heretofore covered into the Treasury."

On Nos. 15 and 16, relating to barracks and quarters: Strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate of $5,000 on account of participation in the national rifle match, and appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $5,000 for the repair of the old building known as the "Castle" at Fort Niagara, N. Y.

On No. 21: Strikes out the inhibition proposed by the House on the use of advances to the Signal Corps for the transmission of messages for hiring of personnel.

On No. 23: Appropriates $949,005 for the Medical and Hospital Department, entirely incident to the Senate proposal to continue in operation existing Army laundries, instead of $1,197,011, as proposed by the House, and $938,255, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 24 and 25: Makes a transposition of figures in the appropriation for the Engineer School.

On No. 26: Reappropriates $100,000 of unexpended balances of appropriation for "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard, 1923," reappropriated for 1925, for protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications in the United States, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 27: Strikes out the reappropriation proposed by the Senate of $400,000 of the unexpended balances of the appropriation for "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard, 1924," for the construction of seacoast batteries on the Canal Zone.

On No. 31: Appropriates $40,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $90,000, as proposed by the Senate, on account of fire-control stations, Hawaiian Islands, and strikes out the reappropriation proposed by the Senate of $100,000 of the unexpended balances of the appropriation for "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard, 1923," reappropriated for 1925, intended to be similarly applied.

On No. 33: Appropriates $350,000 for expenses of selected officers and enlisted men of the National Guard incident to attendance at military-service schools instead of $308,000, as proposed by the House, and $400,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 35: Makes the National Guard field service appropriations available until December 31, 1927, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 37: Strikes out the appropriation of $100,000 proposed by the Senate for travel of Regular Army personnel in connection with the Organized Reserves.

On No. 39: Fixes the limitation on expenditures from the appropriation for Reserve Officers' Training Corps for transportation and subsistence expenses of competitors in the national rifle match at $100, as proposed by the House, instead of $15,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 42: Fixes the limitation on expenditures from the appropriation for the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice for transportation and subsistence expenses of civilian rifle teams participating in the national matches at $100, as proposed by the House, instead of $80,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 43: Strikes out the appropriation of $10,000, proposed by the House, toward erecting a marker for the burial place at Washington Crossing Park, Pa., of 40 soldiers who died in the American Revolution.

On Nos. 44 and 45, relating to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, for posts and guard rails on highways.

On No. 46, relating to the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system: Appropriates $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the installation of radio receiving and sending apparatus at a point to serve the Chandalar mining district.

On No. 47: Appropriates $900,000 for the construction and maintenance of roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska, instead of $751,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 49, 50, and 51, relating to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Appropriates $410,000 for subsistence, Central Branch, Dayton, Ohio, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $430,000, as proposed by the House.

The committee of conference have not agreed to the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 3, relating to allowances of enlisted men while absent from their permanent-duty stations in a pay status.

On No. 7, relating to the appropriation for regular supplies of the Army.

On Nos. 10 and 11, relating to the appropriation for Army transportation.

D. R. ANTHONY, JR.,
H. E. BARBOUR,
FRANK CLAGUE,
BEN JOHNSON,
T. W. HARRISON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, this appropriation bill as it left the House carried a total of $339,616,367.16. The Senate added thereto in direct appropriations the sum of $3,537,126, and in addition thereto, by reason of the enactment of legislation by Congress after the passage of the act by the Senate, there has been added to the bill a total of $1,250,000 because of two construction items. One was placed in the bill by the Senate and one was placed in the bill on the floor of the House for new construction at Scofield Barracks and at Camp Lewis, Wash. Originally it was provided that the moneys for these projects were to be derived from sales of surplus real estate before the funds were deposited in the Treasury. By subsequent act of Congress they have been transferred into the military-post construction fund which has been set up in the Treasury. So that these amounts have been thereby made direct appropriations; and in addition thereto the Senate has reappropriated the sum of $1,200,000 of unexpended balances, which increased the total amount in conference between the two Houses to $5,987,126. If the conference report is adopted, as recommended by your conferees, the bill will carry a total of $342,609,611.16, which represents an increase over the Budget of $2,865,000, aside from the two construction items. I might say for the information of the House that since the passage of this bill by the House and the Senate the Budget has approved a bill pending in this body which authorizes the construction at Scofield Barracks and Camp Lewis, so that it can not be properly said that this amount of $1,250,000 is an increase over the Budget.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. With reference to amendment numbered 14, I do not think the report is quite clear as to whether the Senate amendment is retained. The real change made in the Senate was substituting the word "toward" for the word "for." Is that change agreed to?

Mr. ANTHONY. That change is agreed to, because it was evident it would require more money than the House provided to complete the project, and the conferees were desirous of permitting the completion of the project.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Strictly, the amendment goes a little beyond the amendment of the Senate?

Mr. ANTHONY. Beyond the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; the conference report goes beyond the amendment of the Senate in changing language which is not in disagreement.

Mr. ANTHONY. We were compelled, for reasons just stated, to make the change, so that the money could be taken from the military-post construction fund, because the funds from which the House had directed it to be taken had since been transferred to the Treasury. We were compelled to make those changes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I am not sure that I understand the status of the completion of the hospital at Scofield Barracks. Is this the situation, that since they put in that item in the House and made it payable, immediately available, out of the surplus funds on hand that had not been covered into the Treasury, the Congress has passed a bill creating the post-construction fund?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The former fund was not now available, so that the bill has been amended to make that item now payable out of the post-construction fund which has recently by law been set up in the Treasury.

Mr. ANTHONY. Where the moneys the House attempted to make available have since been transferred.

Mr. WINGO. And the effect is that whereas it was theoretically impossible to start construction at once, the only change really would be to simply provide for the completion, commencing with the beginning of the next fiscal year, July 1.

Mr. ANTHONY. And the addition of the word "toward" makes it possible for the use of even more money than the House provided to complete the project at Scofield Barracks.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, the net effect would be that the War Department is authorized and money is appropriated, so that, commencing with the new fiscal year, they have authority and funds to complete that hospital at Scofield Barracks?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; to be immediately available.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I wanted to ask the gentleman in reference to amendments Nos. 33 and 39.

Mr. MADDEN. Before the gentleman from Kansas answers that, will the gentleman withhold a moment?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit for printing under the rule the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill, the bill H. R. 9341.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana submits the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9341) for printing under the rule. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In reference to items 33 and 39 I notice there is a disagreement with the Senate, and that the Senate yielded to the House conferees on the question of the increase of mileage for reserve officers; that is, regular officers assigned to reserve officers' work.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. That is for additional money for travel in addition to funds available for regular officers on duty with the reserve. The Senate yielded on that item.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In reference to the item No. 39, fixing the expenditures from the Reserve Officers' Training Corps allowance for transportation, the Senate yielded on that. The Senate provision carried $15,000 and the House provision only $100.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate yielded on all the items covering the cost of the rifle matches. The amendment that the gentleman refers to concerns the item in reference to travel for rifle teams of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps to Camp Perry this summer. In this bill all appropriations for holding rifle matches this summer are eliminated. It is the plan of the department to hold such rifle matches biennially instead of every year.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It will not be used?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it will not be used.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is the policy of the department to have these matches biennially instead of annually?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman give the House the exact amount now for appropriations for military activities and those for nonmilitary activities?

Mr. ANTHONY. Of this entire amount that the bill carries, $342,000,000, a little over $77,000,000 is for nonmilitary activities. I might say to the House that the two items on which the House conferees yielded included one for over a million dollars, restoring the laundries that are now operated in the Army. The House cut them out; the Budget recommended it. While this increases the total of the bill, it does not mean the laundries cost us all of that amount of money, because that amount is returned to the Treasury in the receipts from this laundry service. The service supposedly pays for itself.

The other matter that I wanted to bring to the attention of the House is a reappropriation of unexpended funds amounting to $600,000 for purchase of horses by the Army. It was an amendment by the Senate, to which the House conferees agreed.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas rose.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman wants his linen washed, I will wait.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did the Budget recommend the discontinuance of this laundry service?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the conferees have yielded?

Mr. ANTHONY. They yielded to the restoration of the item by the Senate.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman think it a good thing for the Government to be in the laundry business?

Mr. ANTHONY. In some instances it is a bad thing, but, generally speaking, it is for the good of the Army. The Government charges $1.75 a month to the enlisted men for all their laundry work. That gives him a good, clean laundry service at a reasonable expenditure of money. On the other hand, the Government is undoubtedly competing at some Army posts with near-by civilian laundries, and perhaps in some places at prices not sufficient to cover all cost and overhead.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the cost charged to the Government is not sufficient to cover all expenses, including the overhead?

Mr. ANTHONY. The statement is made to us that the moneys collected do pay all the charges for this laundry service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I should not think so.

Mr. ANTHONY. We yielded to the Senate on this item with the understanding with the Senate conferees that they would convey to the War Department that it was our desire that a charge be made for this service sufficiently high to cover all overhead costs, so that there would be no possibility of a deficiency or the using up of any part of the appropriation being made for that purpose.

Mr. DYER. Do they assign enlisted men to this work?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it is done by civilian labor.

Mr. DYER. Is any of it done by enlisted men?

Mr. ANTHONY. Only in the Disciplinary Barracks.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I hope we can get away from that.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that was the idea when the War Department eliminated the item.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I hope the Army will continue this activity. They are not in business. They are attending to their own business. I do not see why the Army should refuse to carry on this laundry simply for the benefit of some private concern that makes money out of the enlisted men. I think you might as well hire the food cooks and everything else to be done by outsiders if you adopt this principle that the Army can not do anything except march around on parade.

Now, as to amendment No. 1, what particular individual in the office of the Secretary of War was this intended to benefit?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know what particular individual this will cover, but it is a clause carried in all appropriation bills this year which will permit an increase in pay of certain chiefs. Where there is only one in a classification an increase is now prohibited, but this will permit, in certain cases, these chiefs of bureaus to receive an increase.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In other words, the effect of this Senate amendment, to which the House conferees have agreed, is to provide that for everybody else the rule shall be one way, but if a man happens to be the only one in his grade—

Mr. ANTHONY. No. I will say to the gentleman that it is just the opposite now. We passed legislation this year or last year under which these chiefs could receive no increase whatever, but those in grades under them could have an increase and have received increases, so we thought it no more than fair to permit a reasonable increase for these chiefs.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And the gentleman is doing that in an appropriation bill when the other was fixed by statute.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it was all fixed in appropriation bills, I will say to the gentleman; it was all fixed by limitation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman does not know who this particular individual is.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is intended to broadly cover a number of them.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I notice that the Senate provision for the expenses of selected officers and enlisted men of the National Guard incident to attendance at military service schools carried an appropriation of $400,000, whereas the House provision carried $308,000 and it was set at $350,000 by the conferees. Just what does that cut involve from the Senate figures?

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, it means that it is the desire of the Senate that a larger number of National Guard officers shall be sent to the various service schools, and the House met them halfway on the matter.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. How does the appropriation in the report compare with the appropriation of the present year?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it practically restores the appropriation for the current year. If I am not mistaken I think the estimate of the Budget was a cut. Three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars is the figure of the current year.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then there is an increase of $25,000 over the current year?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3: Page 10 of the bill, line 20, strike out the following language: "Provided, That hereafter during concert tours approved by the Secretary of War members of the United States Army Band, the service band of the United States Army, shall suffer no loss of allowances," and insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter enlisted men entitled to receive allowances for quarters and subsistence shall continue, while their permanent stations remain unchanged, to receive such allowances while sick in hospital or absent from their permanent-duty stations in a pay status: Provided further, That allowances for subsistence shall not accrue to such an enlisted man while he is in fact being subsisted at Government expense."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter enlisted men, including the members of the United States Army Band, entitled to receive allowances for quarters and subsistence shall continue, while their permanent stations remain unchanged, to receive such allowances while sick in hospital or absent from their permanent-duty stations in a pay status: Provided further, That allowances for subsistence shall not accrue to such an enlisted man while he is in fact being subsisted at Government expense."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment is to broaden the amendment which was put in the bill on the floor of the House, the provision offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], so that it now applies to all enlisted men in all branches of the Army and not only to the Army Band.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What difference is there between the amendment offered by the gentleman and the Senate amendment? I could not catch the distinction.

Mr. ANTHONY. As the amendment was adopted by the House it applied only to the men of the Army Band when they were absent from their permanent stations but on a duty status. As broadened by the Senate, and to which the House conferees have agreed, it applies to all enlisted men of the Army who may be absent from their stations under orders, say, but while absent they are now unable to receive a rental allowance, which, under the law, they are entitled to receive if at their regular stations. The amendment, as I say, broadened the effect of the House amendment and we considered it fair.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the proposed amendment cover the purpose of the House amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], that these allowances should not be lost during concert tours approved by the Secretary of War?

Mr. ANTHONY. It does cover that, and, as I say, covers all enlisted men of the Army when on such a duty status.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the House bill the words "the service band of the United States Army" were only a matter of description, as I understand it, and therefore were not necessary,

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it was the intention of the House to give some recognition to the Army Band. This is the first time the Army Band has ever been mentioned in legislation, and this does that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the elimination of those words, "the service band of the United States Army," in no way limits the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. That is purely descriptive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7: On page —, line 2, strike out "$11,634,391" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,965,986."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert $11,964,391.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10: On page 24, line 9, strike out "$14,467,580" and insert in lieu thereof "14,577,718."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert $14,526,230.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, before the House votes on this amendment, I ask unanimous consent that it vote on No. 11, because the amendment I have offered contains an item of $30,000 to provide for the transportation of troops to celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of the Little Big Horn, and the authorization therefor is contained in amendment No. 11.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report amendment No. 11.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 11: Page 24, line 13, insert "and of the said sum of $14,577,718, $30,000 shall be immediately available for transportation of troops to and from the celebration commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of the Little Big Horn, and $11,000 shall be immediately available toward defraying expenses in connection with the national rifle match."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "And of the said sum of $14,526,230, $30,000 shall be immediately available for transportation of troops to and from the celebration commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of the Little Big Horn."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for a vote on amendment No. 10.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas with reference to amendment No. 10.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas with regard to amendment No. 11.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: Page 25, line 16, insert "and in addition thereto the sum of $600,000 of the unexpended balances of the appropriation for 'arming, equipping, and training the National Guard, 1924,' is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1927 for the purchase of horses, 1,000 of which shall be delivered to the National Guard: Provided,"

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "be," insert the following: "procured locally by National Guard officers whenever practicable, and shall be."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, just a word in explanation of this amendment. It is provided that 1,000 of these horses shall be for the use of the National Guard. When the Army buys horses it purchases them in different parts of the country and then ships them to remount stations, where they are conditioned and trained for perhaps six months. The expense of transporting them back and forth to these stations is quite large. It would amount to $50 or $60 an animal before the National Guard would receive it. Your committee felt it was perfectly feasible that where a National Guard unit needed a replacement of one or two or three horses that they could be purchased locally by National Guard officers, probably at much lower prices than the Government would pay for them; and, at least, we would save the freight cost involved in shipping them back and forth to the remount stations. We have therefore offered this language to which the Senate has agreed, and the War Department advises us it is perfectly practicable to carry out this provision.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand it, you propose to authorize the purchase of 1,000 horses for the National Guard, to be kept by the National Guard at their home stations.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. For illustration, the National Guard of Arkansas will keep these horses at Little Rock?

Mr. ANTHONY. Wherever there is a battery located you will probably find from 24 to 32 horses with the local battery. It may be that some of these horses are getting too old or are crippled up and need to be replaced. One thousand horses will be distributed to such organizations.

Mr. WINGO. What is the extraordinary occasion that requires such a large number of additional horses other than the 1,000 horses?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that the horses of the Army are getting very old. We have purchased very few horses since the Great War. I think the average age of all the horses must now be about 14 years. That is pretty old for horses.

Mr. WINGO. How many horses does the Army have outside of the Cavalry?

Mr. ANTHONY. Including the Cavalry, about 37,000.

Mr. WINGO. They have got more outside of the Cavalry than they have in, have they not?

Mr. ANTHONY. It was felt that it was necessary to put in some young horses to properly equip the different branches of the service, and we began that policy last year.

Mr. WINGO. Would it not be cheaper to do away with some of the horses used outside of the Cavalry and to use Ford trucks?

Mr. ANTHONY. Motors are used in the Army considerably, but in my judgment they never will entirely supplant the horse.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has frequently seen a hack or bus go along the street drawn by Army horses or mules, where it would have been more economical and more satisfactory to the persons being transported if they had had a motor.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; but the gentleman will not see Army mules used on the street very often now; they are practically disappearing, as regards use for ordinary transportation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Which is the cheaper?

Mr. ANTHONY. You can maintain a car cheaper.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the distributing points in the big cities are going back to the horse and wagon because it is cheaper.

Mr. WINGO. What is the life of an Army mule, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not know.

Mr. WINGO. It is about half the life of a Ford, I understand, and the corn or oats for a mule costs more than gas for a truck.

Mr. SPEAKS. If the gentleman will yield, I am interested to know how there came to be such a large unexpended balance?

Mr. ANTHONY. That rather puzzled the committee, too, and the question was asked during the hearings whether it was the policy of the War Department to deliberately withhold the expenditure of money which Congress had appropriated for National Guard activities. We were told that it was not, but as the hearings developed we found it undoubtedly had been done in several instances, because we found unexpended balances from the previous years. Some of them was money originally appropriated in 1923. We had reappropriated it for the same purpose in 1925, and it is still available, and now we are reappropriating it for an entirely different purpose from what it was first appropriated for.

There is no question but what the War Department in some cases reserves to itself the right to say whether it will expend money appropriated.

Mr. SPEAKS. Absolutely with premeditation and disregard for the explicit instructions of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think possibly they exercise their wisdom as to using the money we appropriate.

Mr. SPEAKS. In the meantime National Guard units are appealing for Federal recognition, and Federal recognition would mean—

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say that I think that these items were appropriated for specific purposes, such as training camps and the pay of the guard, and they were unable to expend it all for the purpose, and the items could only be expended for that particular activity.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 22, page 38, line 15: Strike out the following language: "For the services of such consulting engineers at experimental stations of the Air Service as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, including necessary traveling expenses," and insert "for the services of not more than four consulting engineers at experimental stations of the Air Service as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 a day for not exceeding 50 days each and necessary traveling expenses, including a per diem not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence: Provided, That amounts heretofore paid or obligated for such services and expenses are hereby authorized and validated."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas what real necessity there is for consulting engineers at $50 a day. I notice that later on there are four engineers provided for at the same price. The Government is spending a good deal of money to educate engineers, and why is this necessary to employ engineers at this big per diem?

Mr. ANTHONY. This is not employing engineers in the commonly accepted term; it is taking men specially skilled in a special branch of service; for instance, the Air Service or the Ordnance Department. It is due to a ruling of the comptroller. The comptroller ruled that we could not expend more than the maximum of $7,500 salary a year for one expert, and the per diem should be pro rata. The War Department finds it difficult to get highly technical advisers at less than $50 a day.

Mr. BYRNS. Are these engineers to be civilians, or are they to be taken from the list of retired engineers now on the pay roll of the Government?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think most of the experts are from the colleges of the country, men very well known in their special line.

Mr. BYRNS. Can the gentleman tell who is employed now, and whether or not all that are now employed or expected to be employed are taken from the civilian ranks, or will they come from the retired list?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is nothing in the hearings that the House held to cover that subject. There is something in the Senate hearings about it.

Mr. BYRNS. Is it not a fact that the academy at West Point is devoting some of its time and energy to educating engineers in the Army who have this special technical experience, or who ought to have it as a four years' course? Are they not teaching ordnance and the Air Service?

Mr. ANTHONY. I know the gentleman realizes that these men are highly specialized men in their lines, that they can only get the high degree of knowledge that they have years after they graduate from an educational institution, and they give the Government information and advice that is only obtained after years of special study of these special lines.

Mr. BYRNS. I understand the gentleman is unable to give the House any assurance that all these engineers will be civilians?

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, I think that all will be civilians, unquestionably.

Mr. BYRNS. I understood the gentleman to say that most of them would be.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, none of the money goes to the officers of the Army. It is all to secure this highly specialized technical advice.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. I understood the gentleman to say that they were to be taken from the colleges.

Mr. ANTHONY. Some from the colleges; that is, they are men who are probably professors in technical institutions.

Mr. ROMJUE. That is the point that I wanted to make. I did not know whether the gentleman referred to students or professors.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, this will give some information. I read from the hearings before the Senate. General Williams, Chief of Ordnance, is testifying, and he says:

Major General WILLIAMS. In connection with developmental work in the Ordnance Department, there is a subject different from the one that I have been talking about that I would like to bring up, if I may, please.

It is necessary for us in our work to employ experts from time to time to whom we pay a daily rate. They are not permanent employees, and the rate that we pay varies from $30 to $50 and $60 a day for these specialists.

We have, for instance, a Doctor Moulton, of the University of Chicago, a mathematician, that gives us his advice on ballistic studies. He was with us during the war and did excellent work in the matter of ballistics.

Then we have Professor Stewart, of the University of Iowa, in the development of sound-locating apparatus, and Professor Hull, at Dartmouth, who does some work for us on wind-tunnel experiments. Then we have a metallurgist at the Watertown Arsenal, Doctor Langenburg, who works in our laboratory there and really is the head and director of it.

Now, the comptroller has ruled that we can not pay any of these men more than $20.83 a day, and his ruling is based upon the classification act. He says the maximum per diem rate is determined by dividing the maximum annual rate that can be paid under the classification act, which is $7,500, by 12 to get the monthly payment and then by 30 for the per diem rate, so that the maximum that we can pay is $20.83 a day, and we simply can not get these gentlemen to give their services for that sum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised to learn that, with the course of instruction given to Army officers and engineers at West Point, it is necessary for the Government, in the Department of Ordnance in particular, to have to go to the outside and pay civilians $50 a day in order to do the job I thought the engineers of the Army were educated and trained to do while going to West Point at the expense of the Government.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman understands, for instance, that in the Air Service it is absolutely necessary to get the benefit of the advice of some of the most highly specialized construction engineers that there are in the country in that line of work. It would be impossible to get that advice within the confines of the Army personnel.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 28: Page 53, after line 1, insert: "Provided, That the Ordnance Department is hereby authorized to employ under its various appropriations not exceeding four consulting engineers as the Secretary of War may deem necessary at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 a day for not exceeding 50 days each and necessary traveling expenses, including a per diem not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence: Provided further, That amounts heretofore paid or obligated for such services and expenses are hereby authorized and validated."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 30: Page 60, line 8, strike out "$1,207,980" and insert: "$1,232,980, of which sum not to exceed $25,000 may be used in completing agricultural research experiments in exterminating the cotton boll weevil."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 50 with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$1,232,980, of which sum not to exceed $25,000 shall remain available until October 1, 1927, and may be used in completing agricultural research experiments in exterminating the cotton boll weevil."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I remember that this same appropriation was under consideration last year, and at that time I took occasion to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] some questions about it. I live in a district where cotton is the large staple crop. Texas, as the gentleman knows, is the largest cotton-growing State. I am anxious for everything that can be done to exterminate the boll weevil, but it seems to me a perfectly ridiculous thing for the War Department to be engaged in experimenting in exterminating the boll weevil. We have a bureau in the Department of Agriculture that spends annually large sums of money for that purpose. It has a body of trained experts and they have done much good work in demonstrating how the ravages of the boll weevil may be combated. I had hoped that the committee would not continue this War Department appropriation. It seems to me that it is wholly wasted, and even though it be but $25,000, why should the Committee on Appropriations year after year continue an activity of that sort, which I think every Member of the House must realize is a foolish thing to do?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, this amendment was agreed to. The House bill carries no provision of this kind. We yielded to the Senate on this item at the request of Senators from cotton-growing States, who felt as I feel about this matter, that the Chemical Warfare Service of the Army has undoubtedly done some very valuable work along the line of discovering chemicals and combinations of chemicals which are proving effective against the cotton-boll weevil. General Fries tells us that he feels the money has been well expended that we have previously appropriated.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Of course. I have never heard one of these officers say to the contrary. They always boost their own work and ask that the appropriation be continued.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Army has at Aberdeen, Md., probably the greatest chemical laboratory in the country, and is best fitted to study the effect of these poisonous chemicals on insect life of any department of the Government. While I agree with the gentleman that it is not an activity that the War Department should properly undertake, yet, having that great chemical organization at Aberdeen, it seems to me good judgment to let them go ahead on this.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, is it the purpose of the committee to continue this activity from year to year by the War Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, I will say this: That the committee is only human and it yields to pressure from the cotton-growing States respecting this item.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, Mr. Speaker, I come from a cotton-growing State and a cotton-growing district and am deeply interested in the welfare of the cotton industry, but I certainly would question the wisdom of this proposition. Especially when we have a Department of Agriculture with large forces of experts engaged year after year in efforts to exterminate the boll weevil. Any waste of public funds is wrong, even though the amount is not large. I protest against this item and it certainly is not going to be agreed to by my vote.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas this question, and also the gentleman from Kansas: Is not this appropriation used by the War Department in conjunction with the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, even if that is true, it is not an activity that the War Department ought to be engaged in.

Mr. RAGON. As I understand, the Agricultural Department takes these chemical experts and this apparatus that they have here and uses them in collaboration with the Department of Agriculture. I remember the Secretary of Agriculture once showed some films in which it appeared that they were using airplanes furnished by the War Department. This was merely an illustration of cooperation between the departments, as I understood, along another line. I do not think the War Department takes the initiative in this, but simply cooperates with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CRAMTON. The customary way to handle such things as this would be for the appropriation to be made to the Department of Agriculture and authority given that department for the transfer of funds if necessary from that department to the War Department and the use of their experts. That would obviate the danger that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] very well emphasizes—of duplication—and would insure the cooperation between the two departments that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON] speaks of. There should be provision for the transfer of funds. I imagine the reason it is not done in this case is because some Senators are on the job.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman is correct in his last statement. Is not this the fact in regard to this matter, that the Department of Agriculture carries a large sum for the extermination of the boll weevil? Would it require an extra appropriation simply by adopting the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]? Could we not authorize the Department of Agriculture to devote itself to the purpose indicated?

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as the boll weevil is concerned, there would be the same practical effect if that other appropriation were used. If necessary, we could carry some authorization for transfer of funds.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is my understanding that the Agricultural appropriation bill contained an item of that kind, which was stricken out in conference. I hope the gentleman from Texas has noted the fact that the language of the appropriation says this money shall be used in completing the job.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; but probably different language will be used in the next appropriation bill as an excuse to continue it, and for the reason that I opposed it a year ago and expressed the hope that it would be discontinued—if the gentleman will yield to me further—I want now to express my protest. I am going to vote against the amendment and against the motion to recede and concur, and I hope the House will decline to recede and concur and let the committee of conference go back and insist on their disagreement to this waste of $25,000, and insist that it go out of the bill.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I simply want to take up what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON] suggested, and that is the cooperative work between the Department of Agriculture and the War Department relative to the boll-weevil control. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] refers to the item of $40,000 which was appropriated a year ago, providing for cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the War Department relative to insect control by the use of airplanes. However that was adopted, it saved money to the Treasury, because the War Department had the airplanes and the Department of Agriculture had the entomologists and the other branches of the service.

The experiments on insect control by the use of airplane have been developed to such an extent that now in various portions of the cotton belt and that of fruit production in Georgia private corporations have been organized and are dusting thousands of acres of cotton and of orchards of various fruits.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, I do not want to get the two questions confused. The matter that the gentleman is referring to has no connection with this expense.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. It refers to what the gentleman suggested as to duplication between the Department of Agriculture and the War Department. It works out successfully sometimes when activities are coordinated, and I think the gentleman from Texas fails to distinguish between coordination and duplication.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether there is any information on the question of whether the Chemical Warfare fund would be used on the corn borer?

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. WINGO rose.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I appreciate the difficulties that confront the very able chairman of the committee in charge of the bill. Some cotton Senators have put this on the bill and are insisting on its retention. I am not criticizing my friend from Kansas and I am not criticizing General Fries, who is a very able officer; but as one representing a cotton constituency, I am not going to be humiliated by sitting here quietly and accepting a lot of political bunk.

My cotton farmers do not want public funds squandered in any such extravagant and nonsensical way as having the chemical division of the Army tell them how to exterminate the boll weevil. I will tell you the kind of a boll weevil this is intended to exterminate. It is a political boll weevil. [Applause.] That is all on earth it is.

I have never asked this House during all of my service here, and I shall never ask it, to do something to aid the cotton farmers unless I am convinced personally it is both practical and deserving.

Gentlemen, it is humiliating to have the cotton people of the South put in the attitude of wanting the Federal Treasury to spend $25,000 for a bunch of Army experts out here somewhere experimenting on chemicals to kill the boll weevil.

The Agricultural Department has chemists who can give us the chemical formulas. They can do it, and it is absurd to say that you are going to ask the War Department to chase down the boll weevil. It would be about as practical to order out the Cavalry and have it attempt to catch each weevil and pull off its left hind leg.

Gentlemen, I will be perfectly frank with you. This is a piece of political bunk, and I do not want any man to vote for it because he thinks he wants to help the cotton growers of the South. This is to kill the political boll weevil of some southern politician. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Wingo) there were—ayes 41, noes 26.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fourteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34, page 70, line 3, strike out "$300,000" and insert "$375,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves to recede from Senate amendment No. 84, and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "$310,000: Provided, That not to exceed $2,000 of this sum shall be expended for travel of officers of the War Department General Staff in connection with the National Guard."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 48, page 95, insert in line 1: "The limit of cost fixed for the completion of the survey of the Tennessee River and its tributaries as recommended in House Document No. 319, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, is hereby increased to $790,800 and the survey extended to include tributaries with a drainage area of about 100 square miles, and the funds for the prosecution of this work within the limit above set out may be allotted from appropriations heretofore, herein, or hereafter made by Congress for the improvement, preservation, and maintenance of rivers and harbors: Provided, That reports of such survey or surveys may be made to the Congress from time to time, but the Engineer Department shall not give out information as to said surveys to other persons until after a report, partial or final, shall be made to the Congress."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur. The motion was agreed to.

CONDUCT OF JUDGE GEORGE W. ENGLISH

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit a resolution from the Judiciary Committee with reference to the impeachment proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 201

Resolved, That EARL C. MICHENER, W. D. BOIES, IRA G. HERSEY, C. ELLIS MOORE, GEORGE R. STOBBS, HATTON W. SUMNERS, ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, JOHN N. TILLMAN, and FRED H. DOMINICK, Members of this House, be, and they are hereby, appointed managers to conduct the impeachment against George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois; that said managers are hereby instructed to appear before the Senate of the United States and at the bar thereof in the name of the House of Representatives and of all the people of the United States to impeach the said George W. English of misdemeanors in office and to exhibit to the Senate of the United States the articles of impeachment against said judge which have been agreed upon by the House; and that the said managers do demand that the Senate take order for the appearance of said George W. English to answer said impeachment, and demand his impeachment, conviction, and removal from office.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution covering the sending of notice to the Senate of the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 204

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that this House has impeached George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois for misdemeanors in office, and that the House has adopted articles of impeachment against said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, which the managers on the part of the House have been directed to carry to the Senate, and that EARL C. MICHENER, W. D. BOIES, IRA G. HERSEY, C. ELLIS MOORE, GEORGE R. STOBBS, HATTON W. SUMNERS, ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, JOHN N. TILLMAN, and FRED H. DOMINICK, Members of this House, have been appointed such managers.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution from the Judiciary Committee covering the expenses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 205

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House in the matter of the impeachment of George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois, be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ legal, clerical, and other necessary assistants and to incur such expenses as may be necessary in the preparation and conduct of the case, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers approved by the managers, and the managers have power to send for persons and papers, and also that the managers have authority to file with the Secretary of the Senate, on the part of the House of Representatives, any subsequent pleadings which they shall deem necessary.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, is there not to be a limit placed upon the expenditures authorized by this resolution?

Mr. GRAHAM. There never has been. A resolution in this form has been the one adopted heretofore.

Mr. HASTINGS. In former impeachments, then, there has never been a limit placed upon the amount that those representing the House have been authorized to expend?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is my recollection, sir.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is there a limit on the number of attorneys who may be employed by the committee, or is it left in their discretion?

Mr. GRAHAM. I doubt if there will be any attorneys employed in this case.

Mr. HASTINGS. I understood from the reading of the resolution they are authorized to employ legal assistance.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes; legal assistance.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does that contemplate the employment of attorneys to assist the managers in prosecuting the case before the Senate?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would think so. It has been done.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is that in contemplation in this case?

Mr. GRAHAM. I can not tell. That is a matter for the managers whom you have selected. I think we can safely trust this board of managers to conduct this matter in a spirit of economy and fairness and in an effort to do justice.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, just one word further. I am not on the Committee on the Judiciary, but it does seem to me the House ought to put some limit upon these expenditures.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think this ought to be considered by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is a privileged resolution. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PENSIONS

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am for pensions. If it did not cost so much, I would be for more pensions; but it occurs to me that there must be a limit somewhere, and in granting pensions we must take into consideration where the money is coming from to pay the pensions. We must take into consideration the fact that whenever we pay out money to one class of people we must collect that money from other people. The Government has no money of its own except as it raises it by taxation of the people, and there are two sides to the question of pensions.

We want to do what we should do for the men who have defended the flag, who have fought the battles of the country. For them and for their dependents we can hardly do too much, but we must take into consideration the fact that whatever we pay out, the money must be raised from some other source. I would be glad if we could give all the pensions that are asked by the Grand Army of the Republic for the survivors of the Civil War and for their widows and dependents; but I doubt very much whether under existing circumstances we ought to add from $90,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year to the pension roll at this session of Congress.

I know I am criticized severely because as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions no action has been taken during the present session of Congress to report a Civil War pension bill increasing pensions all along the line. It may be well, perhaps, for me to recite something of the pension legislation in the past few years. It has been my privilege to be a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions for something more than 20 years, and for the past 7 years chairman of that committee. I know something of the legislation and what has been done during this time.

When I became a member of this committee, for instance, there was no service pension. There was no pension except for disability, or perhaps a part way service pension for disability not incurred in the service. The pension of a private soldier at that time for disability not incurred in the service was from $6 to $12 a month; $12 a month for total disability and graded from $6 up. Even for disability incurred in the service the original pensions were for very small amounts. At different times during the years following bills have been passed and the pensions of the Civil War soldiers increased from time to time, based sometimes on age, sometimes on length of service, until the Sherwood dollar-a-day pension bill was passed, providing a pension for most of the veterans of $30 a month.

And there the matter rested, so far as pensions for veterans was concerned, until the act of May 1, 1920. That was the Fuller bill introduced by me as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, passed through the House under suspension of the rules, passed the Senate, and went to the President and became the act of May 1, 1920. That bill provided for a pension of $50 a month for every veteran of the Civil War who served 90 days or more, and if totally disabled, $72 a month. It was the most liberal service pension bill that ever was passed by any legislative body in the world. [Applause.]

The pension of the widows of veterans at the time when I first became a member of that committee was $8 a month, provided they had less than $250 a year income; after a while it was increased to $12 a month and later by other legislation to $20, then to $25, and by the act of May 1, 1920, to $30 a month, without any property qualification. So that under that law every widow of a veteran of the Civil War, although not married to the veteran until 40 years after the close of the war, has a pension under that law of $30 a month.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Has the gentleman any statistics to show what proportion of the Civil War soldiers are receiving $72 a month?

Mr. FULLER. I think a majority of them. Nearly all are getting or soon will get $72 a month. If they show they are so disabled to the extent of requiring personal attendance, they get $72.

Now, I refer to this because of an attack made upon me by professional pension people of the National Tribune, a paper published in the city of Washington ostensibly in the interest of the veterans. I received a copy of that paper under date of April 1 by special delivery through the mail. On the first page is a picture of a cemetery and a funeral and grave and all the habiliments of mourning and the statement:

Chairman FULLER is right. For these the increase is not necessary.

Now, I resent that brutal thing. I resent the implication that I am responsible for the death of veterans and widows. After the service that I have rendered here, after what I have done, it is rank injustice from these people. [Applause.]

They sent out a circular under the date of March 30, a few days ago, to all of the old veterans in which they say that every line of pension legislation that has been written into the statute books of the United States for the past 40 years has been the direct result of the efforts of the National Tribune's boldly aggressive, unceasing, and untiring advocacy. They say the act of May 1, 1920, came after a long, hard fight made by the National Tribune for increases that would in a measure be commensurate with the high cost of living. They say 116,000 Civil War survivors and 235,000 Civil War widows are now receiving the benefit of this fight made for them by the National Tribune.

Now that was the Fuller bill. [Applause.] That was the bill that I drafted and put through, and here I am held responsible because the soldiers or veterans and widows are dying in their old age. I am held responsible by that paper, and solely responsible because no bill has been reported out this session for a further general increase of Civil War pensions. They do not expect such a bill to pass. The longer they can keep the matter pending, the more claim they will make of what they are doing for the veterans and widows. They are more interested in getting cash from the veterans and widows than for them. Their claim of great influence in securing pension legislation is false. They say "Send your $2 for a year's subscription now." [Laughter.] I say that every dollar these people have gotten from the old soldiers and the widows for subscriptions has been gotten under false pretenses. I deny that they have been responsible for all pension legislation, as they claim. If they ever had any influence on legislation at all, that influence was dissipated when they begged of all the old veterans and widows to contribute at least $1 apiece or from $1 to $5 for the chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions. They collected not less than $100,000 from pensioners for the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. And then—I do not know what was done with that vast sum of money which they got from the widows and the veterans in a $1 and $5 contribution, ostensibly for the chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions—I do not know what was done with it. I do not know what kind of an accounting there was, but in their last letter, dated a few days ago, begging for financial assistance from veterans and widows to aid them in securing increases of pension, and after the last dollar of contributions to the Bursum fund was paid in, at the head of their circular letter appears the name "National Tribune, Holm O. Bursum, president." Comment would be superfluous. What do you think of that? Then talk about influence on Congress! Why, Gen. Johnny Clem comes around here telling members of my committee how to force bills out of the committee, and tells them what to do—not that they want any more bills passed, but in order to get more subscriptions for that vile paper. Note this full-page advertisement. Any paper that would publish that advertisement and send it into the homes of this country ought not to be permitted to go through the mails of the country. [Applause.] Look at the character of ads carried here in order to get money out of the old veterans. No decent paper would accept such ads at any price. I say the Post Office Department ought to take notice and see that the paper is suppressed from the mails for publishing indecent and obscene ads.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FULLER. What is it?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman referred to Gen. John Clem?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman know that he entered the Union Army at the age of 10 years, and that for extraordinary bravery in the Battle of Shiloh was made a sergeant; that he not only served through that war but served through the Spanish-American War and through the World War?

Mr. FULLER. And he is entitled to all credit for that, and I give him all that credit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] yesterday, if I remember correctly, praised the editor, or one of the editors, of the Tribune. Then I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] does not agree with his colleague from Kentucky as to the work that is being done by the Tribune in advancing the cause of the pensioners?

Mr. FULLER. I do not get the point. I do not get the gentleman's question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In view of the statements made on the floor here yesterday, I asked the gentleman whether or not he intends to condemn all of the editorial staff of the National Tribune?

Mr. FULLER. I do not know who they are. I know Johnny Clem and I know John McElroy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one other question. In the issue of April 1, from which the gentleman just read, there appears a letter from my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Roy G. Fitzgerald], in which he states that the clerk of our committee advised him to this effect:

I called the clerk of the Invalid Pensions Committee, and he informed me that hearings were held on the Elliott bill, but that nothing further was done after the hearings were held. He explained that the reason that nothing further was being done was because the increase did not seem necessary in the eyes of the members.

I ask the gentleman, in connection with that, whether or not that quotation from Mr. Roy G. Fitzgerald's letter correctly expresses the views of the individual members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. FULLER. I do not know whether the clerk ever made any such break as that. I doubt very much if he ever did. I can not answer for the opinions of individual members of the committee. So far as the chairman of that committee is concerned, he is in favor of granting all the pensions that can reasonably be granted to the veterans of the Civil War and their widows, and I am not opposing any increase that members of the committee or of the House may think justified.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can the gentleman tell us at this time when the Invalid Pensions Committee will meet to consider the Elliott bill?

Mr. FULLER. The committee will meet next Friday, and if the committee desires to report out any bill nobody, so far as I know, will object. I certainly will not. I have not tried to prevent them from reporting out any bill. I simply thought myself that under present circumstances it is not advisable to increase the pension roll of the United States by from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year by a bill granting very large increases all along the line.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman think in all fairness that the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions should take the responsibility for not holding further hearings on the Elliott bill?

Mr. FULLER. I do not know. If the committee desires to have further hearings, it is for them to say; not for me. The committee may take whatever action they may think proper. With reference to the publishers of the National Tribune, they are in the pension business for profit; they have grown rich and prosperous from the pensions paid by a grateful Government to the Nation's defenders and to their dependents. It is not for them to dictate what shall be done. It is not for them to say that we shall pass such and such a bill. I am willing to do whatever is thought best for the veterans and for the widows of the Civil War. It seems to me that a pension of $50 a month for every veteran who served 90 days, of $72 a month as a mere service pension for a man who served perhaps 90 days and never suffered injury in the service is a liberal pension. I do not know that it ought to be increased. We must consider not alone what we ought to do for the Nation's defenders and for their dependents, but we must consider the taxpayer as well, and all of the people, and do whatever is for the best. I am not opposing pensions. I am simply not advocating now any further great increase in the pension roll.

Yesterday by action of the House, if it passes the Senate and becomes a law, we added something over $18,000,000 to the pension roll of the United States for the pensioners of the Spanish-American War. I was glad to vote for that bill. I was glad that it passed the House unanimously. There is now pending before the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill proposing to materially increase the pensions of the maimed soldiers of all the wars, the Civil War and all other wars, and of those who become totally disabled or blind.

That bill has passed the Senate, and it will be reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I think it will pass the House.

How much further we ought to go on the pension question at this session of Congress is for the House to determine. I simply decline to be held responsible for everything that is not done. I decline to take the responsibility for the death of the old veterans and widows, as given me by the National Tribune. They can talk; they want more subscribers; they want to get more money from the old veterans and widows. They send out these appeals every few days, "Subscribe for the Tribune." "It takes a vast amount of money," they say. They want more pensions. "You must pay." I have had old ladies come to ask me if it was absolutely necessary for them to send $2 to the Tribune in order to get a pension, and I have taken the liberty sometimes to tell them it was not necessary; that it did not make any difference whatever as to their pensions.

I suspect that is one reason why the National Tribune has seen fit to attack me on every conceivable occasion during the past two or three years. I defy them. I will do whatever I think I ought to do as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and as a Member of this House, but I will not be dictated to by John McElroy or Johnny Clem. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

ASSISTANT TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate bill 3547, to change the title of Deputy Assistant Treasurer of the United States to Assistant Treasurer of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that a similar bill, a House bill, has been reported favorably?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is identical with the House bill now on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title Deputy Assistant Treasurer of the United States as designated by the act approved March 3, 1901, as amended by the act approved July 18, 1914, be, and the same is hereby, changed and shall hereafter be designated as Assistant Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I may explain to the House that this is simply a change of the title from the words "Deputy Assistant Treasurer" to the words "Assistant Treasurer." It has the approval of the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the similar House bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

GRAIN AND SEEDS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2465, strike out all after the enacting clause, and substitute the bill H. R. 10541, now on the Union Calendar, and ask to have the substitute considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 2465 and substitute for it House bill 10541 and consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. May we have the bill reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10541) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to modify my request and ask to strike out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill, substitute the provisions of the House bill, and consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan modifies his request, and it now is to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 2465, strike out all after the enacting clause, substitute the provisions of House bill 10541, and consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does this bill which the gentleman proposes to substitute have the unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. MAPES. It has. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that in substance it is the same as the Senate bill. The House committee considered an identical bill with the Senate bill. After consideration of it we thought it better to redraft it. But the House bill is, in substance, the same as the Senate bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—is this an attempt on the part of the House to copy cat the Senate? Because, in the case of almost every bill that we send over there, where they have a bill of the same import on the calendar, they strike out all of the House bill and insert in lieu thereof a Senate bill. If the Senate bill is a good bill and it does what the House wants to do, why not adopt it and thus end the matter?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, those who have considered this legislation considered the House bill much better in a lot of particulars. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I was unconscious of the practice he refers to in the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. I have observed it several times here in the last nine years.

Mr. MAPES. This is a much better bill, we think.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, is amended (a) by striking out the words "red top" wherever such words appear in such section and (b) by inserting, after the word "flax" in the second proviso of such section a comma and the words "broomcorn millet, early fortune millet."

Sec. 2. Such act of August 24, 1912, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"Sec. 5. (a) On and after the effective date of this subdivision the importation into the United States of seeds of alfalfa or red clover, or any mixture of seeds containing 10 per cent or more of the seeds of alfalfa and/or red clover, is prohibited unless such seeds are colored in such manner and to such extent as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture, after public hearing, determines that seeds of alfalfa or red clover from any foreign country or region are not adapted for general agricultural use in the United States he shall publish such determination. On and after the expiration of 90 days after the date of such publication and until such determination is revoked the importation into the United States of any of such seeds, or of any mixture of seeds containing 10 per cent or more of such seeds of alfalfa and/or red clover, is prohibited, unless at least 10 per cent of the seeds in each container is stained a red color, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent the importation into the United States of any seeds the importation of which is prohibited.

"(d) Subdivision (a) of this section shall become effective upon the expiration of 90 days after the date of the passage of this amendatory act.

"Sec. 6. (a) No person shall transport, deliver for transportation, sell, or offer for sale, in interstate commerce, any seed which is misbranded within the meaning of this section; except that this section shall not apply to any common carrier in respect of any seed transported or delivered for transportation in the ordinary course of its business as a common carrier.

"(b) Any misbranded seed shall be liable to be proceeded against in the district court of the United States for any judicial district in which it is found, and to be seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation, if such seed is being—

"(1) Transported in interstate commerce; or

"(2) Held for sale or exchange after having been so transported.

"(c) If such seed is condemned by the court as misbranded, it shall be disposed of in the discretion of the court—

"(1) By sale; or

"(2) By delivery to the owner thereof upon the payment of the legal costs and charges, and the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient bond to the effect that such seed will not be sold or disposed of in any jurisdiction contrary to the provisions of this act or the laws of such jurisdiction; or

"(3) By destruction.

"(d) If such seed is disposed of by sale, the proceeds of the sale, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(e) Proceedings in such libel cases shall conform, as nearly as may be, to suits in rem in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury on any issue of fact if the value in controversy exceeds $20; and facts so tried shall not be reexamined other than in accordance with the rules of the common law. All such proceedings shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States and, under its direction, other courts of the United States are authorized to prescribe rules regulating such proceedings in any particular not provided by law.

"(f) As used in this section—

"(1) The term 'person' means individual, partnership, corporation, or association;

"(2) The term 'interstate commerce' means commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any other State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia; and

"(3) The term 'district court of the United States' includes any court exercising the powers of a district court of the United States.

"(g) For the purposes of this section, seed shall be held to be misbranded if—

"(1) The container thereof, or the invoice relating thereto, or any advertising pertaining thereto, bears or contains any statement, design, or device that is false and fraudulent; or

"(2) If such seed is required to be colored, under the provisions of section 5 and the regulations issued thereunder, and is not so colored; or

"(3) If such seed is colored in imitation of seed required to be colored under the provisions of section 5 and the regulations issued thereunder.

"(h) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section.

"(i) This section shall take effect upon the date of the passage of this amendatory act; but no penalty or condemnation shall be enforced for any violation of this section occurring within 90 days after such date."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment by inserting in line 8, on page 2, after the word "alfalfa," the word "cotton," and I am going to give the House my reasons for doing so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 2, line 8, after the word "alfalfa," insert the word "cotton."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in a recent conversation which I had with a very distinguished citizen of our country, who has spent several years in the Diplomatic Service in South America, he gave me this astounding information, which I should at least like the Members from the cotton-growing States to hear. He said that a former President of the Brazilian Republic undertook a program of the distribution of cottonseed, such as we have had in former times by the Department of Agriculture. Unfortunately, they chanced to get hold of some seeds that were infected with the pink bollworm, and as a result they scattered the pink bollworm all over the Brazilian Republic, and he said that to-day it is paralyzing cotton production in that great country. If that is the case, it seems to me we ought to protect ourselves against the importation of cottonseed until that condition is suppressed or controlled.

We have appropriated thousands of dollars to destroy or to zone or to try to get rid of the pink bollworm. Wherever he goes he is deadly. He is not like the boll weevil. It is impossible to raise cotton there again, at least, for a great number of years, and we are not sure that it will be possible at any time in the future to raise cotton in those areas that have been infected by the pink bollworm. So it seems to me we ought to at least throw that small protection around our cotton growers, who represent one of the greatest agricultural industries in the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I did not hear the gentleman's amendment. Will he explain the way it will affect the matter?

Mr. RANKIN. This bill is intended to prevent the shipment into the United States of alfalfa seed and red clover seed unless they are colored or so marked that everyone will know they are imported. That is done in order to warn the farmers that whenever they buy these seeds they are taking the risk of planting in their fields seeds that are either defective or infected with the sundry diseases that are detrimental to those crops. I am only asking in this amendment that they give the same protection to the cotton growers of the South against the most deadly pest that has ever been known so far as cotton growing is concerned.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Does not the law take care of that so far as the Agricultural Department is concerned?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think so. If it did, we would not have this bill before the House.

Mr. BURTNESSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I had in mind the very question that the gentleman from New York has just asked, whether protection against evils of that sort is not now provided by the quarantine regulations and things of that sort. This bill is not intended to reach any evils that may arise from diseases of seeds, or anything of that sort. Those evils are covered by special provisions of the law. This is simply intended to act as a warning to the farmers. It is not intended as any protection against diseases, or something of that sort, but rather as a warning to the farmer in determining whether the seed is adaptable in a climatic way and for the other purposes that he intends to put it to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. If that is the case, then there is a greater reason for my amendment than there is for the original bill, because it is to warn our people against the dangers of imported seed. If the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] lived in a cotton-growing State and knew just what the pink boll-worm pest means, he would understand the necessity for this legislation. It is merely to warn our people against planting imported seed likely to be infected with this pest.

Mr. BURTNESS. My point is this: That this sort of protection would not be sufficient for that purpose at all. The kind of protection the gentleman needs to cover the evil he speaks of is an absolute prohibition against its coming into this country at all, and I think you have that sort of protection in the law to-day.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think so, and an amendment of that kind would not be in order on this bill. I am merely asking that you give us this small protection, this warning against these imported seeds, before it is everlastingly too late. If you were to plant one field in every county in the United States in cottonseed infected with the pink boll worm you would practically destroy the cotton industry of America, possibly for all time to come. I seriously doubt whether we could ever get rid of it. I merely ask this protection in order that we may not take the chance of experiencing that direful calamity.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Are you also troubled in the cotton States with unfertile seeds; that is, seeds imported from foreign countries but not adapted to that locality?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know about that. We plant so many more cotton seed than we expect to come up that we seldom know to what extent they are faulty.

Mr. COLTON. We have that difficulty in the alfalfa-growing sections and we are vitally interested.

Mr. RANKIN. This amendment would not hurt you at all.

Mr. COLTON. I think not.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House at this time, but I would like to say just a word. The seeds included in this bill, alfalfa and red clover, are included upon the recommendation of the Agricultural Department after years of study and experience, and after experiments by many different State agricultural experiment stations in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture. The bill goes as far as the Agricultural Department is ready to go at the present time.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. There is not a member of the Agricultural Department, so far as I know, who is high up in that department from the cotton-growing States. I am asking for this protection before it is too late.

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman that on the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that considered the legislation there was a gentleman from the cotton-growing section, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS]. He took a very active and intelligent part during the hearings and other consideration of the bill by the committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; but the chances are the gentleman from Arkansas was not aware of the condition which this former diplomat to a South American Republic assures me exists throughout that country to-day.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman think legislation ought to be passed by Congress based only upon a more or less casual remark of the kind the gentleman has referred to and without being recommended by the department and the experts who have direct jurisdiction over the enforcement of it?

Mr. RANKIN. So far as the experts are concerned, Mr. Speaker, if we waited for experts to solve our agricultural problems, I am prone to believe we would be in a terrible shape in this country. If we are going to wait for these experts to let it dawn upon them in an indirect way that the Brazilian Republic is infected with this dangerous disease or this pest to the cotton crop, and then wait for them to send men down there to investigate, sending a lot of fellows down there who do not know anything about cotton, to come back here a year or two from now, or three or five years, to report on this proposition, and then bring it before the House, or before a committee, and hold hearings and go on through another year or two, the chances are that this pest will be imported into the United States in great abundance, and it will be too late to protect our cotton growers against a pest of this kind before we could get any action.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the subcommittee that reported this bill did not consider the cottonseed proposition. No one suggested to the committee that it be included in this bill. I do not think that it is good legislation to put on an amendment of this kind without giving it more careful consideration than we are able to give it on the floor of the House. However, I do not want to take up the time of the House this afternoon in any lengthy discussion. The Committee on Appropriations is anxious to go on with the legislative appropriation bill. I will only say that this bill follows the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture, and I think the experience of the House is that the Department of Agriculture does not hesitate to recommend legislation whenever it considers such legislation desirable. I am willing to submit the matter to a vote of the House without any further discussion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 33, noes 52.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present, and I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 167, answered "present" 2, not voting 118, as follows:

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. VARE. I therefore withdraw my vote of ye and ask to be recorded as present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I have made this pro forma motion solely for the purpose of giving a little information to the House which was not available when the amendment just voted upon was proposed. During the roll call I took the liberty of calling up Doctor Taylor, of the Department of Agriculture, the chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, which is in general charge of the enforcement of legislation pertaining to the importation of seeds, and he told me that under the present quarantine laws there are quarantine regulations against the importation of cottonseed from areas infested with boll weevil. In fact, the regulations are so strict that no cottonseed can be imported at the present time into this country for seeding purposes except possibly some long-staple cottonseed from Egypt, where the seed is used in the southwestern sections of the country. In order to import cottonseed at all, even for manufacturing purposes, the importer must have some sort of permit, and then only for specific places where it may be used in crushers for such purposes.

As suggested in the colloquy which occurred before the vote between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and myself, it is, of course, plain that seed as unfit as cottonseed infected with boll weevil, should not be permitted to come in with or without staining, but should be absolutely prohibited from being imported into the country at all. That is, in fact, the present policy both as laid down by the laws of the country as well as by the regulations of the department under the quarantine laws. This bill does not reach that aspect but covers an entirely different but important feature.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Is this post-mortem in order?

The SPEAKER. A motion to strike out the last word is in order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from North Dakota about a subject which he admits he does not know anything, I desire to say that this amendment possibly would not have cost another dollar. It might not have kept out a pound of cottonseed. The present regulations do not amply protect the cotton growers against the pink boll worm, the most deadly pest that the cotton plant has ever known. It would have warned the farmers against these imported seed.

By your vote you have refused us the small amount of protection that we ask here for the cotton farmers of the country, which possibly would not have cost this Government a dollar. I am not willing for Doctor Taylor or anyone else to come here and soothe the House by saying we are already protected by regulations. These other seeds are also protected by regulations; but if the pink boll worm should be transplanted from a South American country into the middle of Egypt, there is no way under the shining sun to protect the cotton growers of America from that poison until the Egyptian Government or the people in authority there are willing to come out and admit that their country is infected with it, which they likely would not do until it is everlastingly too late.

Mr. BLACK of Texas and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield first to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] if I have any time remaining.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I just want to make the statement it is my understanding that every bushel of cottonseed that is imported into the United States is disinfected now by quarantine officers of the Department of Agriculture, and I think this has been the case for some time.

Mr. RANKIN. There may be some method of disinfection; but if you know anything about the pink boll worm, you are bound to know that the kind of disinfection which they administer to cottonseed for crushing purposes only will not destroy the germ of the pink boll worm.

If these pink boll-worm infected seeds are sent out through the country, it simply means that wherever these germs are planted in that area the growing of cotton is practically a thing of the past.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman from Mississippi would send a small package of cottonseed to the gentleman from South Dakota so that he can see what they look like.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, recognizing the desire of the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the legislative appropriation bill to finish general debate at the earliest possible moment, I shall not take up any time in explaining the provisions of H. R. 8118 or its amended form, H. R. 10541.

On January 30 I took occasion under general debate on the agricultural appropriation bill to explain in some detail the conditions that make this legislation necessary, and also outlined the various provisions of the measure now under consideration. Subsequent to the introduction of H. R. 8118 extended hearings were held by a subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, at which the testimony of representatives of the Department of Agriculture, Federated Seed Service, Safe-seed (Inc.), the American Farm Bureau Federation, and the National Grange was given in support. Testimony in opposition to the measure was also taken from Mr. Curtis Nye Smith, of Boston, Mass., representing the American Seed Trade Association, and from a few representatives of wholesale seed houses.

After full consideration of the testimony a subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reported H. R. 8118 in amended form, and H. R. 10541 was reintroduced in the House incorporating these amendments. In this form the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce unanimously reported the bill to the House as it is now presented for amendment to Senate bill 2465. Every Member of the House is familiar in a general way with the importance to the country of the two crops that are particularly affected by the provisions of this bill, namely, red clover and alfalfa. Just a glance at the production figures for 1925 will refresh our minds on this point.

There was a production in that year of 8,341,000 acres of clear clover hay, and 16,814,000 acres of mixed hay. Counting one-half the acreage of mixed clover and timothy hay as clover and combining this with the acreage of clear clover hay, we have a total of 16,750,000 acres of clover hay produced in one year in the United States. The estimated yield from this acreage is 21,230,000 tons. Pricing it at $14.75 per ton gives a total of $313,257,250. To these significant figures of the clover crop for 1925 should be added the production of clover seed, which is estimated at 85,000,000 pounds. At the conservative figure of 25 cents per pound, an additional sum of $21,250,000 is to be credited to clover production.

Our acreage of alfalfa for 1925 was 11,040,000 acres, and the yield 28,858,000 tons. Pricing alfalfa hay at $13.75 per ton gives us a total of $396,797,500. To this should be added the estimated yield of alfalfa seed for 1925 of 48,000,000 pounds. At 20 cents per pound, this represents an additional value of $9,600,000 to be credited to alfalfa production. The grand total involved in both hay and seed production in these two crops, therefore, closely approaches three-quarters of a billion dollars—to be exact, $740,904,750. These figures must impress even the casual reader with the importance of safeguarding the seed from which these two important crops are grown.

Our clover-seed requirements each year amount to practically 100,000,000 pounds. Our domestic production averages 85,000,000 pounds. In alfalfa our annual consumption is approximately 40,000,000 and our average production 8,000,000. It will, therefore, be observed that on the average we must import 15,000,000 of red clover seed each year. Being under the necessity of importing practically 15 per cent of our clover seed each year, it is evident that the greatest care should be exercised in securing seed that is adaptable to the wide range of climatic conditions prevailing in the sections where clover can be grown advantageously.

Great care needs to be exercised in the selection of seed not only because of the importance of the crop so far as its actual sale and feeding value is concerned, but also because of the fact that it is relied upon very strongly to rebuild the soil. No successful farmer in the country overlooks the value of red clover as an important crop in his rotation, nor can he forget the value of alfalfa as a soil builder. The use of poor and unadapted seed not only causes the farmer to lose the first cost of such seed but also the labor involved in its sowing and the loss in the rotation. For many years farmers in the northern section of the country have complained of unusual winter killing of both clover and alfalfa. Various reasons have been assigned for this heavy loss—poor soil conditions, so-called clover sickness, and various other causes. At last the experiment stations and scientific societies took up the study of the matter and carried on elaborate experiments with both native and imported clover and alfalfa seeds. These experiments developed the fact that one outstanding cause of the high percentage of crop loss was due to imported seed grown under climatic conditions entirely different than those prevailing in the northern sections of the country. Italian seed was especially susceptible to winter killing. Numbers of experiments have shown an almost complete loss of Italian seeds and a high percentage of French seeds, particularly those grown in southern France. In contrast with a heavy percentage of winter killing of Italian and French seed, elaborate experiments conducted under the same conditions as those under which the French and Italian strains were tested have shown our domestic seed of pure northern origin to be particularly adapted to our winter conditions. The tests have uniformly shown 80 to 90 per cent of a stand the second season for clover and enduring high percentages of alfalfa through succeeding seasons.

It is impossible even for the greatest expert in seeds to detect Italian or French seed from the native grown by mere inspection. It can only be identified after being planted and grown. In view of heavy importations from both Italy and France, it has therefore seemed but fair that some plan should be devised whereby dealers, wholesalers, retailers, and consumers might know with certainty the origin of seed. Additional reason for this legislation is found in the practice of a few unscrupulous dealers who are said to have purchased large quantities of Italian and French clover seed, and after mixing it with domestic seed have sold it under various brands to unsuspecting dealers, and they in turn have passed it on to farmers, with the disastrous results above noted. The loss sustained by farmers because of this practice would undoubtedly run into millions of dollars, as a very considerable percentage of this imported seed is worthless so far as securing a stand of clover or alfalfa is concerned. Under any plan of inspection heretofore possible the ultimate consumer could not be assured of purchasing adapted seed of known origin. By a simple process of changing seed from one bag to another or exchanging tags and labels foreign seed could be sold in domestic containers or under domestic labels. Experiments by the Swedish Government in injecting a small percentage of eosin dyes into original containers of seed make it possible to identify importations. Proof of the fact that there has been sharp practice in the matter of adulterating or "blending" imported seed with that of domestic production is clearly indicated in the following resolutions adopted by the American Society of Agronomy at its last annual meeting in December, 1925. This society is the leading organization in the country dealing with the scientific problems of agriculture, and its statements therefore have unusual weight:

Whereas carefully conducted investigations by members of this society have shown that seeds from southern Europe, South America, and other foreign countries are often not adapted to use in the United States; and

Whereas the substitution of such seeds for those of other origin which are suitable for use by American farmers by unscrupulous seed dealers is now often done, thereby causing heavy financial losses to users of such seed; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Society of Agronomy is heartily in favor of national and State legislation which will compel the coloring or otherwise labeling of such imported seed so that it can not be substituted for other seed without the knowledge of the purchaser; and

Resolved, That the secretary of the society be requested to call this resolution to the attention of any and all appropriate commercial and legislative organizations.

It is the belief of the supporters of this bill that its provisions will make it possible for the ultimate consumer to know definitely whether he is purchasing domestic or foreign grown seed. We follow this same practice in connection with our manufactured imports and require imported articles to bear unmistakable proof of the country of manufacture. Certainly no one can deny the necessity of extending the same measure of protection to so important a factor in our farm operations as clover and alfalfa seed.

Under the provisions of H. R. 10541 all imported seed must have at least 1 per cent stain to distinguish it as imported. Should the Department of Agriculture, after a thorough test of the adaptability of either clover or alfalfa seed from any country, determine that it is unsuited to our climatic conditions, it must require at least 10 per cent of the seed from that particular country to be dyed red, thereby putting every purchaser of such seed on notice that it is absolutely inadaptible.

Objection was made by some of the importers during the hearings against putting the "skull and cross bones" against all imported seed. In reply it may easily be seen that foreign seed from certain countries may have a distinct value and the dyeing of a certain percentage will mark it with this distinction just as in our own country many articles bearing particular brands have come to have a very high value and the trademarks they bear are of great importance. The outstanding question is the character of the seed itself. It is inconceivable that harm will be done to any country whose clover and alfalfa seed is adaptable. On the other hand, it is believed that a premium would be placed upon the seed coming from countries having similar climatic conditions with our own.

Mr. Speaker, by no stretch of the imagination can this bill be classed under the heading of farm-relief legislation, but I am nevertheless convinced that every grower of alfalfa and red clover in the United States will enthusiastically acclaim this legislation when its provisions are fully understood. It will add literally millions to our national income in increased production. More than this, however, it will insure the maintenance of crop rotations which has become so well fixed in agricultural practice, and will insure the maintenance of soil fertility which after all is the basis of a continuing and prosperous agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAPES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

And pending that I ask unanimous consent that further general debate on the bill may be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, and pending that asks unanimous consent that further general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask whether Calendar Wednesday will be dispensed with?

Mr. TILSON. I have not intended to ask to dispense with Calendar Wednesday and shall not do it without the consent of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BLANTON. Then this bill will go over until Thursday?

Mr. TILSON. Until Thursday morning.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand the program, notwithstanding the statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut, with reference to this bill going over until Thursday, that it is the intention to bring up a rule on the aviation bill on Thursday?

Mr. TILSON. As soon as this bill is finished.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This bill will have the right of way after Wednesday until concluded?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; and the aviation rule will come up as soon as this bill is concluded, which I hope will be speedily.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the gentleman that three hours' additional general debate will be sufficient. We have only had 23½ hours' general debate, and I think three hours more ought to be sufficient. [Laughter.]

The motion of Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HAWLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the legislative appropriation bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10425) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, yesterday morning I received, and I assume other Members received, letters from the American Legion urging the immediate passage by the Congress of H. R. 10277, H. R. 10240, and H. R. 4548.

H. R. 10277, by Mr. GREEN of Iowa, amends the World War adjusted compensation act in several much-needed particulars. The bill aims to equalize the benefits of the act among the dependents of the veterans, prevents the disallowance or reduction of claims through mere technicalities; it either very much liberalizes or entirely does away with the dependency showing now required to be made. The American Legion says of the bill:

It will bring needed relief to the dependent mothers of our dead, killed in action in France.

It does that and more and, in my judgment, should be considered and passed by the Congress. The bill benefits alike the dependents of officer and enlisted man—it makes no distinction as to rank.

H. R. 10240, formerly H. R. 4474, is a bill coming from the World War Veterans' Committee, supported by the American Legion, the Disabled American Veterans, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and others. It is in keeping with the policy of the Congress heretofore adopted in veterans' legislation; it corrects many structural defects in the law now governing the Veterans' Bureau; it liberalizes the present compensation provision in several much-needed particulars and grants additional benefits to those suffering from tuberculosis and other diseases, authorizes the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to complete the education of those now receiving vocational training, and safeguards the future of those men and grants a three years' extension for the conversion of term insurance. This bill, beneficial alike to all service men, should be fully and favorably considered and passed by the Congress before adjournment. In particular those provisions relating to vocational training and war-risk insurance must be passed prior to June 30 of this year to be of any benefit. Irreparable injury will follow if they are not passed by that time.

H. R. 4548 is known as the disabled emergency officers' bill.

A bill providing for the retirement of disabled emergency officers has been pending in the Congress for the several sessions since the war. It has had the indorsement of several veterans' organizations, and I have no doubt but that many Members, relying on those indorsements, have, without other consideration of the measure, agreed to support it.

Personally I had taken that position, and it was not until after I had made a thorough investigation of the bill and the results that would come from its passage that I reached the conclusion that it was wrong in principle and that its passage should be opposed in this House by the service men of the House. Four members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation—themselves veterans—have filed a minority report from that committee opposing its passage. I commend the study of that report to the membership of this House.

The proponents of this bill state that its sole purpose is to give the emergency Army officer of the World War, who was disabled in line of duty, the same retirement privileges and pay as that now accorded the officer of the Regular Army. As I will show later, it is not that broad in its terms, but that is its general purpose.

The United States, during the lifetime of many now living, has engaged in three major wars—the Civil War, the Spanish American, and the World War. The soldiers of America in those three wars were largely citizen soldiers, coming from peace-time vocations; they gave their services to their country, serving where ordered, performing full well their duty, and with the return of peace assumed again the duties of the citizen.

It becomes then important at the outset in determining the principles of legislation for the soldiers of the World War to consider what has been done by the Government for the veterans of the Civil War and the war with Spain.

The Adjutant General advises me that—many bills have been introduced in both Houses of Congress at different times authorizing the appointment on the retired list of the Army of these officers who served in the volunteer army in the Civil War, but none of them has ever been enacted into law.

Likewise, he advises me that no legislation of this character has ever been passed for the benefit of the emergency officers who fought during the war with Spain.

On the other hand, Congress has repeatedly passed legislation, with the approval of the veterans themselves, granting a pensionable status to veterans of those wars, and throughout it all there has not been any distinction made as to rank, but in the benefits secured from that legislation all have shared alike. The commissioned officer and the enlisted man, noncommissioned and private, their widows and their orphans, have all received the same treatment from their Government.

The remaining veterans of the Civil War (now well past four-score years), walking in the dusk of the day of their lifetime, are asking this Congress to grant a bit more of life's goods by way of pension to themselves, their widows, and their orphans. It ought to be granted. I voted for the Civil War pension bill two years ago. I hope that I may be privileged to vote again this session for pension increases to the grand old men of the Grand Army, their widows and orphans. But mark you this, the proposed legislation makes no distinction between the various veterans of the Civil War. Let me repeat, they all share alike and have all shared alike in legislation heretofore passed.

This Congress yesterday passed legislation granting increased and more liberal pensions to the veterans of the war with Spain, their widows, and their orphans. It is estimated that it will increase the pensions paid to these veterans $11 a month. These men proudly and rightly boast that they were an army of volunteers. Remember also this, that they were the first soldiers of America fighting beneath Old Glory on foreign shores for the aid of a downtrodden and foreign people. With the successful ending of the war with Spain, America became a world power, followed by unprecedented influence and material prosperity. These men deserve well of America. The unanimous House action yesterday testifies to the justice of that bill. I am glad that I was privileged to work for and vote for its passage. But, mark you this, every one of these men and their organizations are asking that Congress treat them all exactly alike, without distinction as to rank.

Congress since the World War has passed considerable legislation for the benefit of the veterans of the World War. We have granted compensation to those men whose disabilities were traceable to their service. We have conclusively presumed service connection in cases of disease such as tuberculosis and many other cases and awarded compensation. Congress has granted compensation to the widow and the orphan of the service men who gave their lives to the Nation. The doors of the hospitals of the Veterans' Bureau have been opened to the service men, and treatment and care is provided at the expense of the Government. All of this freely and gratefully given—but mark you again, all of it has been without discrimination one from the other as to rank.

Two years ago Congress passed, over the veto of the President, the adjusted compensation bill. It was supported by public opinion, urged by veterans' organizations, and passed as an act of justice. But its benefits applied alike to enlisted man and commissioned officer up to and including the rank of captain. Beyond that no benefits were conferred. Why, then, should we change now the fixed policy of the Government that has been uniformly followed in the treatment of the citizen-soldiers of the Civil, Spanish-American, and World Wars?

Those who support this measure say that there were nine classes of officers who served during the World War, regular, provisional, and emergency, in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. And that the emergency officer of the Army is the only one that has not been given the right of retirement.

That statement is made by the committee in its report. That statement is partly true and partly false. The regular and provisional disabled officer has, as I understand it, been retired. There have also been retired 232 emergency officers of the Navy and 64 of the Marine Corps, but there are 130 temporary officers of the Navy and Marine Corps disabled 30 per cent or more permanent who are not benefited by this bill and not included in it, and a total of 616 who have a compensable status—not benefited by this bill—and as I read the hearings deliberately ignored by the author of H. R. 4548, and likewise by the committee who held the hearings and reported the bill.

The reason for the retirement of the regular officer is well set out in the minority report. I quote, as they do, Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison:

The privileges of the retired list of the Regular Army constitute a consideration granted by the Government for the consecration of lives to its military service and the volunteering for life for such service in any exigencies that may arise, whether in peace or war. The military relation requires the officer to give up ambitions which are the rightful portion of every man in the great world outside, and for a measure of compensation which does not exceed what is barely sufficient to maintain himself and family in the status which the military service demands; and the law has said that when he serves a prescribed period of time, or has reached a certain age, or is disabled by injury or disease incident to the service, he must withdraw from active service and give way to a younger man better fitted for the rigors of military life. As the officer has not been trained for a business career or for any career in civil life he finds himself at the end of his service, certainly in the vast majority of cases, not only without a profession, but without a competency.

Congress has thus far restricted the privilege of retirement to members of the permanent Military Establishment; that is, to those only who have consecrated their lives to the military service. This is true not alone of the officers but of the enlisted man, who may retire only when he has served a sufficient time to indicate that he has adopted the military service as a life career. To those who have thus pledged their services for life to the Nation, in peace or in war, Congress, as a matter of keeping faith with them, has provided by law that they shall be secure in their calling throughout their lives, and when they have performed what is deemed a life service, shall be relieved of some of the active duties of service and be permitted a living pay for the remainder of their lives.

The Regular Army officer retired for disability during the World War was retired at the permanent rank he had in the Regular Army and not at the rank to which he had been temporarily promoted. This statement is made on the authority of The Adjutant General and is quoted to clear up a doubt that some have had on that question.

The provisional officer of the World War accepted a lesser rank than the emergency officer in order that he might qualify for a later regular status, and is rightly entitled to the same treatment accorded the regular officer.

There remains then 296 emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who have been given the retired status of the regular officer. They were given that status "piece meal" by the Congress, as I understand it, without particular attention being given to the proposal on its merits. But, because that has been done, we are asked to pass legislation reaching out and including another and by far the largest group of all. I have several times been told by proponents of this legislation who are Members of this body that they do not favor it on principle and that the only reason for favoring it is that they want to treat all the officers alike. There is but one answer to that, and that is if the first act was wrong the creation of another wrong will not make both acts right.

I have been asked, "Will you vote to take the retired status from those men who now have it?" I have answered "No," because they have adjusted themselves to the new rate of pay and to deprive them of it now will create a hardship upon them that their fellow officers never having been given that status do not suffer.

This bill was reported to the Sixty-eighth Congress, Report No. 665. In that report this statement is made—the annual increase cost to the Government . . . is $618,036;

That there were 1,018 then—May 6, 1924—receiving compensation and that—this cost will be diminished rapidly, because of the high mortality rate.

there was some testimony that, in addition to the 1,018, possibly some 500 or 600 others might be at some time eligible to benefit in some measure by the act.

This statement was repeated February 23, 1925, in Report No. 1563 on Senate bill 33.

The report made to this Congress, No. 536, March 13, 1926, shows the number to be benefited by the act to be 1,848, and the increased annual cost to the Government to be $1,190,052, an increase of 830 beneficiaries and $572,016 in annual cost. This statement is made to show how inaccurate was the prediction of the committee two years ago. But, in spite of that increase—almost 100 per cent—they repeat again in their report to this Congress the statement—this cost should rapidly diminish . . . many deaths having occurred since the figures were furnished.

That statement made two years ago has been proven not true. It is made again, the plain and evident intention being to convey to the Congress the idea—as two years ago—that the high-water mark of the bill in costs had been reached.

That conclusion was not true two years ago. It is not true now. The figures quoted you in the report were furnished as of September 30, 1925. As of December 31, 1925, three months later, the number of 1,848 had increased to 1,986—138 more—and the estimated annual cost has increased $88,812 during those three months. So that if this bill is to become a law Congress must understand that it means a much increased cost before there will be any material decrease. This statement is further supported by the fact that there were on January 1, 1926, 8,717 officers who can become eligible for retirement under this bill, and as of that date, and based on that number, the possible annual cost of this bill is fixed at $9,240,000.

Do not misunderstand me. If I believed this legislation just and right, if I believed that these men were entitled to be singled out from among their fellows and given this greatly increased pay, I would support this legislation, no matter what the cost. But I do not so believe.

This bill on its face says that it gives to the disabled emergency officer the retirement privileges accorded the Regular officer. But it does not do that. On the last figures there were 8,717 disabled emergency officers; this bill benefits but 1,986 of them. It gives the right of retirement only to that emergency officer whose disability is 30 per cent or more permanent. The officer whose disability is but 29 per cent permanent receives no benefit. The emergency officer whose disability is 100 per cent temporary receives no benefit. So that the bill creates at once a discrimination between the emergency officers themselves. If this bill were to become a law, a brigadier general with a 30 per cent disability would receive $4,500 a year; a colonel, $3,000; lieutenant colonel, $2,625 a year; a major, $2,250 a year; captain, $1,800 a year; first lieutenant, $1,500 a year; second lieutenant, $1,125 a year; and the enlisted man from sergeant major to buck private would receive $360 a year.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the retired officer get that pay for the rest of his life?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; for the remainder of his life; but an enlisted man's compensation is subject to change. A study of these figures will indicate the very evident injustice of the bill.

Of those whom the act benefits there are two colonels now receiving, one $50 a month, the other $60 a month, who will if this bill becomes a law, receive $250 a month. There are seven lieutenant colonels averaging $44 a month compensation, who will receive under the bill $218.75 a month. There are 53 majors receiving an average compensation of $44 a month, who will be advanced to $187.50 a month.

This bill benefits 1,896 emergency officers; it gives no benefit to over 7,000 additional emergency officers, many of whom are disabled more than those benefited.

This bill benefits 1,896 emergency officers; it gives no additional benefits to the 41,496 emergency enlisted men who are rated 30 per cent or more permanent—the same rating as had by the officers whom it seeks to benefit.

This bill benefits 1,896 emergency officers. It brings no benefits to 616 emergency officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, 130 of whom are now disabled to the same extent as are the 1,896 Army officers.

This bill holds out the possibility of additional benefits to 7,000 emergency officers, who, if given ratings of 30 per cent or more permanent, can come within its provisions. It holds out no hope of additional compensation to approximately 212,000 disabled emergency enlisted men.

To sum up, it brings immediate benefits to less than 1,900 disabled service men out of 221,500 now on the rolls.

One of the reasons advanced by some in favor of this legislation is that the officers were generally older, better educated, and accustomed to more of the material things of life, and therefore his pay from the Government should be greater. That, I submit, is a dangerous theory for this Nation to accept. The necessities of life cost just as much for the family of a disabled enlisted man as for those of an officer. The dollar compensation paid the officer and the enlisted man have the same purchasing power. But assuming their reasons to be correct, the educated emergency officer is far better able to overcome his disability than is the emergency soldier or officer who must supplement his compensation by physical labor. For example, the lawyer who has lost a leg can continue to practice law; the farmer who has lost a leg can follow a plow, but his handicap is far greater. The Veterans' Bureau was unable to give me the occupation of all the emergency officers whom this bill would benefit, but of the occupations given not one of these would be classed other than as professional.

But if their argument is sound, then this bill creates another and even more unjust discrimination. If the emergency officer should have additional compensation because of the status in life of himself and of his family, then there is all the more reason why his widow and orphan should likewise receive more compensation than the widow and orphan of the enlisted man. There are now 2,014 widows and 2,124 orphans of World War emergency officers. They are receiving identically the same compensation as is paid to the widow and orphan of the emergency enlisted soldier. If the emergency officer is entitled to additional compensation, then his widow is; but the proponents of this measure do not ask it in this bill. So far as I know, they have never asked it. They do not dare ask it. They do not dare ask the Congress to give one widow more than another, nor one orphan more than another. To state the proposition shows its injustice and likewise the injustice of this bill.

The statement is made in the report that the passage of this bill has been persistently urged by both the American Legion and the Disabled American Veterans, but from that it does not follow that the rank and file of the membership of those great veterans' organizations either know of its provisions or approve of its passage. I know something of the American Legion and its membership. It has honored me highly in the past; it has been my great privilege to serve its membership both before I came to this body and since. I hope to continue to serve its membership. I respect the American Legion and its wishes. It is not easy to go against its declared policies. The American Legion in national convention has five times indorsed this bill but only once has it been discussed on the convention floor. The American Legion Weekly is sent from national headquarters to every member. It carries Legion news, outlines Legion policies, and builds Legion sentiment. Yet never once during the five years that this bill has been before Congress has the American Legion Weekly told the full truth about this bill. The membership of the Legion has not been told that this bill discriminates against certain disabled emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps. They have not been told that it discriminates against 80 per cent of the disabled emergency officers of the Army. They have not been told that it discriminates against the widow and orphans of the officer dead. They have not been told that it discriminates against all of the disabled emergency enlisted men. Reluctantly I have reached the conclusion that in this matter the national convention of the American Legion does not represent the sentiment of either its membership or of the service men of the Nation.

And may it be said to the credit of the disabled emergency officers that I have never yet found one—other than those directly promoting its passage—when the facts were given to him, as I have given them here, but who has reached the conclusion with me that the bill is fundamentally wrong and should not pass.

I have heretofore shown that the principle of this bill is contrary to the fixed policy of the Government in dealing with its citizen soldiers. It is also contrary to the fixed policy of the American Legion and contrary to all of its legislative requests heretofore made. It is contrary to the principle of H. R. 10240 and 10277, urged by the American Legion, both of which bills apply to all veterans alike. When the organization was founded it deliberately determined that there should be no distinction in it based on rank. Not more than 40 per cent of its officers were to be men who had commissions. The men who organized the Legion with far-sighted purpose declared that the Legion would be all inclusive, representing the officer and enlisted man; the disabled and the overseas veterans stood side by side with a buddy whose duty kept him in the United States—all were comrades—binding themselves in an organization all for one, one for all, in the continued service of God and country. The American Legion fought the battles of the service man in the organization of the Veterans' Bureau, the establishment of hospitals, the passage of liberal compensation laws based on service-connected disability, the passage of the adjusted compensation act, and much other beneficial legislation. Throughout it all the Legion made no distinction and asked that none be made between the service men of America. The Legion kept its determination that there would be no distinction or discrimination on account of rank among the veterans.

This bill is the only legislation that the Legion has advocated contrary to that policy; it is the only legislation that Congress has repeatedly refused to approve. The advocacy of this legislation has caused Congress to put a question mark on all legislative proposals coming from that great veterans' organization.

I asked that I be permitted to appear before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. I indicated a desire that the committee call before it the Secretary of War, Mr. Davis, and the Assistant Secretary of War, Hanford MacNider, both emergency officers of the World War, and that they be asked to give the Congress the benefit of their views as to the justice of this legislation and whether or not, in their opinion, it was demanded by the service men of the Nation. I suggested also that General Hines, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau be called, that the present national commander of the American Legion, Mr. McQuigg, be called, and that the present national commander of the Disabled American Veterans, Mr. Mahan, be called, that the Congress might likewise have the benefit of their views as to the justice of this legislation. That was not done. The only hearings held were before a subcommittee of three, at least two of whom were known in advance as supporters of the bill.

There are several World War veterans, both enlisted men and officers, representing both political parties, members of the Veterans' Committee, who are openly opposed to this bill, yet none of them were placed on the subcommittee who held the hearings.

I now again request that the committee favoring this legislation call these men and get their personal statements and views upon it for the advice of the membership of the House.

President Lincoln closed his second inaugural with these words, which are particularly applicable here:

Let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan.

Lincoln's policy of one for all, all for one, with no distinction as to rank, has been the American policy from that day to this—this Congress should not depart from it. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. The first two measures that the gentleman mentioned are not opposed by anyone, are they?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not opposed to it.

Mr. BROWNING. The gentleman does not know of any opposition in the House?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not speaking for the rest of the membership, but I think the House is favorable to those two bills.

Mr. BROWNING. Some of us on this side of the House are anxious to know what prospect we have for consideration of these first two measures of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman will have to direct his inquiry to some one having authority to speak. I have not.

Mr. BROWNING. The gentleman has access to the steering committee on his side, which we do not have, and to the leader on the floor of the House. I am sincere in my question. I agree with the gentleman about the first two measures.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the gentleman agreeing with me about this third one?

Mr. BROWNING. I am agreeing with the gentleman about those two measures. The gentleman has not heard me say anything about the third measure, has he?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I have not, and that is the reason I am asking him now.

Mr. BROWNING. I am speaking about the two that there is no opposition to. I would like the gentleman to give us some information about when we can have them considered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest to the gentleman that the leader of the majority side is on the floor often and there is ample opportunity of asking him questions.

Mr. BROWNING. I ask the gentleman from Connecticut through the gentleman from Nebraska at this time whether he can give any information?

Mr. SIMMONS. The leader on the majority side has not delegated to me the right to speak for him or for the majority side.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me, in order that I may ask him a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Then I ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether we have any prospect for consideration of these veterans' measures, and I do this in hope of a favorable reply, in view of the fact that this is the anniversary of the declaration of war. I think it would be a very generous thing on the part of the gentleman to tell us that we might expect very soon to have consideration of these two measures, so vital to the disabled, to which we are all committed.

Mr. TILSON. All of these measures are being very seriously considered by the membership of the House, including the steering committee. They are being studied from the standpoint of cost and as to what bills can be passed consistently with the present and prospective condition of the Treasury.

Mr. BROWNING. The gentleman does not know of any opposition except so far as the expense entailed?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know as to that. I have not analyzed them myself, except hastily as to the expense, which is the first thing that we have to consider. After that they can be considered on their merits.

Mr. BROWNING. Then we are to understand that they are not definitely on the program for action at this session?

Mr. TILSON. They are being considered, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNING. That is just about as clear as mud.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture is at present considering a bill which I introduced for the relief of agriculture, H. R. 9216, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by submitting a brief résumé of the provisions of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the McLaughlin bill (H. R. 9216) aims to give relief to agricultural ills through a corporation of economic guidance of agriculture by accomplishing the following purposes:

(a) To decrease the cost of production: (1) By reducing wastage on the farms and in the markets, through a balanced production; and (2) by an economic disposition of any surplus.

(b) To decrease the cost of distribution and of selling: (1) By an orderly marketing; (2) by an equal distribution; and (3) by economically regulating the charges of licensed farm markets and commission merchants.

(c) To establish an economically balanced production of the basic commodities of agriculture: (1) By an economic guidance of acreage planting; (2) by an economic guidance of production in livestock; (3) by an economic disposition of any surplus; and (4) by an economic supply of any deficiency.

(d) To provide an economic disposition of any surplus: (1) By a carry over in staples sufficient to provide for crop losses in excess of the average in the following year; and (2) by a sale of any export surplus.

(e) To provide an economic supply of any deficiency: (1) By importations of any commodity, duty free, in sufficient quantities; and (2) by a sale of such commodity in domestic markets at the cost of production and of distribution plus a reasonable profit.

(f) To prepare and furnish data to Congress for the enactment of a sales tax: (1) To pay the operating expenses of the corporation, and (2) to liquidate any loss on the sale of the export surplus.

(g) To establish, so far as possible, preplanting contracts between producers and consumers.

(h) To establish an orderly marketing and an equal distribution: (1) By a standardized one price, the economic cost of production and a reasonable profit, (2) by the guidance of the sales department of the corporation, and (3) by the guidance of the farm market commissions, the food distributors, and the corporation county agents.

(i) To establish prices in domestic markets economically equitable for both consumers and producers: (1) By stabilizing prices annually, thereby preventing speculation and fluctuating prices in exchanges and domestic markets, (2) by reducing the cost of distribution by influencing licensed regional farm markets and commission merchants to handle a maximum of quantity at a minimum rate of profit, (3) by reducing wastage on the farms and in the markets, (4) by keeping the crops in the ownership and possession of the farmers until the consumers need them by an orderly marketing, thereby saving storage charges and commissions of many distributors, (5) by maintaining market prices in each and every year at the cost of production and of licensed distribution plus a reasonable profit, and not at a price and a profit determined by distributors, and (6) by preventing excessive advances in domestic market prices over cost of production and a profit, by reason of scarcity or speculation, by the corporation importing sufficient quantities of any commodity, duty free, and by selling the same in domestic markets at the cost of production and of distribution and a reasonable profit.

(j) To keep the cost of operating the corporation at a minimum by an able, honest, economical, efficient, and experienced board of directors selected by the President of the United States.

(k) To spread the minimum cost of operating the corporation by an assessment over full yields, accomplished by intensive farming of an economically guided acreage and production of efficient farmers.

(l) To pay the cost of operating the corporation out of savings accomplished in orderly marketing, in equally distributing, in economically selling, in reduced wastage, in prevented profiteering by distributors, in avoided speculative price advances, and in greatly decreased cost of production per unit, brought about by full yields accomplished by guided, efficient farmers.

(m) To give the American farmer annually the cost of production, including an allowance for crop losses caused by climatic conditions, plant diseases, and pests, and a reasonable profit sufficient to maintain American standards of living for his family.

(n) To give the American consumers an abundance of quality farm products, timely delivered and equally distributed, at the cost of production and a reasonable profit to necessary efficient farmers, and at the cost of distribution and a reasonable profit to necessary efficient distributors.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN].

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, at the beginning of the session of the Sixty-ninth Congress my party organization of the House indorsed and recommended me for a seat on the Appropriations Committee. I fully appreciate the honor and responsibility of the assignment, and I desire to extend to them my gratitude for the confidence they have reposed in me. The work of the committee is exacting, but it is relieved a great deal by the fair and square policy that is practiced by its able chairman, MARTIN B. MADDEN, of Illinois, to the individual membership of the committee, irrespective of political affiliations. [Applause.] He is willing at all times to give of his knowledge and advice without fear or favor. The only thing he will not give is money; and if he does, you have to have a good case. After all, that is his job. He reflects great credit not only to himself but to his party in his work.

The ranking minority member, Mr. BYRNS, of Tennessee, is also ready at all times to give the benefit of his experience and knowledge to the member who is seeking information and advice. [Applause.] In fact, there is a spirit of wholesome cooperation pervading throughout the whole membership of the committee.

We are now considering the last one of the appropriation bills. As a member of the subcommittee on independent offices, I had to do in part with the appropriation for the Shipping Board. I regret that the appropriation was not left at the sum decided on by the House itself; namely, $18,691,000. Thirteen million nine hundred thousand dollars is not sufficient to take care of any losses sustained in the event of vessels being turned back by the operators who failed to run them successfully.

If we are sincere in building up our merchant marine, then let us at least give them money enough to take care of our ships. I do not believe the Shipping Board would spend $1 unnecessarily of any appropriation given them, and, besides, it will serve notice to the world at large that we are solidly back of and mean what we say in regard to the unbuilding of an American merchant marine. [Applause.]

Then, again, gentlemen, the foreign operators are not only wishing and hoping that we will cut the appropriation to nothing, but will broadcast the fact that we are not sincerely behind the activity.

The $10,000,000 defense fund as proposed and put in by the Senate means nothing, because it is absolutely anchored.

I am sincerely for a merchant marine and want to see our flag on the seven seas of the globe, and instead of cutting their appropriations I am for giving them the amount necessary to carry on. We stand aghast at appropriations that are made for the enforcement of prohibition. We have no hesitancy in so far as the appropriation for this purpose is concerned. Here are the figures:

Department of Justice for enforcement of prohibition.....	$8,000,000
Treasury Department appropriation used in enforcing prohibition.....	10,635,685

This is the cost of enforcement for a single year. It does not include the cost of enlarging and strengthening the Coast Guard and it does not include any part of the overhead costs of Federal judges, and United States district attorneys who now spend a large portion of their time endeavoring to enforce prohibition. A total of $18,635,685 is not to be overlooked, because after all it is an item larger than the aggregate appropriations for the Shipping Board, the Federal Trade Commission, the Civil Service Commission, and the Employees' Compensation Commission put together. Why should we continue appropriating these large sums for the enforcement of a law which is practically acknowledged by those who are charged with enforcing it that it is impossible of enforcement. Let us repeal this obnoxious and iniquitous Volstead law and use the moneys appropriated for it to the upbuilding of our merchant marine and in the developing of our naval air service, and other activities of our Government.

I voted against the Volstead Act, and am ready to vote for its repeal or its modification. I also voted against the ratification of the eighteenth amendment when a member of the New York State Senate, and would gladly vote to repeal the amendment. In my judgment prohibition will not be accepted by the people until the question is settled by the people and settled right. I am honestly and sincerely opposed to prohibition as a matter of principle. I think the movement is the worst step that has ever been taken by our Government.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Just how would the gentleman have that settled by the people? Something like 75 per cent of the people have voted locally in favor of prohibition.

Mr. CULLEN. Our State legislature, I might say to the gentleman, is considering the adoption of a referendum to allow our State an opportunity to vote, and in all probability it will be voted on at the next election.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is separate and independent from the Constitution.

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is one way of doing it. Mr. CULLEN. Let the States decide among themselves.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. But 46 States did decide.

Mr. CULLEN. If they have decided it, then they have decided it in such a way that it is clearly distasteful to a majority of the people of the country.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. In some States.

Mr. CULLEN. If there is a moral issue involved, it is the moral issue of the spirit of human freedom struggling against bondage. Prohibition can not succeed, because it is the most brutal invasion of personal liberty ever attempted in our country. It must fail, as all tyranny has failed. But it is sad to think of the deplorable havoc it is making in its course.

It has undermined the respect for law in the way in which it breeds in every element of society a deep and bitter sense of injustice, and of the way in which it breaks from the splendid traditions of freedom we have built up in this great country of ours.

What is happening to-day is a law divorced from the support of the individual conscience and is utterly breaking down, and the reason is clear. The rising generation of to-day see about them a law called prohibition. They see it everywhere broken.

They see it broken by many of the most respected people of the community. They know that it can only be maintained, if at all, by the most stringent and repulsive of methods, and with a large expenditure of money from the taxpayers. Any law that takes hold of a man's daily life can not prevail, and to attempt to create morality by law is supremely and superbly ridiculous; and a law without great popular sentiment behind it or with no active good will behind it has always proved itself a failure.

Another question which is actively engaging the public mind is the coal situation.

I wonder if before we adjourn are we to have legislation dealing with this important problem, so that the intolerable conditions of suffering and freezing of the people of Brooklyn and New York City and other parts of the country were compelled to endure during the past winter shall not occur next winter or ever again.

The people are anxiously waiting for our answer. Let us heed their appeal or we shall hear from them in unmistakable terms. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, under the leave to extend my remarks, I wish to incorporate in the Record an editorial from a New York paper relative to the bill which I introduced to provide for a Sunday observance law for the District of Columbia, and also some remarks of my own concerning this particular editorial. I also wish to discuss an item which appeared in the Washington News some time ago concerning the fact that I was seen in my office on Sunday after I had introduced a bill to provide for Sunday observance here in the District of Columbia. I make mention of this fact for the purpose of showing that this particular newspaper, as well as some of the other newspapers in the District and throughout the country, are criticizing a bill which I introduced without knowing what the bill contains and without giving the public the benefit of the real provisions of the bill.

In other words, they seem to think that they have a great joke on me because I came to my office on Sunday, opened my mail, and wrote some letters on the typewriter to my wife and to others of my friends. They think that I have occupied an inconsistent attitude and that what I did was inconsistent with the provisions of the bill which I had introduced.

Let me say here, gentlemen of the committee, that the bill which I introduced (H. R. 10311) contains no provision which would prevent anyone from doing personal work such as coming to his office. I did not work all day in my office by any means, and the gentleman who says he saw me work for seven solid hours on the typewriter did me too much honor. The people who know me know that I never would have worked seven solid hours at any one thing at any one time. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when I introduced this bill H. R. 10311, I expected to be criticized by those who want no Sunday laws and who wish to desecrate and commercialize the Sabbath. I am getting all I expected, for during the past week or two I have been "cussed" and discussed, abused and amused, and have been denounced and my fate pronounced more than ever before.

Well, it is interesting. We are on the winning side; have made more progress than was ever made before with such a bill in the face of such opposition, and, best of all, we are bound to pass this bill or a similar one in the near future.

I do not relish being abused, but the more I am abused the surer I am that we are succeeding, especially when the abuse comes from the crowd that is now howling. We will soon have a basketful of newspaper clippings and editorials on my bill. Every mail brings letters from all over the Nation about me and the bill.

Some praise me and my efforts and speeches to the sky, and others threaten destroying all the churches in the country and lynching me "to boot" if I do not withdraw my fight for a Sunday law here.

The newspapers spy on me and criticize me in every way possible and even ridicule the people I represent in their frenzy over my humble effort to restore here the Sunday of the Bible and of our fathers.

It would take too much space for me to put in the RECORD all the letters and news clippings I have received. There is one funny editorial on the subject, "Lank knows where he's at," which I will put in later when I have time to discuss it fully.

For the present I shall content myself with the insertion of an editorial from a New York paper which is fair to me. The editor repeats correctly part of my former speech, and seems amazed at what I favor. Well, I still oppose the things mentioned as objectionable and favor the remedies suggested.

Here is this item in full:

THAT "BLUE" GEORGIAN

W. C. LANKFORD, Congressman from Douglas, Ga., near Atlanta, where the Ku-Klux originated, is opposed to Sunday movies, Sunday baseball, and everything except religious services on the Sabbath Day in the District of Columbia. Before the committee hearing the "blue law" pros and cons there he did not fail to tell the residents of Washington how they ought to spend their Sundays.

LANKFORD is the author of the "blue Sunday bill" now pending in Congress, which provides "that it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia to keep open or use any dancing saloon, theater (whether for motion pictures, plays, spoken or silent, opera, vaudeville, or entertainment), bowling alley, or any place of public assembly at which an admission fee is directly or indirectly received, or to engage in commercialized sports or amusements on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday."

And this is what that Georgian had to say—and more, too—to the committee, while several hundred Washington business men and women, representatives of social and civic organizations, gathered to oppose his bill:

"I'M GUILTY OF INTOLERANCE"

"It is a new idea that the present-day movies and shows and Sunday baseball are religious institutions and that anyone who suggests that there should be a law to prevent the operation of these on Sunday is guilty of religious intolerance.

"I confess that I am at a loss to know just how I am guilty of religious intolerance when I propose a bill which would allow people of all and every denomination to go to church if they wish on Sunday, and only seek such provisions as will protect all in this enjoyment of religious liberty and freedom. Where is the religious intolerance which would prevent a crew of men operating a steam shovel or an electric hammer on a building site or partly constructed building next door to a church during services on Sunday? Where is the religious intolerance in a law which would not let a negro unload a large quantity of coal next door to a church, and thus disturb the assembly of people gathered for religious services? Where is the intolerance in a bill which makes for the most complete religious liberty and allows all and everyone to worship God according to the dictate of his or her own conscience? My purpose and hope is only to secure in a fuller sense the enjoyment of religious liberty. Most people do not understand that religious liberty means the infliction on the public of the profanity of the pool room, the vulgarity of the modern movie or theater, and the obscenity of the ordinary dance hall on every Sunday of the year.

"The great trouble is that there are some folks who believe that freedom of religion is freedom from religion. They mistake freedom of religion for freedom of crime.

"The bill which I introduced provides for one day of rest out of every seven. If I provided for no rest day at all, there would rightly be much opposition. It would be cruel and savage in the extreme to force all to work every day without any rest, and yet I am held up as an advocate of an unreasonable thing when I attempt to make by law one day of rest out of every seven.

"AGIN" EVERYTHING

"Because I am not willing for my people to pay taxes to build negro bathing beaches and artificial bathing pools here, and because I object to my people being forced to help maintain a negro university here in the District of Columbia contrary to law, I am said to be guilty of racial intolerance. It all depends on whose definition of intolerance we are to use. I do object to the public being forced to educate a crowd of negroes in Washington when many of the white boys and girls of the South and other parts of the country are denied sufficient educational advantages. It has even been urged here that at public expense there be established a beauty parlor for the negroes of the District of Columbia, so that the negro girls could take lessons in using rouge and perfume and so forth. Well, if objecting to this kind of thing is intolerance, then I am very intolerant.

"I believe in letting the negro be the negro and the white man be the white man. I believe in letting the negro have his section of town to live in and the white people have theirs. I certainly believe in the negro having his own waiting room, his own car or separate seats on street cars and railroads, and his own schools, but I believe in the white people having also their own separate depot and transportation and educational facilities. Nothing could be fairer. Oh, but many say that there should be no distinction and that all be treated alike. Segregation treats all alike."

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I appreciate very much the splendid publicity which the Washington News gave me on Monday, March 15 last, in connection with my being in my office from shortly before 3 in the afternoon until 10 at night. I would have gladly furnished the News with a free cut and saved that splendid little paper the expense incident to putting such a splendid picture of myself in their paper. The picture showed up well at the very top of the title-page, and then the word "toils" was printed in larger type just above my head, about where my beautiful head of hair used to be before I began parting my hair in the middle.

My folks down home have known all the while I worked hard, but I very much fear I have been done too much honor. I am credited with seven hours' steady work on this occasion. People who know me will know that I never worked seven hours without ceasing at any one thing, at any one time, in my life. I have a great habit of stopping to eat or take a drink of water occasionally while working.

Mr. Chairman, even as a boy, when I plowed "Old Tobey," the ox, I stopped occasionally to rest my tired limbs. It is just my nature to not work too long without an occasional "rest spell."

Then, against this seven-hour endurance compliment is questioned very seriously by many of my good friends in the Government service who are coming to me and saying I am not entitled to so great an honor, as they remember seeing me during the four or five hours I was out of the office around the city, while the reporter saw me working without ceasing on the typewriter. There is something strange about this matter. I am wondering who was in my office, looking exactly like me, working on the typewriter while I was out. The reporter says he saw me and that settles that. My friends and I all agree that I was out of the office most of the time, so herein lies the mystery.

Then, again, this strange man whom the reporter saw while I was out would not answer telephone calls or knocks at the door, and when letters were slipped under the door pounced upon them and either destroyed or took them with him. I found no letters when I returned from a two-hour stroll and supper, about 7 o'clock at night, except I found a speech of Congressman FULMER upon my return; but that is not the letters which this strange man snatched from the fingers of the reporter as he fed them under the door, for the FULMER speech did not disappear so soon, and was still under the door upon my return. Then, again, I answered all phone calls and alarms at my door while I was in, and I saw no letters placed under the door while I was in; so this strange man who was in my office while the reporter saw me at work in my absence is the man who pulled off all these stunts.

Now, herein lies still more mystery. It must have been this strange being that mailed that "large package of letters" that the reporter tells about. I only mailed three, which was all I wrote during the day.

Another strange thing is that when I went to my office for a short time, about 3 o'clock, another Congressman was with me, and he and I do not recall seeing any horror-stricken News men in the corridor of the Office Building; and, then, the reporter saw only one person go to my office, and this person horrified him. It must have been this strange man rather than me he saw.

I am sure it was not I who horrified this good reporter into seeing and hearing things which were not present and did not happen, and caused him to make such an exaggerated report; for he is an honest man. Then, again, why should he be so horrified? My picture—thanks to the News again—shows I could not horrify anyone, especially one who was out looking for me and who saw me going to my office, where I go nearly every hour when I am not asleep, day and night every day in the week, Sunday not excepted. Especially should this not horrify the gentleman when this conduct of mine was not in the least in conflict with any provision of my Sunday observance bill and was in strict performance of my duty.

Maybe it was my bill which horrified the reporter so much. It seems to have horrified all the correspondents and many others so much that few, if any, who oppose my bill have really read it.

But before proceeding further let me tell you very confidentially just what I did on this Sunday in question and let us see how my confidential statement compares with the reporter's version of the matter. I have never hesitated to go to my office on Sunday, open my mail, answering any urgent letters, sending telegrams if necessary, and doing any little office work which can be done without inconvenience to me and which renders a real service oftentimes to a child or father or mother in distress.

My bill would not in the least make this kind of office work unlawful. On the Sunday in question I first went to my office about 8 o'clock a. m. and finally left about 11 o'clock at night. I was out of it over half of the time during the day. I was out of the office most of the time between 3 o'clock in the afternoon and 10 o'clock at night. I did not refuse to answer the telephone or knocks at the door. No letters were put under the door while I was in the office, or at least I saw none.

I left the office several times during the afternoon, and finally, about 6 o'clock, I walked from the House Office Building to the Raleigh Hotel, up Twelfth to F Street, then strolled along looking at show windows to Fifteenth Street, around the Willard and Washington Hotel block, then along Pennsylvania Avenue to a restaurant in front of the Post Office Department Building, where I ate supper, and then walked to the St. James Hotel, then caught a car back to my office. On this trip I met several of my friends, who came to me next day and mentioned seeing me at about 6 to 8 p. m., while the reporter says I was busy with a typewriter from 3 to 10 in the afternoon. Upon my return to my office I found a speech by Congressman FULMER on Muscle Shoals under my door. I took the speech, quietly seated myself in a good, soft easy-chair, put my feet in another chair, and read the good speech of my colleague, never suspecting that during all this time the reporter was watching me work on the typewriter. All the while, until next day, in my heart I was thanking Mr. FULMER for making that good speech and bringing it to me. Next day I found he did not put it under the door and that probably the reporter put it there in my absence from the office, ran away, and hours afterwards slipped by and found it gone, and then wrote that it "speedily disappeared."

He must have been the one that speedily disappeared after putting the envelope under the door. When he ran he evidently got the idea that the envelope also was making a speedy retreat.

Mr. Chairman, it would be rather difficult for any person to write an article so full of errors as this one and yet so short. There are so many inaccuracies—but let me mention just one more. I only used the typewriter for about 30 minutes to write three letters at about 9.30 p. m., and only mailed the three at the corner, instead of "a large package of letters." But let us read this amazing newspaper article.

Here are the headlines:

Blue-law sire toils Sunday.—Sponsor of seventh day of rest seen working seven hours over a typewriter.—Phone unanswered.—Georgia lawmaker too busy to answer knock, but letter is accepted.

Here is the article itself:

Representative WILLIAM C. LANKFORD, of Georgia, the man whose proposed Sunday blue law would prevent working on Sunday in the District, spent the greater part of yesterday in his own place of business. A News reporter, chancing to be in the House Office Building, was horrified to see LANKFORD enter his office shortly before 3 p. m. The clicking of a typewriter shortly became audible, breaking the Sabbath silence.

When LANKFORD finally emerged at 10.10 p. m. he went to a corner mail box and deposited a large package of letters.

LANKFORD was so busy that his locked door was not opened to loud knocking, nor did the telephone respond to continued ringing. An envelope slipped halfway under the door, however, speedily disappeared.

Inquiry about the House Office Building developed that LANKFORD'S Sunday appearances in his place of business are the rule, not an exception.

LANKFORD does a great deal of his secretarial work personally, and hence the regular working week sometimes leaves little odds and ends to be cleaned up on the Sabbath.

Only work "of necessity and charity" is permitted in LANKFORD'S proposed bill. The interpretation placed on this clause at hearings at which LANKFORD was the guiding spirit, was that this would apply only to hospitals, police, firemen, and the like.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that for me to introduce a bill to make a course of conduct a crime and yet be continually doing the thing I appear to want to stop, is to be very inconsistent.

I would prevent commercialized sports on Sunday. I do not attend Sunday baseball or any other commercialized games on Sunday.

I do not attend movies or theaters on Sunday and am, therefore, consistent in this respect. I do not work all day in my office on Sunday, but my bill would not, if enacted, make it unlawful for a man to work in his office all day Sunday. I would not introduce a bill which would not let a man open his mail and answer an urgent letter if he wished on Sunday.

I have never hesitated to write a letter or do anything else of a private or personal nature on Sunday if the matter was urgent and I was able to render a service to some one else by the act.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had only read my bill he would not be spying on my office in an effort to get in a position to hold me up to ridicule and contempt, and try to make the public believe I am acting and living a falsehood.

The gentleman, without reading my bill and without familiarizing himself with the facts, would, if he could, destroy me politically because I dared sponsor a bill for a reasonable Sunday law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, my little son, Cecil, is sick with asthma in El Paso, Tex., and his mother is with him there. I have only a bedroom here where I sleep, and I spend all the time in my office when I would be at home with my folks if they were here. In fact, my room and my office constitute my home here at present. My office is very comfortable and I spend there most of my time not taken up by my duties elsewhere. Where would the gentleman have me go to rest at the end of a week of hard toll? Would he have me stay in bed or in my bedroom all day Sunday? Would he have me sit on the sidewalk throughout Sunday, or stand in the sleet and snow, and not come in because it was Sunday? What is wrong with coming to my office, where I can be comfortable, as I have always done, especially when there is nothing in my bill to the contrary?

I will say to the gentleman that on the Sunday in question, while in my office, I read a wonderful sermon on "What is the Sabbath for?" by Doctor Sizoo, of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church of this city, and I liked it so much until I had it inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and had practically every Member of Congress and thousands of others reading it before three days had passed. I am willing to bear a little unjust criticism when I can accomplish so great a service for so misrepresented and worthy a cause. Mr. Chairman, I am not angry with the splendid little paper, the Washington News, for the publicity which it gave to me and my bill. Often the rebound of an error is worth as much as the direct thrust of the truth.

Innocence and right are established more fully by indictments and acquittals than they would ever appear by silence.

The justice, fairness, and merit of my bill will shine forth out of the darkness of misrepresentation and deception, and the greater that darkness the greater will appear the glorious light of the truth.

I hope the News will not send me too large a bill for the costly space which was given to me.

If asked, I would have gladly mailed the News a statement in writing relative to my Sunday activities, which would have been much more accurate and probably less expensive than the one obtained by spying on me and on my office.

By the way, that alleged News reporter has most wonderful eyes.

All ingenuity of science concentrated in the X-ray machine and the fluoroscope can only look through solid matter and see what is in existence on the other side, but this man easily sees through solid wooden doors and brick walls and sees what does not exist on the other side. Much was said in Congress about the publicity of income-tax returns. For my part I could see no reason for making private the returns of the big rich and leaving public all returns of the common folks throughout the country. The nonpublicity crowd won, but, after all, Mr. Chairman, the big rich will have to hire the man with the miraculous eyes to remain silent, otherwise the News can ask this man to stroll along the sidewalks near the Treasury Building and look through wood, brick, stone, and steel into the innermost vaults of the Treasury, and no doubt he will be able to give any desired return in full and in detail and much more besides to make the report interesting.

No longer need the Government send aviators or vessels hurrying here and there over land and sea to find aviators or seafaring men lost or destroyed, for this man can walk out on his front steps and make report of what he finds.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, there was little need for brave men to have risked their lives in an effort to go to the poles of the earth, and poor old Doctor Cook need not have gotten tangled up in all that affair, if they had only had this man with his wonderful eyes, for with him they could have sailed only a mile or two from land, then asked him for a full report of the North Pole, and no doubt it would have been forthcoming.

Oh, I am so sorry he was not on Noah's Ark, for if he had been that poor little dove would never had to fly and flap its poor little tired wings looking for a leaf, for Noah could have asked this gentleman to simply peep out of the window and tell him whether or not on the face of the earth and broad expanse of water there was dry land anywhere, and he could have looked and reported. And yet this man with his wonderful eyes has never been able to read my bill; thousands of others, including the editors and others connected with the big dailies have never read it, or equally as wrong have read it and are deliberately misleading the public as to its provisions.

Bear with me a moment and let me tell you just what the bill provides.

The bill which I introduced provides as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 13, 1926.

Mr. LANKFORD introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed: A bill (H. R. 10311) to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, corporation, or any of their agents, directors, or officers to employ any person to labor or pursue any trade or secular business on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, works of necessity and charity always excepted. It shall furthermore be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person under employment or working for hire to engage in labor under such contract of employment or hire on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, except in works of necessity and charity.

In works of necessity and charity is included whatever is needful during the day for the good order, health, or comfort of the community, provided the right to weekly rest and worship is not thereby denied. The labor herein forbidden on Sunday is hired, employed, or public work, not such personal work as does not interrupt or disturb the repose and religious liberty of the community. The following labor and business shall be legal on Sunday:

- (a) In drug stores, for the sale of medicines, surgical articles, and supplies for the sick, foods, beverages, and cigars, but not for articles of merchandise forbidden on Sunday for other stores and merchants.
- (b) In hotels, restaurants, and cafés, and in the preparation and sale of meals.
- (c) For the sale of motor oil, gasoline, and accessories necessary to keep in operation cars in actual use on such Sunday, together with labor incident to such repairs.
- (d) In connection with public lighting, water, and heating plants.
- (e) For the operation of boats, railroad trains, street cars, busses, sight-seeing cars, taxicabs, elevators, and privately owned means of conveyance.
- (f) For telephone and radio service.
- (g) In dairies and in connection with preparation and delivery of milk and cream.
- (h) In connection with watching, caretaking, or safeguarding premises and property, and in the maintenance of police and fire protection.
- (i) In connection with the preparation and sale of daily newspapers.

Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia to keep open or use any dancing place, theater (whether for motion pictures, plays spoken or silent, opera, vaudeville, or entertainment), bowling alley, or any place of public assembly at which an admission fee is directly or indirectly received, or to engage in commercialized sports or amusements on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday.

Sec. 3. It shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, corporation, or any of their agents, directors, or officers to require or permit any employee or employees engaged in works of necessity and charity, excepting household or hotel service, to work on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, unless within the next six succeeding days during a period of 24 consecutive hours such employer shall neither require nor permit such employee or employees to work in his or its employ.

Sec. 4. It shall be a sufficient defense to a prosecution for work or labor on the first day of the week that the defendant uniformly keeps another day of the week as holy time and does not labor on that day, and that the labor complained of was done in such manner as not to interrupt or disturb other persons in observing the first day of the week.

Sec. 5. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $50 for the first offense, and for each subsequent offense by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500 and by imprisonment in the jail of the District of Columbia for a period of not more than six months.

Sec. 6. All prosecutions for the violation of this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia.

Sec. 7. This act shall become effective on the sixtieth day after its enactment.

You will notice that the bill provides that the labor forbidden on Sunday is hire and employment on public work, not such personal work as does not interrupt or disturb the repose or religious liberty of the community. In other words, the bill would make unlawful theaters and moving-picture shows on Sunday, would make unlawful baseball on Sunday where that baseball is commercialized, but it would not make unlawful baseball on Sunday between amateur teams.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Would the provisions of the bill, if enacted into law, permit a Congressman to work in his office on Sunday?

Mr. LANKFORD. It would. The bill only prevents the hiring of people to work on Sunday. I am not hired to work on Sunday. The bill would only prevent people who are hired to work on Sunday from working on Sunday. It would prevent the hiring of people to work on Sunday and would prevent people who are hired to work on Sunday from working on Sunday.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD. Not now. Whether that is a good bill or a bad bill in that respect I am not discussing now. The bill only makes unlawful the hiring of people to work on Sunday and the working of people on Sunday who are hired to work on Sunday. It prevents the hiring of large bodies of men to tear down buildings on Sundays or to work in the construction of buildings on Sunday. It leaves a man free to do any personal work, as, for example, that of a Congressman.

If a merchant wanted to go into his store on Sunday and do some personal work, the bill would not prevent it. It is not meant for the especial benefit of Congressmen any more than it is for any other individual. And so if a man, a doctor, or physician, or lawyer, or any other person under the provisions of my bill wants to work on Sunday, so long as he does not disturb the neighborhood, does not violate the provisions of the bill, he can do so. The bill is specifically drawn, so far as labor is concerned, so as to prevent the hiring of people to work on Sunday and to prevent those who are hired to work on Sunday from working on Sunday.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. If a man has a chauffeur hired, then the chauffeur could not work on Sunday?

Mr. LANKFORD. He could work on Sunday. That comes under the exception covering works of necessity and charity, and that includes people employed to operate elevators, and telephone service, and watchmen, and chauffeurs, the operation of street cars and railway trains, and all those things which are covered in the bill under the definition of works of necessity and charity. [Applause.]

I thank the members of the committee, and I yield back whatever time I may not have used, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am especially glad this afternoon to see my friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW], because I know he likes to hear antiprohibition speeches, and in the time allotted to me I intend to devote my attention to that subject.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Yes.

Mr. LANKFORD. Does the gentleman mean that we like to hear them or that we want to hear them to refute them if they are actually made?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. The gentleman from Georgia is perfectly fair in that direction. He is my personal friend and yet my enemy so far as the question of prohibition is concerned. On that we will never agree.

The tremendous interest that was shown in the last few days in those hearings held in the Senate has evidently awakened the people of the country to the seriousness of this proposition. It is all well enough to say that it is the Constitution and the law, and that the law should be respected. Of course, everybody subscribes to that proposition. But here we have a situation that is bringing about a condition that is utterly intolerable. A condition which, as my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. CULLEN] said, nobody respects.

The hearings before the other body and the facts brought out by the distinguished Senator from Maryland yesterday surely must convince even the most doubting Thomas that there is something radically and seriously wrong with this law, and that it should be changed or modified in some distinct respect. We also read in the press of my city about the efforts recently made by the Republicans of the New York State Legislature to give our State a referendum on this question.

Later in my remarks I intend to incorporate the names of the Members of the New York Democratic delegation that were Members of Congress when the eighteenth amendment was enacted and prove to the House and to the country that if the 12 Republican Members of the New York State delegation had voted with the Democratic Members of that delegation from New York, with a single exception, instead of the eighteenth amendment being enacted into law and on the statute books of the Nation by a majority of nine, we never would have had prohibition, as it would have been defeated by four votes at that time.

This is the record. And now we see the Republicans of the State Legislature of New York falling over each other because of the polls that have recently taken place all over the country and realizing that something definite must be done to go along with this tidal wave. So they now want a referendum in order to give the people of the State of New York, the State that pays 20 per cent, practically, of all the bills contracted by the country—to give that State a chance to express their will, if you please, as to how they stand on this question of prohibition enforcement.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Is it not a fact that up to this good hour, possibly expressed by this flop or somersault of the Republican Party in New York, that party was entirely under the domination and control of the Anti-Saloon League?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. I thank my colleague. He states the exact fact.

I am sure that I am enunciating a certain truth when I make the statement that not since the historic days of the Volstead legislative debate, in which I was a participant, has so much time of the House been devoted to the question of the success or failure of the operation of the prohibition law. It is my pleasure to number among my friends in this body many who are sincerely and intensively on both sides of this question. Of course, my sentiment for personal reasons are with those of my colleagues who believe with me that in the enactment of this legislation the Congress made a grave mistake, as proved thus far by the failure of this law. By a fair and impartial consideration of all the facts concerning this very difficult problem we will eventually be in position to evolve a plan that will extricate us from our present condition, and light the path and show the road that will lead to temperance and sobriety, which all decent people so ardently desire.

Now, my friends, what are the facts; and, as I said before, it is only on this basis can we reach any definite conclusions on this perplexing problem. Is this law a success? Has it made for the elimination of drunkenness, of graft, of law defiance? After a six years' thorough trial, at enormous loss of revenue and tremendous enforcement cost and ever increasing expense to the Government, has it obtained and does it hold the approval and indorsement of the people of the land?

THE DIGEST AND RECENT NATIONAL POLLS

In that great American weekly, the Literary Digest, issue of April 3, 1926, we get the following figures:

The Literary Digest poll was taken during the summer of 1922. About 10,000,000 blank ballots were sent out by mail, addressed to individual citizens, on specially prepared paper, with special precautions taken against fraud, repeating, or irregular voting. A list of voters was taken from the telephone lists of the country, with an added country-wide representation of women voters and factory workers, classes not likely to be fully represented in the telephone books. The ballots were mailed out with entire impartiality and the returns were tabulated and published without comment. The result of the grand total of 922,383 ballots received was reported as follows in the Digest of September 9, 1922, and makes an interesting comparison with the 1926 newspaper returns:

	For enforcement		For modification		For repeal
	Number	Per cent	Number	Per cent	Number	Per cent
Main poll.....	306,255	38.5	325,549	41.1	164,453	20.4
Women's poll.....	48,485	44.5	39,914	36.7	20,448	18.8
Factory polls.....	1,453	8.4	10,671	62.1	4,955	29.5
Total.....	355,193	38.6	376,334	40.8	189,856	20.6

The totals for the three largest newspaper polls conducted last month, with practically all returns in, were reported as follows in the New York Sun:

Newspaper Enterprise Association, through 375 cooperating newspapers
For retention and enforcement of prohibition..... 329,274
For repeal of prohibition amendment..... 545,839
For Volstead modification to allow wine and beer..... 864,949

Hearst newspapers and others cooperating

For prohibition..... 188,987
Against prohibition..... 915,969
For wine and beer..... 1,040,937
Against wine and beer..... 180,554
Chicago Tribune, New York Daily News, and cooperating newspapers
For wine and beer..... 340,401
Against wine and beer..... 35,820

Grand total, using last two figures of Hearst poll as the most representative on a straight "change or no change" division

For existing laws..... 545,648
For modification or repeal..... 2,792,126

A tabulation of the 1,740,062 votes in the Newspaper Enterprise Association poll, appearing in a dispatch in the New York World, shows votes from every State in the Union except Maryland, the largest vote being polled in New York. The outstanding features of the straw vote results are thus stated in a Newspaper Enterprise Association dispatch to the Washington News:

"1. Almost 50 per cent of the voters favored modification. Those for outright repeal numbered slightly over 31 per cent; those for keeping the law as it now stands, 19 per cent. Wet strength thus amounted to 81 per cent of the total.

"2. While large cities voted wet, the contention that smaller cities and towns favor the present law was not borne out. The dries led in 80 cities, the largest being Winston-Salem, N. C., with a population of 69,000. They gained pluralities in 30 more. But in 79 cities of less than 15,000 population the prohibition vote was exceeded either by the modification vote or the vote for straight repeal.

Surely no person will contend that the Literary Digest in this table has attempted to do other than to present the facts as they are taken from its own and other reliable newspaper polls. Like Caesar's wife, such a paper, occupying as it does the leading place in its chosen field, should be and is above suspicion in this and every other matter which appears in its columns from week to week.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

The testimony reflected in the foregoing table, while profoundly impressive and startling to many, must of necessity, because of its accuracy, carry conviction and focus attention up this subject. In addition to this phase of the case, we have the record of present-day crime in the form of burglary, banditry, highway robbery, theft, and murder in every conceivable form in all parts of the country. Our newspapers are filled daily with accounts of these depredations, not in the dead of night but in broad daylight and in the business and crowded sections of our largest cities.

The time of our police forces is divided 25 per cent in apprehending burglars, highwaymen, and so forth, and 75 per cent in the futile attempt of hunting run runners and bootleggers in all sections of the land and sea. In this effort to locate and bring to justice the violators of the prohibition law the agents of the enforcement bureau have not hesitated to encroach upon the private precincts of the home when, in the opinion of such agents, there is even the unsupported evidence that liquor may be found in such a dwelling.

In the belief that in many cases it should employ men of shady reputation to ferret out and detect criminals who are violating the Volstead Act, the enforcement department of the Government are alleged to have employed—perhaps unintentionally, to be sure—men whose previous reputations in society would not bear the closest scrutiny, and who by authority are permitted to invade and search the homes of the decent people of the land. Some one has made the statement that the skeleton key of the midnight marauder has been replaced by the badge of many a crooked enforcement agent.

THE VOTE ON THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

As I said before, during the past few weeks the press of my State has been devoting considerable space to the present attitude of the Republican members of the New York Legislature toward the question of prohibition. Only the other day our papers indicated a desire on the part of these leaders to pass a resolution in the assembly to submit this very mooted question to a popular referendum by which all the people in the State would be enabled to express their preference for or against this law. It seems to me that this action on the part of the members of the party of opposite political faith to that to which I acknowledge allegiance is having a belated, however remarkable, change of front on this much agitated question. This discussion has prompted me to look up a little past history in an effort to ascertain the relative positions of the members of the New York delegation when the eighteenth amendment was voted upon in the House.

A simple calculation of the figures will show that on a two-thirds vote the amendment was adopted with 8 votes more than the necessary number to insure its submission to the several States for ratification.

Now the question arises, as I stated before, How did the New York delegation vote on this question? Perhaps, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I may be going back to ancient history in bringing back the water that has already gone over the dam, but in my humble judgment the information has a value, and may enable us to present the facts and set the record straight.

The following is the complete roll call, showing the vote of the House membership on the passage of the eighteenth amendment resolution:

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 282, nays 128, not voting 23, as follows:

Yays 282: Adamson, Alexander, Almon, Anderson, Anthony, Ashbrook, Aswell, Austin, Ayres, Baer, Bankhead, Barkley, Barnhart, Beakes, Bell, Beshlin, Black, Bland, Booher, Borland, Bowers, Brand, Brodbeck, Browne, Browning, Brumbaugh, Burnett, Burroughs, Butler, Byrnes of South Carolina, Byrns of Tennessee, Campbell of Kansas, Candler of Mississippi, Cannon, Caraway, Carlin, Carter of Massachusetts, Carter of Oklahoma, Clark of Florida, Claypool, Collier, Connally of Texas, Connelly of Kansas, Cooper of Ohio, Cooper of West Virginia, Cooper of Wisconsin, Copley, Costello, Cox, Cramton, Crisp, Currie of Michigan, Dale of Vermont, Dallinger, Darrow, Decker, Dempsey, Denison, Denton, Dickinson, Dill, Dillon, Dixon, Doolittle, Doughton, Dowell, Drane, Dunn, Elliott, Ellsworth, Elston, Emerson, Esch, Evans, Fairfield, Farr, Ferris, Fess, Fields, Fisher, Flood, Focht, Fordney, Foss, Foster, Frear, French, Fuller of Illinois, Fuller of Massachusetts, Gandy, Garrett of Tennessee, Garrett of Texas, Glass, Godwin of North Carolina, Good, Goodall, Gould, Graham of Illinois, Green of Iowa, Gregg, Griest, Hadley, Hamilton of Michigan, Hamilton of New York, Hamlin, Harrison of Mississippi, Harrison of Virginia, Hastings, Haugen, Hawley, Hayden, Helm, Helvering, Hensley, Hersey, Hicks, Hilliard, Holland, Hollingsworth, Hood, Houston, Howard, Hull of Tennessee, Humphreys, Hutchinson, Ireland, Jacoway, James, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of South Dakota, Johnson of Washington, Jones of Texas, Jones of Virginia, Kearns, Keating, Kehoe, Kelley of Michigan, Kelly of Pennsylvania, Kennedy of Iowa, Kettner, Kless of Pennsylvania, Kincheloe, King, Kinkaid, Kitchin, Knutson, Kraus, Kreider, La Follette, Langley, Larsen, Lee of Georgia, Lenroot, Lever, Little, Littlepage, Lobeck, Lundeen, Lunn, McClintie, McCormick, McCulloch, McFadden, McKenzie, McKeown, McKinley, McLaughlin of Michigan, Mapes, Mays, Miller of Minnesota, Mondell, Montague, Moon, Moores of Indiana, Morgan, Mott, Nelson, Nichols of South Carolina, Norton, Oldfield, Oliver of Alabama, Olney, Osborne, Overstreet, Padgett, Paige, Park, Parker of New York, Peters, Platt, Polk, Powers, Pratt, Price, Purnell, Quinn, Ragsdale, Rainey, Baker, Ramseyer, Randall, Rankin, Rayburn, Reavis, Reed, Robbins, Robinson, Ronjue, Rose, Rowe, Rowland, Rubey, Rucker, Russell, Sanders of Indiana, Sanders of Louisiana, Sanders of New York, Saunders of Virginia, Schall, Scott of Iowa, Scott of Michigan, Sears, Sells, Shackelford, Shallenberger, Shouse, Sims, Sinnott, Sisson, Slomp, Sloan, Smith of Idaho, Smith of Michigan, Snell, Snook, Steagall, Stedman, Steensson, Stephens of Mississippi, Sterling of Illinois, Sterling of Pennsylvania, Stevenson, Stiness, Strong, Summers, Sweet, Switzer, Taylor of Arkansas, Temple, Thomas, Thompson, Tillman, Timberlake, Towner, Treadway, Venable, Vestal, Vinson, Volstead, Walker, Walton, Watson, Watkins, Watson of Mr. Neely and Mr. Stephens of Nebraska (for) with Mr. Gallivan (against).

Mr. Taylor of Colorado and Mr. George W. Fairchild (for) with Mr. Curry of California (against).

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

From this roll call it has not been difficult to extract the names of the New York delegation and show the way each Member cast his vote upon that historic occasion:

For the amendment:

Republicans, Platt, Snell, Parker, Mott, Gould, Dunn, Sanders, Dempsey, Hamilton, Pratt, Hicks, Rowe	12
Democrats, Lunn	1

	13
--	----

The amendment, therefore, passed the House by a majority of 9 votes. If all of the Members on the Republican side of the New York delegation had followed the leadership of their Democratic colleagues from the same State with a single exception, this law which has caused such widespread dissatisfaction would have been defeated by 4 votes. We should be able to determine once and for all from these figures what might have happened if our Republican brethren from the State of New York had seen the light in 1917.

COST OF A USELESS EXPERIMENT

Representatives in Congress who in the past have had the temerity to express their views were immediately denounced by the followers of Wayne B. Wheeler as nullificationists, anarchists, and destroyers of our Constitution. Recently, however, the broad, tolerant exponents of all religious beliefs entered the fray and the Nation heard in no uncertain terms of the desire for repeal or modification of this law. This cry, as I said, went up from the ministers of every denomination and the leading rabbis representing the Jewish faith.

Even the dignified and courteous statements of the clergy have met with the violent denunciations from the Anti-Saloon League forces as have been directed at the Members of Congress who are not in agreement with the dry element. We can not substitute law for morals. Fanaticism must not supplant temperance. Men may gain eternal life by adherence to the Ten Commandments as laid down on Mount Sinai, but never by Volsteadism as pronounced by the Wheelerites at Capitol Hill.

The tremendous increase in the number of deaths from alcoholism, the steady increase in the number of arrests for drunkenness, the constant demand for increased appropriations to enforce the law, the alarming crime wave that sweeps the Nation, to which I have already referred in this speech, the inadequacy of our present jails and penitentiaries, as well as the appointment of numerous additional judges to try men made criminals for committing an offense that is not a crime, are indicative of the impossibility of enforcing an unpopular and un-American law.

The Federal appropriations alone will run to $33,000,000 this year, and when we take into consideration the enormous loss of revenue cut off by prohibition, as well as the great loss to our merchant marine, Volsteadism becomes the Nation's most colossal burden and blunder. The United States Coast Guard, which now has an armed naval fleet as well as an aviation squadron to enforce the law, will at the beginning of the new fiscal year have a personnel greater than the United States Navy in the administration of President Cleveland.

Surely, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, we are paying a high price for a fallacious and unworkable experiment.

THE PRESS, THE PUBLIC, AND MEDICAL PROFESSION

There is abundant evidence from the press, the public, and, best of all in this instance, from the medical profession, that under proper supervision, as practiced in the Province of Quebec, there are no harmful or baneful effects from the moderate use of alcoholic beverages. In substantiation of this declaration I quote the following articles, taken from the New York World, Detroit Free Press, and the New York Times:

The New York World says:

To what point has prohibition brought us?

We have, first, a law which not even the most light-hearted observer believes is applied to-day with equal justice to rich and poor alike, or can be so applied with all the complicated legal machinery and all the armies of secret service men and all the ships of all the fleets which have yet been furnished to the cause of prohibition. The rich—not only the overwhelmingly rich but the ordinary heads-above-water rich who are most men's neighbors—keep on drinking. They drink what they wish to drink and find its acquisition easy. Nobody pretends that the case is otherwise, that it is true only in incorrigible New York, and that it is not true in cities and towns the country over. It is the first important fact about prohibition that the impetus to break the law comes from those same respectable, well-to-do people who regard themselves as pillars of society.

All over the country the colossal failure of prohibition is recognized by those who see things as they actually exist. The Detroit Free Press, after hoping for the best, is obliged, in the light of recent disclosures, to admit the collapse of the prohibition movement and says:

How long will it take those in authority to understand that the cure for the conditions that all decent citizens regret lies in a liberal live-and-let-live tolerance and that the unreasonable curtailment of personal liberty can but end in economic mutiny?

One physician's views on the subject of prohibition are voiced in the following article in the New York Times. Dr. Kurt L. Elsner tells Times readers just what he thinks of the whole subject of prohibition:

Strange to say, as much as has been written about prohibition, pro or contra, very little has been said about one side of it, i. e., the harm it has done to the beginning of self-education of the American people in the moderate use of alcoholic drinks. Self-education had begun and was growing nicely. Its seeds had sprouted and were thriving healthily, when, like the proverbial fool, prohibition rushed in and trampled the tender plants under foot.

Also the following article taken from the Rational American, of New York, issue of November, 1925:

Sir William Osler, formerly of Oxford University: "In moderation wine, beer, and spirits may be taken throughout a long life without impairing the general health. I should be sorry to give up the use of alcohol in the severer forms of enteric fever."

Dr. William Edward Fitch, of the Vanderbilt Clinic: "It is the opinion of careful students of the subject that the moderate use of alcohol in health is harmless. It undoubtedly has a place in disease. There are reasons for believing that alcohol actually increases the resisting powers of the body to the poisonous toxins of septic fever."

Dr. Charles Gilmore Kerley, of the New York Polyclinic School and Hospital: "Alcohol is occasionally of great service in diseases of children. Under certain conditions it answers better than any other means of stimulation."

Dr. L. Emmett Holt, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York: "With many nursing women the use of malted liquors—ale, beer, etc.—increases the quantity of milk and the proportion of fat. There is little doubt that alcohol is at times of much benefit."

Dr. George F. Still, of King's College, London: "The value of alcohol in the early stages of severe diarrhea, when there is severe exhaustion and collapse, is, I think, quite undeniable. I think an unbiased observer must admit that brandy is sometimes very valuable in a bad case of pneumonia."

Dr. Chalmers Watson, of the Royal Infirmary, Edinburgh: "There is no question of the undoubted value of alcohol in the treatment of certain diseases, especially in their critical stages."

Dr. Robert Hutchinson, of the London Hospital: "Alcohol certainly spares fats and sometimes carbohydrates and yields heat and energy in the body. Of this fact there is no longer any doubt, and it at once entitles alcohol to rank as a food. Wine used in moderation seems to add to the agreeableness of life, and whatever adds to the agreeableness of life adds to its resources and power."

Dr. William Tibbles, of the Royal Institute of Public Health, London: "Alcohol is primarily an appetizer. Convalescent, debilitated, or aged persons frequently eat more food when it is accompanied by a glass of beer, wines, or diluted spirits. The value of such a beverage to those who need it is admitted by most scientific men. Alcohol is a rapid and trustworthy restorative. In many cases it is truly life preserving, owing to its power to sustain cardiac and nervous energy."

Dr. Hobart Amory Hare, of the University of Pennsylvania: "Clinical experience too great to be ignored stands for the continued use of alcohol. The chief uses of the drug are as a rapidly acting equalizer of the circulation and as a systematic support in low fevers and prolonged wasting diseases in old age and in convalescence from acute diseases."

Dr. A. A. Brill, of the University of New York: "Alcohol has an undisputed place in the human physiological and psychological economy."

Dr. Charles E. de M. Sajous, of Temple University, Pennsylvania: "Malt liquors—ale, stout, and beer—contain diastase, which aids the digestion of starchy foods. They are especially tonic in effect."

Dr. George F. Butler, of the Chicago College of Medicine and Surgery: "Atonic dyspepsia and weakened digestion are generally benefited by some form of alcohol. As a pure cardiac stimulant, alcohol is remarkably serviceable. In certain stages of various acute diseases alcohol is one of the most potent and useful remedies."

Dr. Paul Bartholow, of the Jefferson Medical College: "Beer, ale, and porter are much and justly esteemed as stomachic tonics and restoratives in chronic wasting diseases. Alcohol is an important remedy in the various forms of pulmonary pythisis. In convalescence from acute diseases there can be no difference of opinion as to the great value of wine as a restorative."

Dr. Samuel O. L. Potter, of the Cooper Medical College, San Francisco: "In anemia and chlorosis good red wines are almost indispensable. It is an absolute necessity in the treatment of lobar pneumonia. In fevers alcohol is often most serviceable. Some physicians agree with Mr. Lawson Tait, who declared himself fully persuaded, after 30 years of life as hard in work and as full of responsibility as well could be, that the moderate use of alcohol is a necessity in our modern life."

Dr. John V. Shoemaker, of the Medical-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia: "Alcohol is in some measure antidotal to the poison of the bacillus tuberculosis, and it is to this fact that its unquestionable value in prolonging life in pythisis is due."

Dr. John H. Musser, of the University of Pennsylvania: "There is, I think, no rational doubt that small doses of alcohol are at times useful with those that are out of health, for their stimulating effect upon the appetite and upon digestion, and occasionally for their effect upon other functions. When solid food can not be taken, alcohol is our sheet anchor."

Dr. W. Gilman Thompson, of Cornell University: "There are a number of diseases in which the temporary use of alcohol is of positive service, and there are a number of cases in which it is a positive necessity in order to prolong life. Whatever controversy still exists over the physiological effects of alcohol as a food, it is undeniable that in some cases of disease it is clinically indispensable. The value of alcohol in the treatment of fevers is now universally recognized."

Dr. Robert Hutchinson, of the London Hospital: "'Rough cider'—that is, the completely fermented apple juice—taken in moderation, agrees with most gouty patients. The bottled or 'champagne' cider, which is imperfectly fermented, should never be used, owing to its undoubted liability to set up intestinal fermentation. Alcohol is the best possible hypnotic in many cases of chronic, psychic insomnia."

Dr. Binford Throne, writing in Forschheimer's Therapeutics: "All cases of diphtheria have more or less myocarditis, and all should be given stimulants from the first. The best is good whisky or brandy."

Henry L. Elsner, of Syracuse University: "In pneumonia—the experienced know that there are cases in which it is absolutely indicated."

Dr. William H. Smith, of Harvard University: "Influenza: When extension into the lung occurs, supporting measures must be pushed. Alcohol in some form should be given freely."

J. P. Crozier Griffith, of the University of Pennsylvania: "In scarlet fever with cardiac weakness alcohol in some form is one of the most rapid and satisfactory stimulants."

Dr. Julius Grinkler, of the Northwestern University Medical School: "For the obstinate sleeplessness of chronic cerebral anemia nothing equals in efficacy the imbibition of a night draft consisting of either a glass of beer, wine, or even whisky in small quantities."

John Rubrah, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore: "In severe cases of smallpox alcohol may be added to the dietary with great advantage."

Dr. Herbert Maxon King, of the Loomis Sanitarium for Tuberculosis: "Small doses of alcohol in the form of wine, beer, or ale with meals will often stimulate a flagging appetite and enable the patient to consume a normal amount of food. When the carbohydrate content of the diet can not be brought up to the desired quantity, the addition of wine or beer to the diet may be of distinct advantage. As a stomachic in cases of hypoaecidity, loss of appetite, and consequent impairment of digestion, the lighter wines and malt liquors may be prescribed to advantage."

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, New York City, said:

The object desired by those who supported prohibition was the suppression of public drinking places and putting an end to the political activities of those engaged in the manufacture and sale of liquors. These two ends commended themselves to immense numbers of the population who did not stop to think what unforeseen consequences might follow.

The saloon has to all intents and purposes been abolished. So far so good. But the liquor traffic flourishes on a scale of almost unexampled magnitude, untaxed and with immense profits, although carried on secretly in violation of the law.

In my judgment the evil effects of the policy adopted by the United States on moral politics and public order far outweigh the advantages. It has become plain to everyone that nation-wide prohibition can not be enforced, simply for the reason that it affronts the judgment as well as the moral political principles of vast numbers of the population, including a large proportion of the most intelligent and most upright.

In addition, nation-wide prohibition has brought in its train a spirit of lawlessness and political hypocrisy and cowardice that is little short of appalling. We are told that by reason of our constitutional law the eighteenth amendment can never be repealed. If so, it is certain to go the way of the fifteenth amendment, enacted after the Civil War, to give political rights to the negroes. In at least 10 States no attention is paid to this amendment, and no attempt has been made to enforce it for 35 years.

In a recent statement of his stand on prohibition Archbishop Curley, of Baltimore, said:

The question of prohibition lies in the hands of the people. If the prohibition law is unpopular, the people should take steps to repeal it, but so long as it is a law it should be respected and observed.

When the war began we found it necessary for the successful carrying out of the Government's plans to intrust great powers to one man. This centralization of power has continued since the war. There is a growing tendency to take power from the States and place it in the hands of bureaus in Washington.

We were told when we entered the war that we were fighting to rid the world of bad government. I am wondering if we ourselves are not approaching close to autocracy.

We hear talk about government by the people, of the people, and for the people, but I do not believe that there is a country in the world where the people take less interest in the way their Government is conducted than we in America.

James P. Holland, president of the New York State Federation of Labor:

The prohibition amendment is an unreasonable and unnatural law. There is no use at all in discussing the question whether or not it can be enforced. It can not. Obedience to any and all laws is not at all such a great virtue as some people try to make believe. In fact, all that is good in governmental theory and practice throughout the world is due to disobedience of unreasonable, unnatural, and consequently tyrannical laws. The fathers of our own Republic, who made the original Constitution, knew that sumptuary laws are against nature. That is the reason why they kept the power to make such laws out of the original Constitution by an overwhelming vote.

Being against the laws of nature, the maintenance of the prohibition amendment and its enforcement act, the Volstead law, is a physical impossibility. Force creates force. The more force you use against another resisting force, the more resisting force you create. You create very little steam in the teakettle on the stove with the lid and spout open. But solder both of them tight and soon the explosion will wreck your stock and rock your house.

A BILL OF PARTICULARS

Let me say in conclusion that prohibition as now administered on the statute books has never solved, nor will it solve, the problem of temperance, for the following reasons:

Because its enforcement lacks the support of a majority of the American people.

Because its enforcement is costing the people millions of dollars in increased taxation.

Because it is increasingly corrupting the morals of the people, making them lawbreakers.

Because it has resulted in widespread corruption and bribery of Government officials.

Because it is an infringement upon the liberty and freedom of the American people.

Because it is teaching young girls and boys to secretly indulge in alcoholic stimulants.

Because it forbids pure and harmless beer and wine and substitutes dangerous poisons.

Because it is the cause of increasing deaths from drinking poisonous bootleg concoctions.

Because it is the cause of increasing the pitiful army of victims of narcotic drugs—dope fiends.

Because it was enacted to carry out the wishes of a few and in disregard of the majority.

Because it has made the booze problem rather than economic problems the main political issue.

Because it has created a contempt for all law upon the part of a majority of the people.

Because it is class legislation, depriving the poor of what the rich can easily obtain.

Because it is a violation of the Constitution, the fundamentals of government, and the Bill of Rights.

Because the Volstead Act is un-American, tyrannical, and liberty destroying. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, some few days ago the redoubtable Hon. Clem Shaver emerged from a long period of hibernation and promulgated the pronouncement that the Democratic Party was responsible for tax reduction. This pronouncement was not received by the American public with the same spirit of earnestness that it was propounded; in fact, Mr. American Voter received it rather in a spirit of levity. He leaned back in his chair, folded his fingers over his knee, had a good laugh, and said, "If you know any more good jokes, tell us another one, Clem." Since that time Mr. Clem Shaver, the distinguished chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has submerged again into this den of hibernation, and it seems that the mantle of leadership has now descended upon the shoulders of our distinguished friend from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] to secure for the Democratic Party an issue.

On several occasions I have had time allotted me under this appropriation bill. However, on each occasion I was unable to find the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas on the floor. He was making speeches in the North, East, South, and West, and was a very busy man. I do not say this in a spirit of criticism. I have the utmost admiration for my distinguished colleague from Arkansas; I have the utmost sympathy for him; in fact, my heart bleeds in sympathy for him, because I realize what an enormous task he has. If he can revive the interest of the American people in the Democratic Party, or if he can revive that party itself, then I say, gentlemen, the days of necromancy have not passed. He most certainly can practice the black art and is a political legerdemain of transcendent talent:

If you will remember, gentlemen, before the gentleman from Arkansas went into my district, almost on bended knee and in humble supplication, I begged and besought him to go there and talk the tariff as he talks it here on the floor. I told him to go there and not take a position where he could be all things to all men. I told him not to take a position where he could tell the farmer that he meant to reduce the tariff only on the finished product and tell the manufacturer that he intended to reduce it only on the raw material. I went to a great deal of trouble to delineate those things he might find there that were affected by the tariff. I told him we produced zinc; I told him we produced lead; I told him we produced oil; I told him we produced cotton; I told him we produced cattle, wheat, and corn, and that we had there several manufacturing establishments.

I asked him in all fairness and in all candor to go to Oklahoma and tell those people just how he would affect their particular interests by this boasted downward reduction of the tariff that we hear so much about on the floor of the House.

At that time the gentleman from Arkansas made a promise and I made a prophecy, and I think that subsequent events have fully vindicated that prophecy. That prophecy was that the promise would never be fulfilled. According to the accounts I received from there, he never told a single man how it would affect him, on a single thing, through the reduction of the tariff schedules. He went there, and he did talk generally. He talked about a strange and a new creature, a sort of maverick without brand or without a master. He called it a competitive tariff, but he did not tell anybody exactly what he meant. He did not tell me, and he did not tell my constituency, but he talked about it in glittering generalities and pleasing platitudes.

It often occurs to me when I hear these general talks on the tariff and on the tariff schedules, and particularly when I read and hear the speeches of the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], that the condition is very much like the professor who was lecturing his class in physics on electricity. He saw one boy nodding in his chair, paying no particular attention to the lecture, and he suddenly asked him, "Young man, what is electricity?" The young fellow arose, felt called on to say something. So he said, "Professor, I did know, but I have forgotten." In hopeless horror the professor threw up both hands and said, "Merciful heavens, the only man who ever knew what electricity is, and he has forgotten."

Gentlemen, that is the way with the gentleman from Arkansas. He is the only one who knows what is meant by a competitive tariff, and he does not deign to disclose it.

If the gentleman from Arkansas is really sincere about this subject that is so close to his heart, I believe I have conceived a way by which we can have this tariff issue, this downward reduction, this tariff for revenue only, this competitive tariff, made a distinct issue on every article it affects. I have prepared a bill for introduction by the gentleman from Arkansas. This bill will ask that the Fordney-McCumber tariff law be reduced to where it would be identical with the Underwood Act, the Democratic policy of tariff. I am going to present this bill to the gentleman from Arkansas; and if he is really sincere and if he thoroughly believes in the Underwood Act, I am going to ask him to introduce it by just dropping it in the hopper.

I want to tell him that if he does not do this, if he does not introduce this bill, then the only reason he does not do it is because he does not dare to do it, he does not dare to be fair on the proposition. He does not dare tell the farmer he is going to put him back on the free list. He does not dare tell the zinc men in my district he is going to cut their protection in half.

I shall not help him pass this bill if he introduces it; in fact, I shall oppose it in every way I can; but if the gentleman will introduce the bill and make this issue clear to the people, then if the people of America want that sort of tariff they can oust men of my faith and can send men here who believe in the Underwood Act; and not only oust me, but they can oust some of these synthetic Democrats, these Iroquoian Democrats, these Tammany Democrats, who are Democrats in name only, believing in a protective tariff and in Republican principles of economy.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Does the gentleman have any instance of that in reference to Tammany Democrats and their position on protection?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. No. For the information of the gentleman from New York I will say I have noticed that the Tammany Democrats keep very discreetly silent on the tariff.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Has not the position of the Democrats from New York, referred to familiarly as Tammany Democrats, been consistent in their opposition to a high protective tariff?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. No, sir.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If the gentleman will search the records he will find that is true.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. If the gentleman will permit, we will let the records speak for themselves.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will ask, in justice to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], does not the gentleman from Oklahoma know that one of the greatest and most eloquent and logical exponents in opposition to a high protective tariff who has ever been on this floor was the distinguished Bourke Cockran, late of New York, who only passed out from this Chamber a few years ago? [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. And, I might add, JOHN CAREW might be added to the list also.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. If Tammany wants a low protective tariff or a tariff for revenue only I have offered them an opportunity to make it an issue, and then they can quit "cussing" prohibition and talk a little about the tariff. The Republicans will gladly meet them on the tariff issue.

Not only are these particular Democrats I have referred to, in a way, affiliated with or rather converted to Republican economic principles, but there are some of the Democrats, I have learned, from the old South who seem to have departed from the political fallacy of free trade. Not long ago the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made a good, old-time, protective-tariff speech. In this speech he quoted from a speech he had delivered some six years ago. I took it he made a good Republican, protective-tariff speech at least once every six years, but the gentleman denied it. He said he made one every year; and for the information of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] I want to say if he will introduce the bill I have handed him, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], when he gets back in his district to campaign with the cattlemen down there, will not only make a good Republican protective-tariff speech once a year, but will make a good Republican protective-tariff speech every 15 minutes, from every flat rock, soap box, and platform in his district. I am sorry the gentleman is not here. I would like to offer him a chance to deny the statement I have made.

Gentlemen, the tariff may be an issue. It seems to be the only issue that has been brought forward.

As to the other issues, as far as this Congress is concerned, I hardly believe the World Court will be an issue. I do not see how it can be. According to my tabulation, 94 per cent of the Democratic Senators voted for the ratification of that protocol and only 74 per cent of the Republicans.

It can hardly be the tax-reduction measure we have had here for our consideration because its intrinsic and fundamental merit demanded almost a majority, if not a majority, of the votes of the Democrats of the House, and it was most ably advocated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the ranking Member on the Democratic side, of the Ways and Means Committee.

It can not be the Italian debt settlement acceptance, because its intrinsic and fundamental merit appealed to a considerable number if not a majority of the Democrats, and it was most ably advocated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

I want to say on behalf of Mr. GARNER and Mr. CRISP and many other gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle that if they had chosen they could have played politics on either of these issues; but they rose above that low plane. They were economists first and politicians later. They were patriots first and partisans afterwards. They were statesmen first, last, and all the time, and they are entitled to the thanks and the esteem of their country. I say this regardless of the fact I do not believe in their political party or their political policies.

I want also to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], that when he was urging the acceptance of the Italian debt settlement, he made one statement that I certainly appreciate and certainly thank him for. He said here on the floor of this House:

If I go back to my district and I am criticized for having advocated this measure, I am going to tell the cotton farmer in my district that I cast my vote directly in his interest when I cast it in favor of the settlement of the Italian debt, because it will afford a market for the principal product that he produces; Italy is one of the great consumers of cotton.

I, too, come from a land where old King Cotton extends his fleecy flag of surrender to the nimble fingers of the contented farmer, and I want to go back and tell my farmer friends I cast a vote in their favor when I cast my vote as Mr. CRISP cast his.

I have heard on the floor of the House a great deal of calamity howling. I have heard a great deal of criticism. I have heard Members who for purely political purposes criticize nearly every man who is at the head of a department at this time; and I think they do this purely for political and personal purposes, and I have had enough of it. My appetite is surfeited, has sickened, and is now dead.

I want to say to these critics it is hard to do a constructive thing and it is easy to criticize. When there is no responsibility on you and you are watching the other man try to accomplish an end, you can always improve. When you are under no responsibility you can always sit back in the shade and tell the other fellow how to do the work. I do not like that policy. I do not like that attitude. I want to tell them that an empire is not built with that spirit.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am sorry the gentleman was not here in the Wilson days, when he could have helped keep down so much criticism from his side of the House.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I thank the gentleman for his consideration. However, I am not prepared to make any observation on the situation that existed at that time, as I was not here. I will probably have enough sins to account for when I get home without having the sins of the past accredited to me.

I want to tell the Members of this House that no less an authority, I am informed, than Arthur Brisbane has said that if there is a new real-estate boom that boom will be in northeastern Oklahoma and northwestern Arkansas—the playgrounds of Arkansas. I believe him to be correct, as that section of the country has the inherent wealth and intrinsic value to produce prosperity for all those who will take advantage of the opportunity that it presents. And unless some fool political nostrum or nostrums unearths and uproots the prosperity of those people they will enjoy prosperity in the future in a measure they do not now anticipate.

During the latter part of this month we are going to have a convention for realtors of the United States in the city of Tulsa, and I want in this connection to invite you all to come down there. I want to show you a different spirit than the one which prevails sometimes on the floor of the House. I want to show you men there who really believe and really know that this Government is the most magnificent ever created and maintained by the combined efforts of men. [Applause.] Men there who have a deep and abiding faith in its noble destiny. I want you to witness the genius of capital, the genius of labor, the genius of industry, and the genius of agriculture joined hand in hand in good fellowship, hand in hand with their country and their God, who are marching down the broad perspective of the future in even cadence to a grander, a finer, and a more magnificent arena of human achievement. [Applause.]

I want to show you men who have risen above personal and political criticism, men who have that spirit of which empire is builded, men who really do constructive things and do not spend their efforts and time in waspish criticism.

I want to return to my subject and say a little concerning the farmer and the tariff. Sometime ago on the floor of this House a very distinguished Member presented a resolution signed by 10,000 or 100,000 or 1,000,000 Iowa farmers in which they resolved with all the emphasis at their command that they were being stifled by this octopus, the tariff.

Just subsequent to that the Agricultural Committee issued invitations to farmers from various States to come before that committee and testify. These farmers did come before that committee, and we heard from them directly.

On that committee were some of the most talented and some of the best equipped Members on the Democratic side, and they cross-examined these men. Since that time we have not heard a single word from a single Member saying that the farmer wants the tariff reduced. Is not this a salient fact, a startling fact?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? I am now ready to answer any questions that my friend the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma wants to ask me. I understand that he was hankering to ask me questions.

Mr. TINCER. The gentleman from Oklahoma paid the gentleman from Texas some high compliments; he said the gentleman from Texas was a protectionist. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I am not a Republican protectionist. I had to go to the department, Mr. Chairman, as this unimportant general debate was going on and was absent a few minutes, and as soon as I got back some one told me that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY] wanted to ask me some questions, and now I am ready to answer.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Well, for the gentleman's gratification I will ask him a question. Since he has finally found out that there is a protective tariff on the cattle produced in his district would he be willing to take that protection away from the cattlemen?

Mr. BLANTON. I would take the protection off if as a condition precedent for keeping it on I found that it was necessary to rob all the people of the United States, including the cattlemen, to the extent of 300 or 400 per cent on most everything that they buy. Is not that a good answer?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. That is about the best answer the gentleman could make.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of a competitive tariff that protects the farmer as well as the New England manufacturer, that distributes a part of the $500,000,000 a year collected through the customhouses upon the products of the farms and the ranches. That is something the producers are entitled to, and the people in Oklahoma are like the people in Texas, they want a show in on that proposition. Does that answer the gentleman?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Yes; about as well as the gentleman could. Let me ask the gentleman this plain, unqualified question. I am a Republican. I stand on the Fordney-McCumber Act. I believe in it. I think it is the only safe kind of political economy. I ask the gentleman this further question: Would he vote to substitute the Underwood schedules in lieu of the Fordney-McCumber schedule? The Underwood law is the Democratic principle of the tariff.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I deny that. The Underwood bill gave practically nothing to the farmers and stockmen of the United States. The Underwood bill gave practically all of the $375,000,000 that it collected to the New England manufacturers. It did not give anything to the farmers and the ranchmen of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer a dozen questions. I am here to answer the gentleman. I have nothing else to do right now.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. For the gentleman's information I will say that the Underwood Act was the act in force during the Democratic administration, and the Fordney-McCumber Act is the act that has been in force during the Republican administration. Which act does the gentleman prefer?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not prefer either. Neither one is for the farmer or for the ranchman, and I came to Congress in 1916 on a platform that pledged me to vote for something that was going to give the farmer, the stockman, and the producer a look-in on this proposition, and I have been fighting for it here ever since.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. That is what a protective tariff does.

Mr. BLANTON. But the orthodox Republican protective tariff gives the farmers a copper penny and the New England manufacturers several hundred million dollars.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I do not believe I will yield any more of my time in order to ask the gentleman any question.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not think the gentleman would want to ask me any more questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, may I have some more time?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. My time is all pledged, I regret to say.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from Iowa does not care to hear any more about the tariff.

Mr. TINCER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is out of order, not having been recognized by the Chairman and no time having been yielded to him by either side. He makes a comment that goes into the Record and which is entirely inappropriate and out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman from Texas interjects something that is out of order, it does not go into the Record, does it? The man in charge of the floor can strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman having control of the floor can strike it out, but nobody had control of the floor at that time.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The Record is in control of the speaker having the floor, and not the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCER. But I still have the right to make a point of order when a Member is out of order, and especially when my point of order was well taken, as was the case in this instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled that the point of order was well taken.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Would the gentleman from Oklahoma care to have two minutes more? I can yield that to him.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I would like to have five minutes.
Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. In answer to the gentleman from Texas, I do not care to ask him any more questions, not because I fear his answers, but because I realize there are questions that he evades and refuses to answer.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not evade and do not refuse to answer.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. In view of the fact that the time is all taken, I shall not encroach upon the indulgence of the House longer.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD].

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I was not in the Chamber when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY] began his speech. However, I came in while he was speaking, and I am very glad to be here to hear what he had to say. I do not criticize him for being in favor of the rates in the Fordney-McCumber tariff law. I do not criticize him for voting for the Italian debt settlement. That is his business. I do want to answer two or three things, however, that have been said in the last month or two about myself; one thing that was said by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY], another by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GARBER], and also one statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER]. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GARBER] a few days ago assumed to quote me as saying that after the Fordney-McCumber tariff law was passed the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans might as well be oceans of fire.

Of course I made no such statement as that, and the gentleman knows I made no such statement as that. Also, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GARBER] made the statement to this effect: "Who admits that there were four or five million unemployed men during the Underwood Act? Why, Mr. OLDFIELD, of Arkansas." Of course I admitted nothing of the kind, because it is not true. There was not one word of truth in it, and there was not one word of truth in the statement that I said the two oceans might as well be oceans of flame. I do take the position that the rates in the Fordney-McCumber tariff law are entirely too high in many cases, that they are prohibitive in many cases, and that in many cases they are giving the monopolies of the country exorbitant rates. I take the position that a monopoly in this or any other country—but of course we are talking about our own country now—has no right to come to Congress and ask for high rates; and especially have they no right to come to Congress, whether the Republican or the Democratic Party be in power, and ask for prohibitory rates. When gentlemen say that the Fordney-McCumber tariff law put people to work in America and when they say there were four or five million men out of employment in America when the Fordney-McCumber tariff law went on the books, they ought to look up the facts before making that sort of wild statement.

Here are the facts from the census of manufactures of 1923, the latest figures that the Department of Commerce has: In 1914 there were 8,117,875 employees in the industries of America. In 1919 there were 10,688,849 employees in all of the industries of America. In 1921, the first year of the Harding administration, there were 8,265,821 employees, or a difference of 2,000,000 between 1919 and 1923. In 1923 they had jumped back to nearly as many employees in industrial America as there were in 1919, or 10,203,306. As a matter of fact, there never have been in this country, so far as industries are concerned, as many as 4,500,000 unemployed in America.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand the prices of commodities have been raised.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. What tariff law was in effect in the latter part of 1921?

Mr. OLDFIELD. The Underwood law. In 1919 it was also in effect, and there were more employed in America in 1919 than there were in 1923.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman deny that there were 4,000,000 idle men at the time President Harding was inaugurated?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Oh, certainly; because the figures are here.

Mr. TINCHER. That is in organized industry.

Mr. OLDFIELD. That is all the industries of America.

Mr. TINCHER. You deny that there were 4,000,000 idle men?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Certainly. There were not.

Mr. TINCHER. That is the first time it has been denied. I knew you would try to get away from it, but I did not think you would do it so soon. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLDFIELD. It is not true.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Nineteen hundred and nineteen was the year immediately after the war, and the total expenditures of the Government for Government activities alone were $18,500,000,000, and certainly there were some people employed then.

Mr. OLDFIELD. There were more employed then than there were in 1923.

Mr. BURTNESS. How does the gentleman account for the increase in numbers of about 2,000,000 from the time the Underwood bill went into effect until 1923?

Mr. OLDFIELD. There were more employed in 1919 under the Underwood tariff law than there were in 1923 under the Fordney-McCumber law.

Now, then, the Republican Party was in power in both Houses from the year 1919 on, and you did not attempt to pass tariff legislation when the Harding administration came into power on March 4, 1921. You did not pass the Fordney-McCumber tariff law until 1922, or nearly two years after your party went into power.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Republican Party could have placed a tariff law on the books in 1919?

Mr. OLDFIELD. You could have done it in August, 1921, but you did not do it until September, 1922.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Do not forget the emergency tariff.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Oh, that did not do anybody any good, and everybody knows that it did not. Farm products went down and down after it was passed, and also after the general tariff bill was put on the books.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman mean to deny that after the passage of the emergency tariff act wool advanced in value from 8 cents to 40 cents?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will say to the gentleman from North Dakota that there have been more bank failures in his State under the present administration than in any similar period in the history of the country. [Applause.] And that is not all. Under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, under this administration farm lands and farm equipment in America have been deflated from $79,000,000,000 to $59,000,000,000. [Applause.] That is the value of all the railroad companies in America, and yet you ascribe the increase of employment to the enactment of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law. You want the farmers of America to pay tribute to every manufacturer in the country; although your people are exclusively farmers. The gentleman from North Dakota voted for the Italian debt settlement, did he not?

Mr. BURTNESS. I can make it plain to the gentleman from Arkansas that our farmers are not in favor of reducing the tariff on wheat or wool or flax. They are convinced that they are receiving substantial benefits to-day from the enactment of the tariff.

Mr. OLDFIELD. We will see about that in the future. I think the farmers of the gentleman's State are too intelligent to believe that the rates in the Fordney-McCumber tariff law are beneficial to them. I do not believe it; I can not believe it. I do not think they think so in Iowa or in Kansas. I am sure they do not. Twenty billions of shrunken values of farm property in America. That has been apparent in Mr. GARBER's district and Mr. MONTGOMERY's district and all through the West, and yet you say the Fordney-McCumber tariff law is doing the people of the West and the farm population a great deal of good. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of course, I do not blame the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY] for taking the floor and attacking the bill that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] voted for; namely, the Underwood tariff law. And I ask you if you would have the nerve to introduce it as a substitute to-day for the Fordney-McCumber bill? I do not believe you would.

I do not blame the gentleman from Oklahoma for that, because recently the gentleman from Arkansas went into the district of the gentleman from Oklahoma and made a campaign speech and in that speech condemned the attitude of the gentleman from Oklahoma in Congress, and the gentleman from Oklahoma had the right to make the comparison he made between the Fordney-McCumber tariff law and the Underwood tariff law and let the people understand what the gentleman from Arkansas stands for and what he, the gentleman from Oklahoma, stands for. It is all right.

Maybe you can fool the voters with the proposition that the farm-deflation values since the war were not due to the fact that the farmers had to come down from inflated war prices, but that is not the fault of the Republican Party. You can make that work all right if you first get the people to forget.

Maybe you can get the American people to forget that after the war, and while your Underwood tariff law was still working, there was any idleness in America. Maybe they will forget the meeting of the American Legion boys on the Boston Common, where they prayed to the people of the great city of Boston to give them work in order that they might earn a livelihood. Maybe you can make them forget by giving them fictitious figures to the effect that there are only 10,000,000 employed in the industries of America, that all of them were not at work except 2,000,000 of them, and that the other 2,000,000 were idle. Maybe they will do that.

I say I do not blame the young man from Oklahoma for taking the floor, because you went into his district and you made some other charges in that speech. You had another issue besides the tariff, and that was the downright waste and extravagance of Coolidge in supporting the Mayflower. If you can get far enough away from Washington, judging other States by your own, maybe you can make some people believe that Calvin Coolidge has bought a new ship named the Mayflower, and is riding up and down the Potomac instead of attending to his own business. There will be as much merit in that campaign issue as there is in your charge that the Republican Party is responsible for the deflation in farm values since the war. [Applause.]

I do not know what tariff you are for. You are not for the tariff you helped to make. You have not enough nerve to put that in the basket to-night, as this young man said to you and say, "This was our Democratic tariff." You were in power for eight years. You had the Congress and the Executive for eight years. And say, "This is what I stand for, people of Oklahoma, while your man stands for the Fordney-McCumber law"; and say to them, "I come down to Oklahoma to tell you to retire him from the Congress."

You have not the nerve to face him on those rates. Why? Because, as Mr. BLANTON said—once in a while he stumbles onto something—there was not one particle of protection for agriculture in your bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] issued a round robin and furnished every Member of Congress on this, the Democratic side of the aisle, before the passage of the emergency tariff law, with a statement, complete in detail, showing the terrible results to agriculture by the enforcement of a law like that which you say you stand for but which you really do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I have not the time.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not afraid of questions. He is one man who is not afraid of them.

Mr. TINCHER. Well, go ahead.

Mr. BLANTON. I was wondering what on earth the Republican Party is going to do after the gentleman stays in Kansas following the next election, because he has announced he is not going to run again. Good God, what are they going to do? [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Young fellows like MONTGOMERY are coming along, and they will be able to take care of things. He can take care of OLDFIELD now, and there will be others to take care of others, too. Then, again, I am not going to die. I will still be around somewhere. [Laughter.] And I will always have nerve enough to tell what tariff law I am for. [Applause.]

I want to congratulate the Democratic Party. You had pearl buttons and they were too high. You had log chains and they were too high, and now my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. McKOWEN] has added another item and that is straw hats. Whenever we can get the tariff off of straw hats, pearl buttons, and log chains, then the Democratic Party will be happy and everything will be all right. [Applause.] Of course, I do not know what the issue is going to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] has justly earned here in the House the distinction of being one of the shock troops on the majority side. You know what shock troops are. That word is subject to a number of applications. One application that may appropriately be used in the case of the gentleman from Kansas is that he shocks the credulity of everybody who knows the facts. [Laughter.] He shocks the sensibilities of even his farmer friends from Iowa, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], and others, when he makes such extravagant claims as to the farmer being benefited by the tariff.

The gentleman from Kansas after soft pedaling on the tariff for a season, since the farmers of his section and of the West have been suffering under the iniquities of the Fordney-McCumber Act, now that he is safe for the time being from the wrath of his constituents and the wrath of the farmers of Kansas, since he is going to retire from Congress, he comes out and speaks his real sentiments with reference to the tariff because he knows there is no day of reckoning for him for the present. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman seriously mean to intimate I ever soft pedaled on the subject of being for a protective tariff?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; I do not think the gentleman ever dodged the real issue. I think down in his heart they have had him all the time. [Laughter and applause.] But I do say that while the conditions were so bad in the West, the gentleman from Kansas was not always as loud and as vociferous for the tariff interests as he is now when he is leaving the Halls of Congress. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Kansas made some reference to a meeting of the American Legion on Boston Common crying out for jobs and wanting employment. Do you know when that was? It was immediately following the war, in 1919. And why was there such a meeting on Boston Common of members of the American Legion seeking jobs? The Republicans were in control of the House. They were in control of the Senate. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] imitating and reflecting the views of his colleague, wants to laugh; he wants to seem to see the point before it is arrived at, simply because he thinks it will please the nostrils of his colleague, Mr. TINCHER. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Wait a moment. Wait until I have answered the question and then I will yield.

We still had the presidency in 1919, but the Republicans had both Houses of the Congress. Why was there unemployment and stagnation? I will tell you why. We were still laboring under war restrictions. We were still laboring under the high tax rates which prevailed during the war, and a Republican House and a Republican Senate would not repeal the vexatious war regulations and would not repeal the high taxes imposed during the war.

Mr. MADDEN. The President did not sign them when we did repeal them.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman—

Mr. MADDEN. The President would not sign the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have not yielded to the gentleman. I shall yield in a moment, but I first want to complete this statement. Then I shall yield.

They would not undertake the reduction of taxes in 1919. Why? Because they knew that the man in the White House would not permit them to reduce the taxes unless they reduced them in the interest of the people, therefore they did not undertake any remedial tax legislation. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that when we did repeal the war laws that the President he refers to, Mr. Wilson, would not sign the law we passed.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. When was that?

Mr. MADDEN. That was while he was still President.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What act was it?

Mr. MADDEN. The act repealing all the war laws.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Which one?

Mr. MADDEN. The one we passed first while Wilson was President.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman knows it became a law.

Mr. MADDEN. Not while Wilson was President. It became the law afterwards?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. When?

Mr. MADDEN. We declared peace when Mr. Harding became President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman ought to know, if he knows anything, that long before the peace resolution was ever adopted in the Harding administration we passed a blanket repeal of a lot of war measures, and I am sure gentlemen on this side will bear me out in that statement. The RECORD will bear me out.

Mr. MADDEN. And the President refused to sign it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; it became a law. I know what the gentleman from Illinois is talking about. The gentleman from Illinois is talking about the peace resolution. The President did not permit that to go into effect in 1920. Why? Because it was violating all the constitutional precedents with reference to making peace. The Republicans wrecked the constitutional method of making peace with a foreign power and ending a war by treaty and sought to evade that responsibility by passing a joint resolution, and, of course, the President of the United States vetoed it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If I can get some more time.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that the President himself refused to declare peace and the Congress had to take it off of his hands and declare peace.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman gave his whole case away when he said that.

He said that the President would not declare peace and Congress took it out of his hands. A Republican Congress, because it did not like the way that the President was discharging his duty according to the Constitution or believing some other branch of the Government had not performed its constitutional duty according to Republicanism took the constitutional power out of the hands where it belonged and usurped functions which it did not possess. The gentleman sometimes unconsciously admits the facts.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois diverted the discussion from the real question that the Republicans in 1919 repealed the war tax. I want to remind the gentleman of what was published and never denied by the Republican leaders; that they had a caucus in the room of one of the Republican Senators, and Mr. Fordney was very much in favor of reducing the taxes, and this astute leader said:

No; let the people sweat; we will carry the election in 1920 and then we will reduce the taxes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. It was common knowledge around Washington, except to the gentlemen from Kansas and Illinois, that the Republicans deliberately refused to follow the suggestions and refused to heed the messages that Mr. Wilson sent them repeatedly to repeal the war taxes and put the country back on pre-war conditions, and they refused to do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, one other word. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCER] is going to leave us. We regret it. The ranks of the protectionists will regret it, because they will lose one of their most doughty champions. The farmers may regret it, because they will lose one of the ablest champions on this floor of the farmer, who believes the way to farmer's prosperity is to tax the steel and iron in his plow; that the way to promote his prosperity is to tax the clothes, the cotton goods, and woolen goods he wears on his back; that the way to promote prosperity is to tax the household equipments in his kitchen and the furniture in his house and the implements with which he toils. He is that kind of a farmer's friend. But, gentlemen, be not grieved too deeply, because, while the gentleman is leaving us, he is going to a field of greater usefulness. I want the Clerk to read, in my time, a statement I just handed him.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Wichita Eagle, January 8]

THINKS LONGWORTH HAS GOOD CHANCE TO BE PRESIDENT—J. N. TINCER EXPRESSES BELIEF SPEAKER OF HOUSE WILL GET CHANCE AT HIGH POST—STILL TALK COOLIDGE

J. N. (Pokey) TINCER, Congressman from the seventh Kansas district, is of the opinion that NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, recently elected Speaker of the National House of Representatives, will be the Republican candidate for President to succeed Calvin Coolidge.

And Albert H. Denton, president of the Home National Bank at Arkansas City and a lifelong friend of the big Congressman from the big seventh, believes that if Mr. LONGWORTH is the party candidate for President, Mr. TINCER will be the party candidate for Vice President.

These opinions were expressed by Mr. TINCER and Mr. Denton following a conference at Hotel Lassen, in Wichita, Thursday. The Congressman was en route to Washington after spending a few days at his home at Medicine Lodge, and Mr. Denton had come here to meet him.

"The trouble with this proposition is that the Senate would never stand for the candidates for both President and Vice President coming from the House," commented Mr. TINCER.

"Oh, yes, the Senate would; with two strong men at the helm—especially when one comes from Ohio and the other Kansas," was the Arkansas City banker's retort.

And then the men settled down to serious discussion of the possibility of such a suggestion.

"You may regard my suggestion as a joke," Mr. Denton remarked to an Eagle reporter; "but I am in dead earnest, and so are a number of influential men in Congress. Of course, I would like to see Mr. TINCER a candidate for President, but will be satisfied if he is the vice presidential nominee."

Mr. TINCER declined to designate the particular campaign in which his colleague from Ohio would be the Republican candidate—whether it would be two or six years from next November. Republican leaders are said to be divided about whether Mr. Coolidge should be a candidate to succeed himself. Some would regard his candidacy as seeking a third term, which they argue would mean almost certain defeat.

It would in all probability suit Speaker LONGWORTH very well to have the Kansas seventh district Congressman as his running mate. It is recalled that Mr. TINCER is the only member of the Kansas delegation who openly battled for the election of Mr. LONGWORTH as Speaker of the Sixty-ninth Congress. He is chairman of the Republican House steering committee and assistant floor leader. His powers in the House are regarded as second only to those of the Speaker.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, you will note from this press dispatch this arrangement by which the Speaker is to be the candidate for President and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCER] is to be candidate for Vice President, and that in the mind of the gentleman from Kansas the only trouble with the proposition is that the Senate would never stand for the candidates for both President and Vice President coming from the House. Otherwise the proposition is sound and all right. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, men can be influenced sometimes by things that are not regarded as improper or venal. The gentleman from Kansas a while ago, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] undertook to interrupt him, absolutely refused to yield until the gentleman from Texas paid him a compliment when he said that the gentleman from Kansas can answer any kind of a question, for he has the ability and the information. Falling for that pleasing compliment the gentleman from Kansas then yielded, when his granite soul only a moment before had refused to yield. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that this alluring thing that we call ambition oftentimes swerves statesmen from their pathway when they could not be touched with any corruption on earth. And as our distinguished colleague prepares to go out from these halls and sees along the pathway that he shall tread the temptation of the office of Vice President, he knows that through the last days of this Congress he has got to do something to ingratiate himself into the favor of those who control, not the election at the polls, but who control the delegates to the Republican National Convention. He has got to pass under the scrutiny of the national chairman, Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is Mr. BUTLER interested in the farmers of the United States? If he is I have not heard about it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

But Mr. BUTLER is interested in woolen mills in Massachusetts, in cotton mills in Massachusetts. He is interested in steel production. He is interested in seeing that this infant, struggling industry of Secretary Mellon, the Aluminum Trust, must be built up and given sufficient protective tariff in order that it may not meet competition with the pauper labor of Europe [laughter], and so the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCER], of course, wants to please these gentlemen. I was about to say that he and the Speaker are like a double team of Kentucky thoroughbreds, but that would hardly meet the physical description, at least. [Laughter.] However, I will say it in this way, that intellectually speaking, this pair of spanking bays, this pair of Kentucky thoroughbreds, as they go cantering along toward the presidential goal, must, as the gentleman from Kansas knows, get the O. K. of the ruling spirits of the tariff banditti. That little district of Medicine Lodge out in Kansas is only a district. It is only one out of 435 political subdivisions of the United States, but the Presidency comprehends them all. We can easily picture the distinguished gentleman from Kansas saying "I can not have a narrow sectional view. Why, you poor fellows of this district, you have been very good to me, you have sent me to Congress, and while there I tried to serve you, but your interests are local, they are sectional, and a man who is a candidate for the Vice Presidency must have a national outlook, a national viewpoint. I have got to stand for all the industries of the Republic, I have got to see to New England and protect her industries, and I have got to see to Pittsburgh and the Secretary of the Treasury and protect their industries. I thank you for lifting me up, but now that I have reached this pinnacle, I scorn the base degrees by which I did ascend and turn my eyes toward the clouds and the Vice Presidency." [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY], who started all this debate, spoke of his farmers out in Oklahoma as being contented farmers. He went on to say that in northeastern Oklahoma Old King Cotton unfurled his white banners in token of surrender to the ample, nimble, and some other kind of fingers of the "contented farmers." Well, if there are any contented farmers in northeastern Oklahoma, I think the gentleman from Oklahoma ought to bring them on to the Sesqui-centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia this year and there exhibit them, because they are the only contented farmers that I know anything about in all these United States. [Laughter and applause.] Contented farmers under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law that protects practically everything that this contented farmer has to buy!

Mr. MONTGOMERY. The gentleman has used my name. Will the gentleman tell the House whether he would put them back on the free list, as they were under the Underwood Act, or whether he thinks they are better served under the Fordney-McCumber Act?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would vote to-morrow to substitute the Underwood Act for the Fordney-McCumber Act. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will vote for any kind of a bill that reduces the tariff tribute that the whole country pays to a favored few; I would repeal a bill that by the vote of the gentleman from Oklahoma taxes all of the people and hands that tax over to a few of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman talks about the Underwood Act. Under the Underwood Act the foreign trade of the United States reached the highest altitude it ever reached in all the history of the Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. As I say, Mr. Chairman, under the Underwood Act the foreign trade of the United States, our exports, went to the highest pitch that they have ever attained in all the history of the Republic.

I want now to pay my respects for a moment to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS]. He hales from a State in which, according to the newspapers, the farmers are losing their farms because they can not pay the interest upon their mortgages, a State in which banks have failed because they have no money and the farmers who owe them can not pay them. That distinguished gentleman, fearing in his soul that his name, like Abou Ben Adam's, may not be written high on the scroll of honor among the tariff favorites when they gather in their little caucuses to nominate candidates, fearful that his name may not be among the anointed, and hopeful that he may be regarded as one of the outstanding friends of high protection—this man from the land of misfortune, this man from the land of distress, this man from the land of disaster, this man from the land of stricken agriculture, this man from the land of farms without farmers, from the land of farmers without farms, must get up and, like Hannibal when he made his pledge to destroy Rome at the altar of Baal, rise in his place and say, "Whatever happens to North Dakota, I want to swear again my eternal fealty to the tariff robber who captures with one hand my farmers in North Dakota and takes the money from their pockets and turns it, with the other hand, over to New England with her favored industries." [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Then there is the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a wonderful man when he stays on his chosen ground of appropriations. He knows how to take orders from Director of the Budget Lord and from Mr. Coolidge, in the White House. He can take orders as gracefully as any man in this House when they come from the right source. But the gentleman from Illinois is one of the most intolerant of men when somebody suggests something with which he does not agree. I admire the gentleman from Illinois. He is a tariff protector. He does not have to dodge the issue at all. He has no poor farmers pulling at his coat tails as has the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINSCHER]. He does not hear them say,

"How about this tariff that is robbing us and not giving us any protection on farm products, because we have to ship our farm products into the foreign markets, where the tariff does not operate." No; the gentleman from Illinois is frank. He is for the tariff; he believes in it because he knows where the pup is going. He knows that the industries of his district are going to get the benefit. The difference between him and the gentleman from Kansas is that he is representing his district—he is protecting the fellows that protect him—while the gentleman from Kansas is picking the pockets of his own farmers while they are looking in another direction and handing the proceeds over to the tariff favorites of New England. That is the difference between these two gentlemen. [Laughter and applause on Democratic side.]

Contented farmer! Oh, this contented farmer in North Dakota, where they are threatening almost political revolution! The contented farmer in northeastern Oklahoma! They say the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINSCHER]—and I know it—when he first came to Congress wore a long-tailed coat, but they tell me now that except this particular one that he has got on to-day, and which he wears on formal occasions, he never wears one out in his district, because during the past three years when he goes around over his district the farmers are pulling at his coat tails so much and hanging on to them so tenaciously and asking so many embarrassing questions about the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill and what it is doing to them and what he is going to do about it that in self-protection he now wears one of these "see-more coats" that has not got much tail to it for them to hang on to, and the reason why he does that is that with that kind of a coat they can see more of TINSCHER and less of the tariff. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I promise not to try to produce the levity that our friend, the genial gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who has just taken his seat, caused, but I hope to present to the House a few facts of rather more avall than having advice given to the Republican Party by the gentleman from Texas as to whom to nominate for President and Vice President and also how to write a tariff bill.

I want to refer very briefly to the effect of the new revenue act of 1926 upon the average citizen in connection with the special taxes, or so-called nuisance taxes, of which we have continually heard. That is a branch of taxes not directly appearing in a man's actual income-tax report, and therefore it is not figured as a part of the saving under the new law.

An interesting item was given out by the Treasury officials a few days ago in reference to the receipts from the new revenue act for the first quarter of 1926. The receipts were $60,000,000 more than last year despite the reductions under the 1926 law. It is expected that the first quarter's receipts from income taxes will exceed $500,000,000, compared with $441,000,000 for the same period of last year.

This is indicative of the business prosperity of the country. Still more interesting, however, is the further statement of the department that the only class of people whose first quarterly payments showed a reduction were those earning net incomes of $5,000 or less.

No better proof can be offered than these figures of the benefit of the new law to the average citizen and wage earner. Generalities and details have very frequently been illustrated in connection with this law. I endeavored a short time ago to give examples of the effect of the act among people of small incomes. It is well known that more than 2,000,000 previously making income-tax returns are now exempt from paying any Federal income tax whatever.

I desire at this time to call especial attention to the changes in the act of 1926 of special taxes which have not appeared in the taxpayer's Federal reports.

To this end, I first present a comparison of the receipts from the various income tax laws, as prepared for me by the Government actuary, covering receipts under the laws of 1918, 1921, and 1924, with estimates of receipts for 1926.

In order to call especial attention to the changes from the 1924 act to the 1926 act, I am adding another table containing only these two items. I ask permission, Mr. Chairman, to insert these tables as part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. The tables referred to are as follows:

SOME ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

It will be seen that the largest item of reduction under special taxes is upon automobiles, motor cycles, automobile trucks, tires, tubes, parts and accessories, and passenger automobiles for hire. The total reduction will be over $55,000,000, all being now untaxed, excepting 3 per cent upon the original purchase price of a car. This was formerly 5 per cent.

The tax is entirely eliminated in the law of 1926 on cameras, photographic plates and films, pipes and other smokers' articles, automatic slot machines, jewelry, watches, opera glasses, and so forth, bowling alleys, billiard and pool tables, shooting galleries and riding academies, and so forth.

Formerly there was a tax on firearms and shells from which the Government received a revenue of $3,617,000. This is entirely done away with, excepting a very small tax on pistols, which remains not for the purpose of revenue but as an effort to control the indiscriminate use of them.

The other item of special interest is the reduction of nearly $10,000,000 in admissions.

HOW AVERAGE MAN IS AFFECTED

Now, let me explain how these directly affect the average man. All during the period that these and other items upon which the tax was previously taken off were paid more or less as a matter of course.

Quite likely the average man counts upon a certain part of his earnings to be expended either for recreation or pleasure for himself and family. Nuisance taxes were oppressive, but at the time they were collected on a very great variety of items, the patriotic instincts of the people were thoroughly aroused, and if pleasures and luxuries were indulged in people of most moderate means were willing to pay their share of the patriotic tax. We are all pleased that those days have gone by. In recent years the average citizen has complained of nuisance taxes both for their inconvenience and the money involved. Let us see what this bill does for people of moderate circumstances in connection with this form of taxation.

Any family paying an income tax would be in a position to own an automobile. Assuming the purchase price for the average car is $1,500, the tax on this, under the act of 1924, would have been $75. The tax now is $45. It is to be noted that some of the companies making automobiles have absorbed the tax in their prices, but at any rate the purchase of a $1,500 car means that the buyer is $30 ahead now.

It is fair to say also that there will be an additional saving of $5 to the taxpayer through the removal of the tax on tires and tubes. In other words, it will cost each owner of a $1,500 car in the neighborhood of $35 less to purchase and maintain a car of this value. Higher priced cars will, of course, show a corresponding increased saving.

A great many automobile trucks are used in business by the average taxpayer. The tax on automobile trucks is entirely eliminated. This was formerly 3 per cent, so that the truck owner can carry on his business at a saving of from $35 to $60 on the lower priced trucks.

Formerly there was a tax of 10 per cent upon cameras and 5 per cent on films and plates, from which the Government received over $1,000,000 yearly.

While it would be difficult to estimate what this means to every individual, the number of cameras in use by amateurs is enormous.

Firearms, shells, and cartridges were formerly taxed 10 per cent. Every hunter contributed a part of this revenue of $3,617,000. It can readily be seen what this saving of 10 per cent means to the young country lad or the farmers themselves, fond of the great outdoors, in the small towns of New England and throughout the country.

Slot machines are seen everywhere and are very generally patronized. While the contribution each time is a comparatively small one, in the aggregate it produced nearly $500,000 in revenue. This is now taken off.

The entire removal of the tax on jewelry, watches, opera glasses, and so forth, is reducing revenue by $8,500,000. Some of these articles are, of course, beyond the reach of the average citizen, but practically everyone wants to own a good watch and very frequently feels inclined to purchase for some loved one an ornamental article of jewelry.

A source of recreation to many people is the patronage of bowling alleys and billiard rooms. The tax on these places, which under the law of 1924 produced $2,180,000, is now entirely removed.

We all enjoy attendance at moving pictures and legitimate theatrical performances. The Government will lose $9,750,000 by the increased exemption of from 50 to 75 cents on admissions. This will permit the purchaser of tickets to occupy the most desirable seats at a moving-picture house or the cheaper seats in the regular theaters without tax payment.

The tax on cigars has been very materially reduced on all grades, particularly the cheaper ones. On cigars manufactured to retail at not more than 5 cents the tax has been reduced 50 per cent, or from $4 to $2 per thousand. In the bracket between 5 and 8 cents there is a corresponding reduction of 50 per cent, or from $6 to $3 per thousand. From 8 to 15 cents the reduction is from $9 to $5 per thousand. From 15 to 20 cents, from $12 to $10.50 per thousand. On cigars to retail for more than 20 cents each the reduction is from $15 to $13.50 per thousand. It will be noted that the percentage of reduction is very much higher for the lower-priced cigars, another evidence that in framing this tax bill the Republican majority showed its interest in the man of moderate means, who only can afford the lower-priced cigar. Under the 1924 act receipts from cigar taxes was $43,000,000. Under the act of 1926 it is estimated as $26,000,000, a reduction of $17,000,000. This will either reduce the price of cigars or permit manufacturers to use better grades of tobacco. It may even restore that article for which the late Vice President Marshall so longingly wished, namely, "a good 5-cent cigar."

It will be said that some of the items of taxes I have referred to have been paid by the manufacturers or dealers. While that is technically true, it is nevertheless true that all cost is passed on to the consumer, whether he pays it directly or indirectly.

1926 ACT PRINCIPALLY WRITTEN FOR AVERAGE MAN

These statistics and illustrations that I have given offer additional proof that this 1926 tax act was principally written for the benefit of the average man.

It would be interesting to have a group of people in the lower brackets of income-tax payers endeavor to recall the number of times they were subject to such taxes during the past year. Very few people, however, would keep a sufficiently accurate ledger account of incidental expenses to answer this inquiry with any degree of exactness. In order that my estimate of the aggregate saving in these comparatively small items to our average citizen and his family might not be altogether one of guesswork, I asked the Government actuary, Mr. McCoy, to give me an estimate. His report to me is in part as follows:

Take a family purchasing a new $1,500 automobile, the father smoking cigars and using the automobile to go on occasional hunting trips and for family pleasure trips, the wife using a camera, the father purchasing some trinket for birthday presents, occasionally playing billiards and bowling, the reduction in tax for this family would be material. He would save $30 on the purchase of the car; some $3 on the repair parts of it, including a couple of dollars more for some additional accessory, together with some $3 or $4 on tires and tubes. He would save from $5 to $10 on the bit of jewelry, watch, or pin given to his wife; a few dollars on his cigars, a few dollars on his bowling and billiards. She would save a dollar or two on the pipe or cigar holder given to him; a dollar or two on her new camera, and about as much on the films used therein. He would save from $5 to $10 on his new shotgun, and another $5 on the shells used by him in hunting or trap shooting. On admissions to shows the saving to the family would be some $8 or $10, while the saving on other taxes reduced or repealed would amount to a few more dollars. In fact, the ordinary family whose income warrants a $1,500 car will readily save $100 or more in tax repealed or reduced by the new law.

This is certainly a welcome addition to the family income already greatly benefited by the general reductions.

BENEFITS RESULT FROM REPUBLICAN TEAMWORK

Similar comparisons could be drawn of the tax reductions in the laws of 1918 and 1921, as shown by the first table, but I think I have clearly shown the benefit the 1926 act brings to the average man that will not appear in his tax report. These benefits, together with those in the other branches of the income tax, result from the united efforts of the President and the Republican Congress.

Business economy and a practically straight adherence to the Budget have made possible the large reductions in the needs of revenue.

The Republican Congress has seen to it that these benefits reach the smaller income-tax payer. I repeat that while the assistance of the Democratic minority in writing the new tax measure was very welcome, the actual credit of its preparation will, in the minds of the voters, be given to the Republicans. Republican candidates for Congress at the coming election will rightly call these features to the attention of the voters, and they in turn will realize the interest the Republican Party shows in their welfare and the contents of their pocketbooks.

The continued elimination and reduction of the so-called nuisance and special taxes, to which your attention has been directed, will constitute one of the main features in the brilliant record of the Republican Party in the present Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will, unless my time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one-half minute remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman states very frankly that which we have supposed would be the procedure all along. That is, that the Republican candidates for Congress will claim credit for this measure practically in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wonder, in view of the fact that already it has been demonstrated that the Treasury returns are some $60,000,000 more than was estimated, as I believe the gentleman stated—

Mr. TREADWAY. That was a statement given out a short time ago by the department.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wonder whether it will be stated by the Republican candidates for Congress that the Democratic Members also made an effort to further reduce taxes; that that was refused by the Republican Members and that, therefore, they did not give them the measure of relief which subsequent events have demonstrated might very well have been given.

Mr. TREADWAY. If I gather the question of the Democratic leader, it is this: Should not there have been a larger decrease in taxation than was actually made in the law? Is that the suggestion of the gentleman?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That was the view, I will say, which the Democrats held. My question was whether the Republicans will state that when they are on the stump along with the statement claiming entire credit for tax reduction.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Republicans will state the exact facts—that the estimates of the Treasury were accepted by the Ways and Means Committee in the first instance; then the House accepted the report of the Ways and Means Committee; the bill went to the other branch, and they ran riot over there, as the gentleman well knows, in increasing reductions. The conference committee was obliged to very materially change those items.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have not finished my answer, but I will let it stand as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to announce to the gentlemen in control of the time that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has 22 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] 24 minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAWLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10425) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. JEFFERS (at the request of Mr. HILL of Alabama), on account of illness.

GERMAN SEIZED PROPERTY

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a day or two ago the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] had inserted in the Record a letter from a Mr. Armstrong with reference to the Alien Property Custodian. Mr. James F. Lynch, of the New York bar, has written an answer to that letter, which I ask permission to have inserted in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, January 29, 1926.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK HERALD-TRIBUNE:

The letter written to you by Mr. William Campbell Armstrong on the subject of "German seized property," published in your issue of January 24, 1926, justifies a comment, inasmuch as it contains certain errors of fact and law, and because it fails to inform the editor of the practically unanimous view to the contrary which supports Secretary Mellon in his plan for the disposition of this property:

(1) Mr. Armstrong says that the treaty of Berlin "permits the United States to satisfy its claim out of the seized property." The treaty discloses no such permit or possibility. All the treaty does, by incorporating the terms of the Knox-Porter resolution, is to permit the United States, subject to return of the property by action of Congress, "to retain" the property "until suitable provision" has been made "for the satisfaction of" the claims of American citizens. The administration evidently believes that by entering into the Dawes plan, such provision has been made, and it is probable that Germany would so claim. At all events, if at the Paris conference of January, 1925, among the allied governments, the United States was able to obtain, under the head of claims, only 2 1/4 per cent, not exceeding 45,000,000 marks a year, the fault is not that of the American claimants or of the German owners or of the German Government. The administration would seem to concur in this view.

(2) It is not probable that Mr. Mellon ignores the arguments which Mr. Armstrong makes. For example, "that Germany has lawfully expropriated the seized property," and "that title thereto is now vested in the United States as owner, and the former owners no longer have any interest in the property or its proceeds." Hardly anyone who has studied this subject agrees that this is a correct presentation of the law, and evidently those who have advised the Government departments on the subject also differ from Mr. Armstrong. To agree with Mr. Armstrong would mean to ignore the decisions of the United States Supreme Court on this question (Central Union Trust Co. v. Garvan (1921), 254 U. S. 554) and of numerous other courts in the country. A gratuitous dictum of a New York Federal court, since severely criticized as unsound, does not change the conclusion of the Supreme Court or of the Government on the law. If the United States has already confiscated the property, how is it that interest is being paid to the owners from whom it was taken? Moreover, if already confiscated, no further action by Congress would seem to be necessary, for the United States would already have stultified its national tradition beyond repair. Yet I do not know anyone who contends that the property could be taken for any use without further action by Congress. If Mr. Armstrong were right, then some of our leading authorities on these subjects, as well as the President and the Secretaries of State and the Treasury and the Attorney General, who have given it the closest study, must be absent-minded. This is hardly possible. The administration view is dictated not by any sympathy for German interests, but exclusively in the interest of the United States, which probably finds some profit in a policy of honesty and the redemption of its promises.

(3) The treaty of Versailles is not binding on the United States in the face of the Knox-Porter resolution, which adopted an entirely different method of dealing with the sequestered property. It is true that England and France have confiscated the property invested in their countries, and they will have to live with that precedent and all that it involves. But the United States has a different history, a different traditional policy, and a different treaty to deal with. We are not confiscators. We could not object to Mexico and Russia to-day about the confiscation of foreign-owned private property if we touch the private property held in Washington. Doubtless such facts, together with the realization that we have invested $11,000,000 abroad, increasing at the rate of a billion a year, had something to do with the administration's view that it would be highly unwise, as well as violative of international law, to fail to return the property to its legitimate owners, who invested it in the United States in reliance upon American law and the Constitution.

(4) Mr. Armstrong is in error about the nature of the claim against Germany and about the character of the ownership of the sequestered property. The property is owned by thousands of private investors. The claims are based on losses due not only to the acts of Germany, but also to the acts of the allied governments. A great proportion of them do not constitute violations of international law, the Mixed Claims Commission has said.

(5) The administration probably decided to use the Rhine army costs for the satisfaction of American claims, because (a) Germany once paid this sum to the Reparation Commission, which unfortunately forgot to transmit the amount to Washington; when Washington demanded its share, Mr. Poincaré informed this Government that the money had been spent, and that we might ask Germany for it a second time, which we did; and (b) because the Rhine army would have had to be supported wherever located and at probably greater expense. The 55,000,000 marks which thus come to us annually out of future payments from Germany constitute a preferred payment having priority in transfer and practically alone are sufficient to serve and amortize the bond which the administration proposes to issue to dispose of both these troublesome legacies of the war—sequestered property and American claims.

(6) The suggestion that Germany, under the treaty of Versailles, is bound to make good the confiscations inflicted upon its nationals abroad must be understood in the light of the fact that the allied Governments at Spa in 1921, Brussels in 1922, and Paris in 1924, objected to the German Government assuming any such budgetary charge. They have made it impossible for Germany to assume the obligation, even to the extent that might be possible for that Government to assume, the obligation amounting to twelve to fifteen billion gold marks. The result is that the most effective confiscation ever perpetrated anywhere, except in Soviet Russia, has taken place. Because the United States refuses to debase itself with a similar disastrous policy, it is suggested that an error has been made by the administration. Mr. Armstrong's suggestion was denounced by the International Law Association "as a relic of barbarism, worthy of the most severe condemnation." Ex-Senator Knox denounced it as "indecent," Senator BORAH as "immoral," and Senator MOSES as a species of "land piracy." It should not be forgotten that our own long-run interests as a nation of foreign investors and as a nation largely built up by foreign capital are closely involved in the solution of these problems.

(7) The suggestion of Mr. Armstrong would make the solution either impossible or delay it for perhaps 20 years. By that time the property would probably have been dissipated and confiscation would have been effectually achieved. The administration has wisely followed better counsel, with a broader horizon and with more considerations and data than possibly Mr. Armstrong was able to summon and assemble. The administration plan has probably been approved by the agent general for reparations. It seems unfortunate that so statesmanlike a proposal should be subjected to so biased and largely misinformed an objection as is herein refuted. Political passions are probably not the best counselors in financial matters.

JAMES F. LYNCH,
Counselor at Law.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] as a member on the part of the Senate of the Joint Committee on Investigation of the Northern Pacific Land Grants, created by section 3 of the joint resolution approved June 5, 1924, entitled "Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes," to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Senator from Missouri [Mr. Spencer].

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint Resolution No. 6, Laws of 1926

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

Joint resolution concerning the piers in the city of Hoboken, county of Hudson

Whereas in virtue of an act of Congress, passed for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States to take over the valuable water front in the city of Hoboken belonging to the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. and the Hamburg American Steamship Co. for the purpose of national defense during the period of the war, the said properties were taken over and occupied by the War Department during the period of war; and

Whereas when the war terminated, instead of selling the said property or turning the same over to mercantile uses, so that the said property would return to the city of Hoboken and the county of Hudson its former quota of taxation, the Government of the United States turned the said properties, through the War Department, over to a shipping board and is now operating the said valuable dock property and has been operating the same without the payment of taxes for the purpose of conducting an independent mercantile marine competition with other shipping interests, whereby said city of Hoboken has been deprived of payment of taxes from the said property to the amount of over $3,000,000, and the tax rate of the said city as a result of the said operation has been increased from 22.01 to 47.50, all of which is evidenced by a presentment of the grand jury of the county of Hudson made to the court of oyer and terminer of that county on the 15th day of September, 1925; and

Whereas the said loss in payment of taxes to the city of Hoboken results in a loss to the county of Hudson and the State of New Jersey by reason of the fact that the said city, if the present order of things should continue, may be unable to pay its bonded indebtedness and its pro rata contribution to the county of Hudson and the State of New Jersey based upon its physical assets as they stood prior to the expropriation of the said lands and water front; and

Whereas it is desirable in the interests of justice and honesty that the Federal Government shall pay the present indebtedness due to the city of Hoboken for taxes by reason of the fact that the said properties are not used for Government purposes, and have not been so used since the termination of the war, but have been used and are now being used exclusively for commercial competitive purposes by the said Shipping Board, and for that reason said Shipping Board should be compelled out of its receipts to pay the sum of taxes now in arrears to the city of Hoboken and should be compelled also to recognize, acknowledge, and pay as any other corporation transacting a commercial business, all taxes and municipal charges which may accrue in the future to the said city of Hoboken while said board is thus operating said property: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of New Jersey (House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey concurring), That it is the sense of the legislature that the Shipping Board now in control of the said piers and the property connected therewith should be compelled by the Federal Government to pay with all convenient speed the arrears of taxes due to the said city of Hoboken since the said Shipping Board assumed control and ownership of the said pier property, and that the said Shipping Board should also be directed at once to acknowledge, recognize, and pay to the city of Hoboken all future assessments for taxes which may be levied and assessed against the said property of the said city of Hoboken so that the said properties shall not be exempt from taxation; and

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions, signed by the governor of this State, and properly authenticated by the secretary of state, be sent, through the Hon. WALTER E. EDGE and the Hon. EDWARD I. EDWARDS, representing the State of New Jersey, to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Members constituting the congressional committee having the matters of the Shipping Board in charge, to the end that immediate action may be taken by the Congress of the United States for the adjustment of said arrears and for the payment of all future taxes as the same may accrue.

Approved, March 29, 1926.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Thomas F. Martin, secretary of state of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of an act passed by the legislature of this State, and approved by the governor the 29th day of March, A. D. 1926, as taken from and compared with the original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal at Trenton this 6th day of April, 1926.

[SEAL.]

THOMAS F. MARTIN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. KENDRICK. SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925, reported by Mr. ERNST, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I have been informed that a recess is to be taken in a few minutes. I shall speak until I am notified that the time for the recess has arrived. As it will be only a few moments, I shall not be able to discuss at length any proposition, so I am going to begin this morning by calling attention to a few facts, facts that weigh heavily in this equation, as it seems to me. I shall discuss these propositions at greater length later on in the debate.

I want to say in the first place, Mr. President, that when the election was held in the State of Iowa and the canvassing board made its return it was shown that Smith W. Brookhart had a plurality of 775 votes. Later on a contest was filed and it became necessary for the returns of the canvassing board to be sent here. When those returns were sent and when the tabulators, acting under authority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, retabulated, or I might express it, read the returns from the various counties of the State, it developed that Senator Brookhart's plurality had increased from 775 to 817.

After the contest was filed Mr. Brookhart, through his attorney, in order to make sure that the ballots cast in what are known as the machine counties—and I may say there are 22 such counties in that State—went into court and had injunctions issued, as I understand, restraining the parties in charge of those machine ballots from destroying them. They were preserved; they were counted by the auditors or the workers or the supervisors, or whatever we may call them, who were sent out by the committee of the Senate. When they recounted the ballots in the machine counties it developed that on the recount in those counties Senator Brookhart had gained 775 votes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Were there also paper ballots cast in those counties?

Mr. STEPHENS. I was going to get to that in a moment, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I will answer him now. In most of those counties, as I recall, there were no paper ballots; most of them were strictly machine counties. In some of them there were a few precincts where they had what we call paper ballots.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us the date of the issuance of the injunctive processes to safeguard the machine ballots?

Mr. STEPHENS. My recollection is that in those counties where they had machine ballots, though I am not sure as to that, the law privileged the county auditor, if he should be the party in charge of the ballots, to empty the machines after 30 days. I think that is correct. Then, in the other counties, where they did not use the machines, the county auditor was required to preserve the ballots for six months.

Mr. BAYARD. Then, it would follow, if the Senator please, that Senator Brookhart took out his injunctive writs shortly after the election and before the first of the year 1925?

Mr. STEPHENS. I can not give the date, I am very frank to say.

Mr. BAYARD. But going on the assumption of the Senator's recollection of the law that the machine vote ballots are to be safeguarded by the legal guardian, whatever his title may be, for not less than 30 days, Senator Brookhart, to make sure that they would be safeguarded, on notice of contest took out these injunctive writs to safeguard the ballots?

Mr. STEPHENS. He took the precaution, as I understand, so that these ballots might be preserved as they had been cast in those counties. As to the date I am not advised. Perhaps I could later get the date, and if I find that I can do so before I conclude I shall be glad to give the information.

However, what I was saying was in most of those counties there were very few paper ballots, and, as I said a moment ago, in those counties Senator Brookhart gained 775 votes; I think that was the number.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. Does the Senator draw the conclusion that there was anything other than a mistake in the computation reflected in the machine vote?

Mr. STEPHENS. I have not drawn any conclusion; at least, I have not expressed any up to date.

Mr. GOFF. I am not asking the Senator to express any.

Mr. STEPHENS. My idea, I will say to the Senator, is that because of that precaution on the part of Senator Brookhart those ballots were properly preserved, and they showed how they were cast by the voters in the election.

Mr. GOFF. Did not the recount as conducted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections give the Senator from Iowa the excess vote over and above the official count of the State of Iowa?

Mr. STEPHENS. Of course in the machine counties the committee accepted the report of the chief supervisor, Colonel Thayer, and his assistants, as I understand.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator another question, and it is this: In taking the count from the machine ballots alone were any votes other than those for Senator taken?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not advised as to that. As was suggested two or three times on yesterday by another Senator in the Chamber, I was not a member of the subcommittee, and it may be that I can not answer all the questions which may be asked me, though, I will say, I am pretty familiar with everything that appears in the printed hearings and the record in this case. Outside of that perhaps I can not go as far as can others.

Mr. BAYARD. Then, the Senator knows of no record which would show a comparison between the senatorial vote cast on the machines and the total vote cast in the precincts where the machines were used?

Mr. STEPHENS. Not by precincts; but I have prepared here a table—

Mr. BAYARD. I will take the gross of all the machine precincts, if the Senator please. There were about 2,000 machine precincts, were there not?

Mr. STEPHENS. No, sir; there were not that many. My recollection is that there were about one thousand eight hundred and some odd paper-ballot precincts and less than 2,500 precincts altogether in the State.

Mr. BAYARD. Whatever the number was, we will say, in round numbers, there were about 600 machine precincts. There is no question but that the committee's representative went out there and took from the machines the result of the senatorial vote, anyway.

Mr. STEPHENS. He did.

Mr. BAYARD. But does the record disclose that at the same time the committee's representative or the representative of Mr. Steck or of Senator Brookhart made any computation from those machines showing the gross number of votes cast in each one of the precincts, which would be tantamount to a tally list for the paper ballots?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am going to answer that question in this way: I have very little information and have been unable to procure it, with reference to the vote, precinct by precinct, because the committee absolutely refused to have that gone into, stating that it was unnecessary.

As I said on yesterday, when it was disclosed that there were 1,068 precincts in that State where there were discrepancies between the names on the poll lists and the number of ballots found in the boxes, although a member of the committee asked that the committee instruct the tabulators to make an investigation and report, the request was waived aside, and it was said such action was unnecessary, and it was stated that no more counting would be done. That is in the record.

Mr. DILL. Do I understand that a member of the committee made that request?

Mr. STEPHENS. He did.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator will yield to me, because I know he does not want to make any statement from the record here that raises any issue of fact.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me say in regard to the machine votes that the votes on the machines in the State of Iowa were read by Mr. Thayer, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say to the Senator that, if he will give me an opportunity, I think I can tell pretty well from the record what was said by Colonel Thayer to have been done with reference to the machine votes. I could not answer the Senator from Delaware, because I do not know the vote precinct by precinct.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely want to say that Mr. Thayer and a representative of Senator Brookhart and a representative of Mr. Steck read the machine vote in Iowa, the machines not having been brought down to Washington. They did not take any vote except the vote for Senator. They did not take the total vote as registered by the machines.

I wish also to say in that connection that Colonel Thayer in his testimony in the record is direct, that he himself took the figures given to him by the representatives of Steck and Brookhart, and that the only thing he brought to the committee was the total vote from each machine for the respective candidates for the Senate, and did not bring the total vote cast.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, what is the importance of knowing the total vote cast in the machine counties? How does that bear on the case?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think it does bear on it, Senator; but the importance of it is this: It is said that there were certain precincts in the State in which paper ballots were used in which there was a discrepancy between the ballots brought down here to be counted and the names appearing on the poll list. Hence, when they did not take the total number of votes registered on the machines there was no way to ascertain in any one of the machine precincts—and they were the more populous precincts in the State—whether the total votes appearing on the machine tallied with the names on the poll list; that is, tallied in point of number. I do not think it is material.

Mr. STEPHENS. I agree with the Senator from Georgia that it is not very material; but the Senator from Delaware has asked a question in regard to the machine votes. I prepared this morning just before I left my office—perhaps I neglected to bring it with me—a little statement with reference to the machine counties, because the other day when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] was speaking a Senator—the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I think—asked some question about the machine counties. I do not find that table here now, but I want to call attention to a fact which I take from the statement prepared under the authority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I presume it is entirely accurate, except in a case or two, where I myself found a mistake. Take Benton County, for example; that is a machine county.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it entirely a machine county?

Mr. STEPHENS. It is entirely a machine county; yes, sir. It happened, for some reason, that the supervisors failed to make a statement with reference to the poll list in that county. It is noted here, "No poll list."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the supervisors did not fail to make any statement about the poll list. The supervisors did not make any statement about the poll list in any machine county. The poll lists were not sent down here from those counties.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me ask this question: Were the ballots from that county sent here?

Mr. GEORGE. That is a machine county.

Mr. STEPHENS. I understand that.

Mr. GEORGE. There were no ballots. They went out there and took the count there.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right.

At any rate, under the heading "Number of names on poll lists," it is indicated that in Benton County there were no poll lists returned; but what do we find? We find that the official return, the return made by the officers of the election in that county, tallies exactly with what the representatives of the committee found in the machines when they went there and made an investigation, and proceeded in whatever manner they did to determine the votes cast in that county.

I repeat, as was suggested a moment ago by the Senator from Georgia, that this is not a matter that has any weight or part at this time in this matter; but even if it did, these auditors or supervisors went there and found that it tallied without the slightest variance, tallied exactly, came back and made the report, and reported also that there were no poll lists. Therefore I want to suggest to the Senator from Delaware that if there is anybody to be criticized, anybody to show that anything was wrong there, it is to be shown by the man who is making the contest in this case, because Senator Brookhart has a prima facie right to the seat. He has been certified as having been elected. He has been commissioned as Senator. He is sitting in this body. He filed no contest. The contest was filed by Mr. Steck. These parties went out there because Mr. Steck had filed this contest. If anybody is to be criticized, if anybody is to be affected by it, it is certainly not Senator Brookhart, as I see it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, in the last county from which the Senator read touching the machine votes, was there any gain for Senator Brookhart?

Mr. STEPHENS. I just stated that to the Senator, and I will read it.

Mr. BAYARD. I am asking with regard to the machine ballots.

Mr. STEPHENS. I understand; yes, sir. I am reading from Benton County:

County auditor's official count: Steck, 5,033.

We go over here and find a "tabulation sheet."

Mr. BAYARD. By whom is that made?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is made by the men representing the committee who went out there. We find there the identical figures, 5,033.

Mr. BAYARD. There was no change in the machine vote in that county?

Mr. STEPHENS. No. Now we come to Senator Brookhart's votes—3,301, according to the county auditor's official count. Then we go over here and we find that the tabulators representing the committee gave him this identical figure, 3,301.

Mr. BAYARD. There was no change in the official figures on the machine vote?

Mr. STEPHENS. No change whatever.

I may say that there are only two machine counties where there were no poll lists returned. It will cause me some little difficulty to go through this, because it is a broad sheet, but I have it tabulated and I will present it.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not want to ask the Senator to do that.

Mr. STEPHENS. But I am going to say this: If the Senator will pardon me, I am going to read what is shown by this tabulation sheet with reference to the machine counties. Mark you, there are 22 of them. On this list—I think it is accurate though I made it hurriedly this morning—I have not referred at all to 12 machine counties for the reason that in those counties there was no variance between the number of names on the poll list and the number of ballots in the machines. One county, as I recall, went away up in the thousands—25,000 or more, and yet it tallied exactly.

Mr. BAYARD. Just a minute. When the Senator says that he is talking about the senatorial votes or the votes cast for all the people on the poll list?

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator perhaps does not understand exactly what was done.

Mr. BAYARD. Will not the Senator please answer my question?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am going to answer it. I am going to explain it to the Senator.

Suppose we go to a precinct and find there 500 names on the poll list. We find, for example, that Steck received 250 and that Brookhart received 225. That will make 475, a difference of 25 between the votes those two gentlemen received and the names on the poll list. Then on this sheet there would appear, "So many votes, no votes"; and what they mean by "no vote" is that there was a ballot there that was cast for neither Brookhart nor Steck.

Mr. BAYARD. Did those "no votes" total 25 to make up the 500?

Mr. STEPHENS. They did.

Mr. BAYARD. In each case—in each county?

Mr. STEPHENS. I stated that according to my recollection and a calculation made hurriedly this morning there are 12 counties where there was no variance between the names on the poll list and the ballots found in the machines.

Mr. BAYARD. But there are 99 counties in the whole State.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am talking now only about the 22 machine counties.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator has taken out 12 of those, has he not? That leaves 10.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have taken out 12; and I am going to call the Senator's attention, if he will give me a little time, to the other 10.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator stated, I think, that the "no votes" comprised those votes where there was no vote for Senator. Is it not a fact that they were also comprised as "no votes" if the ballots were defective so that they could not be counted for any candidate for Senator?

Mr. STEPHENS. I should judge so, sir; yes, sir. Every ballot that was not counted for Brookhart or Steck or Eickelberg or Brewer was considered a "no vote" so far as the senatorial election was concerned.

Now, I am going to explain about these 10 counties.

We find that with reference to Benton County, as I said a moment ago, no poll lists were returned; but the reading made by the supervisors tallied exactly with the reading made by the holders of the election at the various precincts.

Now, I come to Boone County; and I wish some Senator would take this list, and if I have made an error I should be glad to have it corrected, because, as I said, I made it very hurriedly myself this morning, and in going over that large table, of course, a man might make a mistake. Boone County is a machine county. In that county there was one more vote than names on the poll list—only one. Now, let us see about Boone County. There were 11,424 names on the poll list. There were 11,425 ballots in the box. It might be, of course, that where there was that great number of voters they would inadvertently leave off the name of some voter who came in and procured a ticket; but in the whole county out of eleven thousand and almost five hundred votes there was only a discrepancy of one.

Mr. BAYARD. Would it not necessarily follow in that case, then, that one person had voted whose name was not recorded on the poll list?

Mr. STEPHENS. I grant that; yes.

Now Clay County: There were two more names on the list than ballots in the box out of 5,971.

Then we come to Crawford County. There was one more name on the list than ballots; and in that county there were 8,240 names on the list and 8,239 ballots in the box—a difference of only one.

Dickinson County: Two missing poll lists; 230 more ballots than names. Now we will see about Dickinson County. It is indicated here on this sheet that there was one poll list missing from one precinct where there were about 230 votes, I presume, cast.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does that missing poll list account for that discrepancy?

Mr. STEPHENS. Of course, I have not seen the poll list. I have not even seen a tabulation of the vote at that precinct; but I want to call attention to the fact that the county auditor's official count gave Mr. Steck 1,951 votes. The supervisors representing the committee gave Mr. Steck 1,951 votes. The same vote was found in the machines that the officials of the election certified had been cast for Steck. Senator Brookhart in that county received 1,899 votes, according to the county auditor's official count. The supervisors who read these machines at the instance of the committee found that Brookhart had received 1,899 votes, the identical number given him by the judges of the election.

Now we come to Dubuque County. We find there that there were 26,260 names on the poll list. There was one more vote or ballot in the box than there were names on the poll list—only one out of over 26,000.

Then we come to Franklin County. As I recall, that is the second county and the last county where there were no poll lists returned.

In that county there was a slight difference in the number of votes given Steck and Brookhart, though the difference is not very large. In other words, Mr. Steck was given by the supervisors representing the committee eight less votes than he was given by the official count. Senator Brookhart was given practically 90 votes more than the official count gave him.

I have called attention to two counties, and there were only two, I think, where all the poll lists were not returned. In one or two counties there were poll lists missing, but, as I have said, in some of those counties at least, if not all, there was no difference between the official return made by the judges of the election and the return made by the supervisors representing the committee of the Senate.

Now we come to Hardin County. There was one poll list missing. There Mr. Steck was given 60 votes more than he was credited with by the official count, and Senator Brookhart received about 180 votes more. There was one poll list only missing in that county. There were more than 8,500 votes cast, and more than 8,100 names on the poll list.

Mr. President, in Iowa County there were 15 more names appearing on the poll list than there were ballots in the boxes.

Mr. BAYARD. Is the Senator now talking about the machine ballots?

Mr. STEPHENS. If the Senator will permit me, I did not use the word "machine." I said the "boxes," and I said it advisedly, because that county was what we call a mixed county. That is, most of the voting was done by machine, but there were one or two—some precincts in the county, I do not know exactly how many—where paper ballots were used, and machines were not used. I do not know where this difference of 15 occurred, whether in the machine vote or in the paper-ballot vote. I can not tell as to that, because there is nothing here to show.

Then we come to Johnson County. Johnson County is also what might be termed a mixed county. There were some machines used in that county. Most of the ballots, I believe, were paper ballots. In that county Senator Brookhart received 1,016 machine votes, Mr. Steck received 1,874 machine votes, making 2,890 machine votes credited to the two candidates.

RECEPTION TO PAN AMERICAN JOURNALISTS

The delegates to the Pan American Congress of Journalists in session in the city of Washington having been escorted to the seats in the galleries set apart for them,

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess until 5 minutes after 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senate will stand in recess for 15 minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Vice President and Senators, I desire to take advantage of the recess to call to your attention the fact that there are present at the Capitol to-day the representatives of the fourth estate in North America and South America. The newspaper publishers and editors of the great newspapers of the Western Hemisphere are assembled in a Pan American conference. They are now here. I desire to say a word of welcome to them in English and in Spanish. I only regret my inability also to address the delegates from Brazil in the beautiful language of the great poet, Camoens, with which they are familiar and which is their native language.

Gentlemen of the press of North and South America, I salute you cordially. We welcome you as the great educators of public opinion on these continents. On your efforts depends in great part the increasing development of closer relations between the Pan American nations.

Permit me to express the hope that you will convey to your people the cordial feeling existing in the United States for your countries.

In greeting you may we trust that this visit will leave in your minds most pleasant impressions of the United States; and that upon your return you will be to your people as eloquent interpreters of the profound and sincere desire of the people of the United States to cultivate the closest relations of friendship and cooperation with the great nations of the south. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Señores de la Prensa de América del Norte y del Sur: Os saludo cordialmente.

Os damos la bienvenida como a los grandes educadores de la opinión continental. De vuestros esfuerzos depende en gran parte el creciente desenvolvimiento de las estrechas relaciones entre las naciones de las Américas.

Permitidme expresaros nuestra esperanza de que vosotros llevaréis a vuestros pueblos el testimonio de la cordialidad de sentimientos que existe en los Estados Unidos para vuestras patrias.

Al daros nuestra bienvenida, expresamos el voto de que vuestra visita deje en vuestro espíritu las más gratas impresiones de los Estados Unidos y de que a vuestro regreso seréis, ante vuestros pueblos, los intérpretes elocuentes del profundo y sincero anhelo del pueblo de los Estados Unidos de cultivar las más estrechas relaciones de amistad y de cooperación con las grandes naciones del Sur. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Gentlemen of the press, I do not speak in Spanish, because my Spanish is scarcely distinguishable from my English or my Greek. To the remarks with which the Senator from Connecticut concluded his address, I desire to add a word of appreciation from this side of the Chamber.

In America we are sincerely devoted to the press as the one outstanding factor in the progress of liberty and enlightenment. Freedom of the press is written into our fundamental law, and all of us regard newspapers as an indispensable factor in progress, both material and spiritual. We deem it better that the press shall have license rather than have its freedom restricted or impaired.

We recognize your coming as a signal incident indicative of the cordial feelings and strong friendship which has long existed, and which we trust may be maintained to the end of time, between this Government and the people who maintain the institutions that underlie it and the Governments from which you come.

Newspapers are responsible in large part for the maintenance of that spirit of good will which is so essential to the harmonious relations of nations. [Applause.] Our thought is that your presence here not only testifies to our friendship for you and yours for us, but it is indicative that those feelings shall be strengthened and perpetuated.

We give you a cordial welcome. We hope that your stay among us may be agreeable and beneficial, and that when you leave us you will carry away with you pleasant recollections of what is to us a very significant incident—your visit to the Capital of the United States, one of the political centers of the world. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The recess having expired at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m. the Vice President called the Senate to order.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925, reported by Mr. ERNST from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I think when the recess was taken I was just making some reference to Johnson County. Johnson County is what may be termed a mixed county; that is, in some precincts machines were used and in others paper ballots were used. I recall that I had just said there were 2,899 machine votes credited to the two candidates, Steck and Brookhart. There were in that county 13,106 names on the poll list. There was a shortage of ballots to the number of 192. About 10,000 of the ballots in this county were paper ballots. That concludes the tabulation that I have made from the table prepared by the supervisors.

To run over the matter very briefly again, there were 22 machine counties. In some of those counties, however, paper ballots are used in certain of the precincts. In 12 of those counties the official return either tallied with the count made by the supervisor or in every instance in those 12 counties there was no discrepancy between the names on the poll list and the number of ballots found in the machines. I think if we were to count the discrepancies in all of those machine counties we would find that there were no more than 4 or 5 or 6 or possibly 8 or 10, a very slight difference between the names on the poll list and the ballots in the machines. Therefore, it follows that the greater part—in fact, nearly all—of those missing ballots, to the number of about 3,570, as I think it is—I do not vouch for the exact figures—came from precincts and from counties where paper ballots were used.

As I said in the beginning of my remarks, the official returns, the returns made by the canvassing boards, gave Brookhart a majority of 775. The tabulators employed by our committee, going over the same figures and making the additions, gave him a plurality of 817, an increase over the majority or plurality given him by the officers of the canvassing board. Then, when we got to the machine counties, where the machine ballots were preserved by order of the court and the recount was had, in those counties where the ballots were preserved according to law, Brookhart gained 778. Added to the 817 that he had originally, that gave him a majority of 1,595.

But what happened? As soon as we reached the counties where they had paper ballots, where the courts had not issued orders for the ballots to be preserved, where the ballots were left in some cases unsealed as required by law, where, as I will show in the course of my remarks, in one case at least, ballots were thrown around in a loose and careless manner, where in one precinct there were 198 ballots missing, what did we find? When we got to the paper-ballot precincts, then we found that Brookhart began to lose. I simply want Senators to remember that the official count gave Brookhart a majority, a certificate of election was issued to him, the Governor of Iowa issued to him his commission, and he has taken a seat as a Senator in this body. From the recount made while the ballots were preserved according to law his majority was steadily increasing and had increased from 775 to 1,595.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. It is true, is it not, that in the counties in which the machine vote was cast, there were the larger cities as compared with rural counties where the paper ballots were cast? In other words, the machine votes were cast in the urban centers and the paper ballots were cast in the rural centers?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not very familiar with the State of Iowa, and I can not answer as to that. I called attention a moment ago that in one county there were over 13,000 ballots cast, and there were only 2,800 of them that were machine ballots, showing that in that county there were more than 10,000 paper ballots.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The counties that voted entirely by machine ballot, of course, voted in the country the same as in the city.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly, that naturally follows. I presume no city covers an entire county in Iowa.

Mr. NORRIS. Everybody knows that so far as Iowa is concerned it has not any really large city in the State.

Mr. STEPHENS. I presume that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not a single instance in the State of Iowa where a city covers as much as a county. There would be many county precincts using machine ballots in those counties.

Mr. STEPHENS. My eye happens to fall upon a county which, I believe, is Linn County. There were no machine ballots in that county. There were 35,000 ballots cast in the county, all paper ballots of course. There was a shortage of 120 in that county. In the county listed just above that, Lee County, which was a paper ballot county, more than 10,000 names were on the poll list, and there was a shortage in the ballots of 129; and so on. As I have stated, I am not very familiar with the State, and, perhaps, can not give a very correct answer to the question.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, in answer to the question propounded to the Senator from Mississippi by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi if it is not a fact that in several of the counties where there were machine votes so recorded there were precincts where the paper ballot process of voting was the order of the voters at that time?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir; I said that some time ago. There were a few counties that I termed "mixed counties," meaning by that machine ballot and paper ballot counties. I think there are two or three.

Mr. GOFF. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that that comes back to my original proposition, that the machines were employed in the urban centers and the paper ballot process of voting was employed in the rural sections.

Mr. STEPHENS. That may be true; I can not answer as to that.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, will the Senator from Mississippi, merely for the Record, read the names of the counties using machine ballots entirely, and also the names of the counties which were partly machine and partly paper ballot counties? Anyone can then be advised by an examination; in fact, an examination of the map of Iowa will disclose, I think, that there is not a single county in that State which is all urban.

Mr. STEPHENS. I should judge that the Senator is correct, although I can not speak authoritatively on the subject. However, following the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, I will name the machine counties: Benton County, altogether machine; Boone, altogether machine; Calhoun, altogether machine; Clay, altogether machine; Crawford, altogether machine; Des Moines, a machine county; Dickinson, machine; Dubuque, machine; Franklin, machine; Hardin, machine; Iowa, machine; Jackson County—I am going to stop here to say that we shall find out a little about the precincts in Jackson County before the argument is concluded—Jackson County is a mixed county, but by far the larger proportion of votes cast—I suppose about 8 to 1—were machine votes. Johnson County is a mixed county. That is the county to which I referred a moment ago, where there were 2,890 machine votes recorded and more than 10,000 paper ballots recorded. Mahaska County, an altogether machine county; Muscatine, machine; Pocahontas, machine; Polk, machine; Scott, machine; Shelby, machine; Story, machine; Webster, machine. That completes the list. I think if the Senator will examine this table he will find that there are only two or three counties that are mixed. I do not claim to be accurate as to that, but I think that is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. There are but two.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator from Georgia states there are but two such counties.

Mr. President, I was speaking a moment ago with reference to gains and losses and discrepancies and things of that kind. I want to call the attention of Senators to some things that appear in the printed hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, would it discommode the Senator for me to ask him a question about a matter that is giving me some trouble?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator has already discussed the question, but I was not present at the time.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will be delighted to answer any question I can.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask a question in regard to the 1,344 votes, a sample of which is on the wall. Where a voter marked the circle showing that he wanted to vote the Republican ticket, and then marked the square in quite a number of places, leaving the square opposite the name of Senator Brookhart without any mark, does the Senator think that the man who cast that vote intended to vote for Senator Brookhart?

Mr. STEPHENS. While I had not intended to discuss that matter at this particular time, I shall be very glad to answer the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that is a matter which is giving me a good deal of trouble.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say to the Senator that a little later I expect to take up the law on that subject and to discuss it, but I am going to answer his question offhand now in this way: According to my judgment there is not the slightest doubt that that ballot marked as the Senator sees it there should be given to Senator Brookhart. I shall explain the law and give my reasons for my opinion. Let me say I know that my good friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Groner] in the committee agreed with me; that is, I might have agreed with him, but we were together on that thought, and yesterday or the day before, as I recall, some Senator asked the Senator from Georgia the question while he was on his feet in the Chamber, and he stated that the 1,344 votes should be counted for Senator Brookhart. That is my recollection. If I am mistaken, I hope the Senator from Georgia will correct me.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has stated the matter correctly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I again interrupt the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Mississippi, in answer to the question of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], read the Iowa statute?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am perfectly willing that that shall be done for the Record, but I have just read the Iowa statute. That is not my trouble at this moment. The trouble I am laboring under is this: A Republican voter goes into the polling booth to cast his vote. There is nothing more natural in the world than that he should mark a cross in the circle, indicating his intention to vote the Republican ticket. If he had done that and nothing else, it is perfectly clear that he intended to vote the entire Republican ticket, but when he goes further than that and puts cross marks in the squares opposite the names of certain of the candidates, his intention is not so clear. For instance, he is a Republican and he puts a cross mark opposite the names of President Coolidge and Vice President Dawes, showing that he intended to vote for them, and then for the candidate for governor for whom he intended to vote, but when he leaves blank the square opposite the name of Senator Brookhart what was in his mind? Did he intend to vote? I am merely talking about his intention; I am not talking about the law governing the case or what might be the effect of his marking the circle, but what the individual voter intended to do when he cast his ballot. Did he intend to vote for Senator Brookhart or not?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, of course, to give my views on this subject it will be necessary for me to refer to the law which the Senator says he has read.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am passing beyond the law for just a moment.

Mr. STEPHENS. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am merely wondering what was the intention of that voter when he thus marked his ballot in the voting booth on that day as we may gather his intention from the marks that he used. Did he intend to vote for Senator Brookhart or did he intend not to vote at all for any candidate for United States Senator?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am going to say in the first place, Mr. President, that while it may be violent presumption, yet the law presumes that every man knows the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course it does, but, as I understand, the law was passed about eight days before the election and for the purpose of making the statute conform with a decision of the supreme court along the same line, and I am wondering why that voter cast a ballot of which the one on the wall is a copy and what he intended. Did he know about the law; did he know about the decision of the supreme court, and did he really intend to vote for Senator Brookhart by leaving his name blank? If so, why did he mark the ballot in that way?

I want to say to the Senator that I feel exceedingly kindly toward Senator Brookhart, and I hope facts may develop which will show that he is entitled to his seat; but we are under oath here to cast our votes in accordance with the facts as we believe them to be. Under those circumstances, I am greatly disturbed by those 1,344 votes, and I should like to have the matter cleared up if the Senator can clear it up.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am going to say in the beginning that that is not controlling in this particular matter, because, as I shall attempt to show at least, and as I believe I can show, regardless of those votes, Senator Brookhart is entitled to the seat. However, I am going now to come to this particular question, and I am going to call attention to what I find on page 312 of the printed hearings to show what another Senator, other than the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself, thought about this question at one time. I know that the Senator whom I shall name has signed the majority report, but I am calling attention to what he put into the record. On page 312 this particular question was being discussed in the committee. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] had not been attending the meetings with great regularity, as he was busy about other matters, and he was not as familiar with all the facts and with the law as some others were, so he was asking questions about this particular matter.

Senator SMITH said:

Did not the law as read—

Somebody had read the law—

provide in the third alternative that he might mark in the circle, and if he intended not to vote for any names in the circle that he would have to make a mark opposite those that he intended to vote for.

Senator SHORTRIDGE. That is not the impression I got from hearing it read. It reads this way:

Senator SMITH was quoting simply his recollection of the law. Senator SHORTRIDGE read it:

He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket—

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Senator SHORTRIDGE. Now notice:

"And also a cross in any or all of the squares beneath said circle."

Referring to a ticket entirely similar to this particular ticket, Senator WATSON of Indiana immediately said:

Yes; and that votes a straight ticket.

That was the idea of Senator WATSON, as expressed by him at that time, as appears from the record; and I may say this: Although I am not attempting to commit my brethren on the committee in that regard, I doubt if many of them, I might say any of them, would seriously contend that that, under the law of the State, is not a straight ballot and should not be counted for Brookhart. I believe that they will all agree about that.

Now, with reference to the law of the State—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to the law of the State, let me say that of course I have the utmost respect for the opinions of the Senators that the Senator from Mississippi has mentioned. They are on the committee and should know, and no doubt do know, more about it than I do; but the question I am propounding to the Senator is this:

Take the ticket just as it appears there on the wall. Does the Senator think that the man who voted that ticket, or one just like it, when he did not put a cross mark in front of Senator Brookhart's name, intended thereby to vote for him, or does he think that he intended thereby to omit voting for him?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, my idea is simply this: We live in a land under law. It is our duty to follow the law. We, as Senators, must follow the law. I will get to the other proposition in a little bit. I want to talk about law for just a moment. It is very true that the Constitution of the United States makes each House of Congress the sole judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own Members; but that does not wipe out any law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator let me make just one suggestion? I do not want the Senator to feel that I am talking in opposition to him.

Mr. STEPHENS. Not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a very great sympathy with the position the Senator takes; but it is our duty to determine not whether the Iowa Legislature by statute legislated a man into the office of Senator, because we have changed that by constitutional amendment; but in the case of these 1,344 ballots which are marked with the circle and marked with the square opposite the names of a number of Republican candidates, but which omit to mark opposite the name of Mr. Brookhart whether those 1,344 voters, by omitting to mark the name, intended to vote for Mr. Brookhart?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion to my friend?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield; yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I submit to the Senator from Tennessee that it is utterly impossible to determine the intent of a voter except in the light of the law. Suppose you take a blank piece of paper and write on it here something touching an election. It has no force. You can not determine the intent of the voter except as you view that act with the light thrown upon it by the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. The law provides for this ballot.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the difficulty that the Senator is experiencing, but it seems to me that he can not make an abstraction of this matter. He must consider the act of the voter in view of the provision of the law, and if he will think of it in that way it seems to me it will clear up the difficulty he has in mind.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, let me say that I am perfectly willing to yield to any Senator for a question; but on yesterday about two-thirds of my time was taken up by other Senators discussing matters between themselves.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I did not intend to do that.

Mr. STEPHENS. Oh, no, Mr. President; I said that I was perfectly willing for any Senator to ask me a question. I gladly yield now. If the Senator wants to ask a question of me, I shall be very glad to have him do so.

Mr. GOFF. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Mississippi, suggested by the question which the Senator from Ohio, with the permission of the Senator from Mississippi, has just asked the Senator from Tennessee. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOFF. All right.

The Senator from Ohio asks, "How could you possibly consider a ballot or a piece of paper having a mark upon the face of it unless you considered it in the light of the law?" I wish the Senator would consider this additional situation, reflected in many ballots before the committee, where ballots were marked that in no sense reflected the law of the State of Iowa and which were submitted to the committee for its decision as to the intent of the man who so voted.

Mr. STEPHENS. That, of course, presents a very different proposition. The case that the Senator from West Virginia states is where a man did not follow the law. This is a case where a man did follow the law. As I said to the Senator from Tennessee, in order to discuss this matter and make my position clear I naturally have to make some reference to legal phases.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Suppose, if the Senator from Mississippi pleases, that instead of Mr. Brookhart's name appearing on that ballot at the place where the candidate for Senator appears, the name of some man had appeared who was a candidate for Governor in the State of Iowa. Suppose that ticket had been cast as that ballot appears, with a cross in the circle, but no cross opposite the name of the candidate for Governor of Iowa. Suppose that under the law the election judges in the precincts, as the final judges of the facts, had decided that under the law that was a ballot for a man for governor: The State of Iowa would have been bound by that, would it not, under its law?

Mr. STEPHENS. There is no doubt of that, I think, if I caught the Senator's question correctly; yes, sir.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall be very glad to yield; yes.

Mr. MAYFIELD. The Senator was stating a moment ago that he thought this ballot ought to be counted according to the law, and that he was going to discuss that question.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAYFIELD. The Senator from Tennessee was trying to develop whether or not, in the Senator's opinion, the voter who cast this vote and refused or neglected to place a cross in the square opposite Senator Brookhart's name intended to vote against him. He was trying to ascertain what was the intent of the voter.

This is the question that I want to ask: It has been my understanding all along that the courts have invariably and universally held that the voter can not be disfranchised; that the intent of the voter must prevail.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYFIELD. I have not the floor and therefore I can not possibly yield. I will simply say that that has been my understanding. What is the law with reference to voting? Is it a mere statute or is it the decisions of the highest court?

Mr. WHEELER. Both.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I was speaking to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right; I will answer.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Do you disregard the intent of the voter altogether in determining what the law is?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not; no, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I think it has been done.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator asked what I did, as I caught his question.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh! The Senator does not decide this case himself. It is to be decided by the Senate.

Mr. STEPHENS. I understand; but the Senator asked me what I did. I realize that 95 other honorable gentlemen in the Chamber, of course, must pass upon this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me explain what I mean. In the State of Iowa the Republican vote, as it is shown on this first column, would be a lawful vote, and every person on the ticket should be credited with the votes cast. Now, if in Utah the Republican had voted here for Brookhart and then voted over here for Steck, that would be an unlawful vote in the State of Utah.

Mr. WILLIS. It would not in Ohio.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an unlawful vote in the State of Utah; but I hold that the practice of the Senate has been to determine what the intent of the voter was. There would not be any question in my mind but that the intent of a voter in Utah, as referred to by me, was to vote for the Democrat and for all the Republicans in the Republican column, and, as far as I am concerned, I understand that the practice of this body always has been to take the intent of the voter; but that matter is not involved, in my opinion, in this case. I consider that under the laws of Iowa that is a straight vote for everyone running as a Republican, no matter whether there were some of them marked and some of them not marked. The law of Iowa holds that they can do that, and that is to be counted as a straight vote for that ticket; and I can not see but that those votes have to be counted for Mr. Brookhart.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, what does the Senator think they attempted to do?

Mr. SMOOT. As far as my opinion is concerned—and it is only an opinion—it is that they did not attempt to vote for Brookhart, but the law says they did. Where there is no law making such a ballot unlawful, it is a question for the Senate to decide what was the intent of the voter. If he had voted here, under the law of the State of Utah the whole ballot would have been thrown out. Then the question for the Senate to decide would be, What was the intention of the voter? If the Senate decided it was the intention of the voter to vote the Democratic ballot, and Steck received the majority by that vote, then he ought to be seated.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Senator think that if we could be convinced that the voter did not intend to vote for Brookhart, he should be counted for him anyhow?

Mr. SMOOT. If it is a lawful vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will address the Chair before interrupting; and the Chair may call attention to the fact that the Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would like to have a moment or two, Mr. President.

I do not know whether I understood the question propounded by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] or not, because I was trying to listen to another Senator, and to find some of my notes.

I intend now to give my idea of this matter, and I shall take a little time to call attention to the law. If I understood the Senator from Utah correctly, I think he has the right idea with reference to this matter. I was attempting to answer the Senator from Texas, and I made a statement, and before I had opportunity to state the limitation that was proper to be put upon it, I was interrupted, and therefore left, perhaps, in an awkward position.

It is my judgment, after very careful consideration, after hearing the discussions of the matter by several Senators in the committee who agree upon this, that under the law of the State the vote shown on that chart is a straight vote.

THE LAW OF IOWA

Section 811 tells how to mark a straight vote. We have here what is called a ballot, and on this ballot there are six tickets—Republican, Democratic, Progressive, Workers', Socialist-Laborer, and Independent. I shall take for the illustration a Republican ticket, because it is the one that is marked on the chart, and Brookhart being a Republican, I am going to apply this to him. There are three ways to mark a straight ticket. First, the law says—

He—

Referring to the voter—

He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket without making a cross in any squares beneath said circle.

In other words, he may make a cross in that circle, and it would be a straight ticket for every man whose name appears on the ticket.

2. He may place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate without making any cross in the circle.

In other words, leave off the cross there and mark every name there, and then it is a straight ticket. The third way is the way that applies to this particular ticket as marked, which, as I contend, makes it under the law of the State a Brookhart ticket, and there were 1,344 ballots similar to this. The third way is as follows:

He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket—

Just as is placed here—

and also a cross in any or all of the squares.

It does not read "in all squares," but it says "in any or all of the squares."

Mr. President, there are five or six different statutes with reference to marking and with reference to counting. You will find the idea of making a cross in the circle carrying a vote for everybody on the ticket running through all these five or six statutes, like a thread running through a piece of cloth. It is all based upon the idea that a cross in the circle has the effect of making it a straight Republican ticket, and in order to keep it from being a straight Republican ticket the voter must do something other than failing to mark a cross. If he puts the cross in the circle, in order to vote a mixed ticket he must mark somebody else's name over here. In this case the Senator from Utah says that, according to the law of his State, if the voter had marked the name of Steck over here it would be a void ballot, that it would not count for Steck at all, that it would still be a Brookhart vote, simply because the mark in the circle was there. That is not exactly the law in Iowa. The law in that State is not quite as drastic as the law the Senator from Utah claims for his State, because the law of Iowa provides specifically that if the voter shall leave Brookhart's name unmarked, after he has put his cross in the circle at the top, and comes over here and makes a cross opposite Steck's name, then it loses its identity as a straight ticket and becomes a mixed ticket, and therefore must be counted for Steck. But so long as the voter fails to convert his straight ticket, made so by the cross in the circle, into a mixed ticket by marking over here opposite the name of somebody in the Democratic column, or in any other column, it is a straight ticket and must be counted for the Republican candidate.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. For how long had it been the law of Iowa that a ticket marked in the circle and also in some of the crosses below the circle, not all of them, is a straight ballot?

Mr. STEPHENS. There have been some changes in the law in that State. I find that in Ninety-first Iowa Reports, which was published, I believe, some time after 1900, a case also cited in Fifty-first American State Reports, this very question was passed upon by the Supreme Court of Iowa at that early date.

Mr. DILL. 1910?

Mr. STEPHENS. Was it 1910?

Mr. DILL. I ask if it was in 1910.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think it was a little earlier than that. Then, in One hundred and fifteenth Iowa Reports, in the case of Spurrier against McClellan, this matter was considered.

I find that in the State of Montana, in the State of Arizona, in the State of Oklahoma, and perhaps in other States, ballots quite similar to this have been passed upon by the highest courts of the State; and it has been held in those cases that whenever a voter places his mark in the circle, then and there the ballot becomes a straight ballot for every man whose name appears as a candidate in that particular column.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. There is one other part of the law to which the Senator has not yet referred which I think strengthens his argument. He will notice in the next section—section 812—it provides:

If the names of all the candidates for whom the voter desires to vote appear upon a single ticket but he does not desire to vote for all the candidates whose names appear thereon, he shall place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate for whom he desires to vote, without making any cross in the circle at the top of such ticket.

That makes it very apparent, it seems to me, that this ticket, placed upon the chart, indicates the desire of that person to vote the straight Republican ticket.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think there is no doubt about it, and I thank the Senator for reading that particular section of the statute. I had it in mind as one of the five or six to which I referred a moment ago when I said the general idea ran through them all that a cross in the circle made it a straight ticket, because, as the Senator very well said, the section to which he referred, section 812 provides that—all the candidates whose names appear thereon, he shall place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate for whom he desires to vote.

If the names of all the candidates for whom the voter desires to vote appear upon a single ticket but he does not desire to vote for

In other words, that means simply this: Suppose the voter is a Republican and does not want to vote for anybody except Republicans. He goes into the booth and says, "I do not like a certain man. I shall refuse to vote for him, but I shall not vote for a Democrat." What, under the law, must he do? He must leave unmarked the Republican circle, and he must go down then and place a cross in a square opposite the names of the ones for whom he desires to vote.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, is that the Senator's interpretation of the instruction that went to the voters?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will be very glad to discuss the instruction with the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what the Senator is sure is the instruction?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am very familiar with the instruction. Mr. CARAWAY. I am asking the Senator if he is sure that is the instruction.

Mr. STEPHENS. We will get the instruction, and I will attempt to interpret it.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is not in that book the Senator has in his hand. I am asking the Senator if he is sure that is the instruction. If he is wrong about that, he is wrong about his conclusion, is he not?

Mr. STEPHENS. Here is the instruction. Mr. CARAWAY. That is not the instruction that went to the voter.

Mr. STEPHENS. It is marked here in the record. Mr. CARAWAY. All right. I am just asking the Senator if that is so.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then let me see the instruction. Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator ought to have looked at it before he made up his mind.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have a right to presume that the chairman of this committee, and that every man on the committee, and that every man connected with this transaction, was entirely fair and honest, and when there is placed in the record—

Mr. CARAWAY. Who placed it there?

Mr. STEPHENS. It was placed there by counsel, I understand, as the record shows. I was not a member of the committee at that time—

Mr. CARAWAY. It was placed there by counsel for the contestee.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is what I stated, by the counsel.

Mr. CARAWAY. For the contestee.

Mr. STEPHENS. Sure it was.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is his conclusion.

Mr. STEPHENS. I say I have a right to presume that even a lawyer representing Smith W. Brookhart was entirely honest; and when he placed this in the record, I say I had a right to presume that it was correct. It is in the printed record of the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator see the book of instructions that went to the voter?

Mr. STEPHENS. I did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was in the committee room when the Senator was present.

Mr. STEPHENS. No; I never saw it. Perhaps it is there now.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; it is there.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would be glad to have it.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is there for everybody who wants to see it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would be glad to see it.

Mr. President, of course all I know is what I find in the hearings. The Senator from Arkansas said it is not correct. I do not know. I am not responsible for it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, was there any challenge made as to its correctness when it was put in the hearings?

Mr. STEPHENS. I never heard of any such challenge, though it is fair to say that I was not a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. REED of Missouri. There is nothing in the record that the Senator has seen to that effect?

Mr. STEPHENS. I know of nothing in the record. I wish every Senator might have a copy of the hearings. The hearings are entitled:

Senator from Iowa. Hearings before subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, United States Senate, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, pursuant to S. Res. 21, authorizing the investigation of alleged unlawful practices in the election of a Senator from Iowa, July 20, December 2, 3, and 4, 1925, and January 6, 1926. Printed for the use of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Washington. Government Printing Office. 1926.

From page 259 of those hearings I read the following:

Copy of card of instructions is here printed in full as follows:

STATE OF IOWA,

SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, W. C. Ramsay, secretary of state, custodian of the records pertaining to elections, both primary and general, do hereby certify that the attached instrument in writing is a true and correct copy of the card of instructions forwarded by this department to the various county auditors of the State for the general election held November 4, 1924.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the official seal of the secretary of state of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines this 17th day of November, A. D. 1925.

[SHAL.]

W. C. RAMSAY,

Secretary of State.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

INSTRUCTIONS TO VOTERS

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, just before the point of no quorum was made, and the roll was called, something was said about the card of instructions that was issued to voters in the State of Iowa. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] stated, as I understood him, that he would like to have me discuss the card of instructions that was sent to the voters, and when I began to read what purports to be the card of instructions as set out in the hearings, he stated that that was not the correct card. I said to him and to the Senate, that I had no personal knowledge of the matter and could look only to what appeared in the printed hearings under the certificate of the secretary of state of the State of Iowa, Mr. Ramsay. It was offered in evidence by the attorney for Mr. Brookhart.

When I was advised by the Senator from Arkansas that it was not correct I stated that I would like to see the book to which he referred and asked where it might be found. Being informed that it was in the committee room, I sent for it and the Senator himself was kind enough to bring me a book, which I now hold in my hand, entitled "State of Iowa, 1922, Primary and General Election Laws, Prepared under the Direction of W. C. Ramsay, Secretary of State." What he called to my attention is found on page 81 of that book. There are two sections on that page. I presume that he has reference to both of them. As I see it, this is a copy of the primary and general election laws of the State. I have no personal knowledge how well this was distributed; I do not know how many voters ever saw it, or whether it went to all or any of the precincts in the State. Unless it is shown that this particular law was sent out to the voters by way of instruction to them, I do not see how this bears upon the question that is being considered by us. This is the law of 1922, while the election was held in November, 1924. This was not the law that was in force at the time of the election.

There was placed in the brief, I think, of counsel for Mr. Steck—I know it is in the record, and I set it out in the minority views presented by me—the sections of the laws that are applicable. They are not these sections here. They are sections 811, 812, and so on, five or six of them. These are sections 1119 and 1120 of the laws of 1922. The first has for title "Marking the ballot"; the second, "Ballot marking for candidates." I do not know of my personal knowledge, and I find nothing in the record to indicate that this book was sent out. I do find in the hearings before the committee that there was introduced what purports to be a copy of a card of instructions, and it is there printed in full.

This book is not a set of instructions. It is a copy of all the laws of the State with reference to the holding of elections, duties of county officers, and so on. It comprises 170 pages, including a small index. It occurs to me it is hardly likely that this would have been sent out as instructions to voters.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Mississippi is there anything in the record of which the Senator knows to show that that document was ever identified even in the hearings?

Mr. STEPHENS. To which document does the Senator from Missouri refer?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I refer to the document to which the Senator has been alluding—the election laws of Iowa.

Mr. STEPHENS. I know nothing about that. All I know is what appears in the record. There is nothing to show that it was ever introduced.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that on the title-page it is stated, "State of Iowa, 1922, Primary and General Election Laws." So this document appears to have been prepared two years at least before the election.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; it was prepared at least two years prior to the election. I shall not take time again to read what appears on page 259. At that point there is set out, under the affidavit of Mr. Ramsay, the secretary of state of Iowa, as to its authenticity—almost two and a half pages of instructions. It does not read to me as if it were a statute. It appears to be what it purports to be from the title, a card of instructions. It reads:

Give your name and place of residence, if required, to the judges.

And so on.

When inside of the guard rail you will obtain from one of the judges the official ballot—

And so forth.

If you can not read the English language, or because of any physical disability are unable to mark your ballot, make known that fact to the judges.

And so on. I find here a letter from the assistant attorney general of the State, addressed to Mr. J. G. Mitchell, who was the attorney for Mr. Brookhart, in which he refers to the law and its construction, and so on.

So I see nothing to become excited over in regard to this booklet that is brought here. Unless it is shown affirmatively that the card of instructions is not correctly printed in the hearings, necessarily I shall take the printed record as being true. If I have assurances from any other Senators on the committee that it is incorrectly printed, I shall gladly concede that they may be right, because I have no knowledge on the subject.

However, Mr. President, let us now get down to another subject. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] asked me to construe the card of instructions. That is in line with what I was endeavoring to do when I was interrupted.

I was then discussing the statute of the State on the subject of voting, how to mark straight ballots, mixed ballots, partial ballots, and so on; and I had stated that there are five or six statutes on the subject of marking ballots, through which there runs the idea that a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket carries a vote for every candidate whose name appears upon that ticket.

Now I am going to refer to the card of instructions and see what it says.

If the voter desires to vote a straight ticket, he can do so by marking a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket.

If he desires to vote a straight ticket, so says the law, what he is required to do is to mark a cross in the circle, and that of itself carries a straight vote for every candidate upon the ticket.

It makes no reference to the second and third clauses of the statute. It rests upon the general proposition that whenever a cross is marked in the circle, that of itself writes it down as a vote for the straight ticket, for every man whose name appears as a candidate upon that particular ticket.

What does it state further? In the very next sentence it says:

If the voter does not desire to vote a straight ticket, he can make a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket, thus @, and a cross in the square opposite the name of each candidate for whom he desires to vote, thus g.

Mark you, Mr. President, if he does not desire to vote a straight ticket he can make a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket and a cross in the square opposite the name of each candidate for whom he desires to vote.

And so on.

If there is more than one candidate—

It refers to two or three different kinds of votes; but, as I have said, there is found the positive, direct statement that when the voter puts a cross in the circle it becomes a vote for the straight ticket.

If the voter does not desire to vote a straight ticket he can make a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket and a cross in the square opposite the name of any candidate for whom he desires to vote, or he may place a cross in the square opposite the name of each candidate for whom he desires to vote.

NO REAL DIFFERENCE BETWEEN LAWS OF 1922 AND 1924

As I have quoted, the law of 1924 provides for marking a straight ballot, as follows:

811. How to mark a straight ticket: If the names of all the candidates for whom a voter desires to vote appear upon the same ticket, and he desires to vote for all candidates whose names appear upon such ticket, he may do so in any one of the following ways:

1. He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket without making a cross in any squares beneath said circle.

2. He may place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate without making any cross in the circle at the top of such ticket.

3. He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket and also a cross in any or all of the squares beneath said circle.

812. Voting part of ticket only: If the names of all the candidates for whom the voter desires to vote appear upon a single ticket, but he does not desire to vote for all the candidates whose names appear thereon, he shall place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate for whom he desires to vote without making any cross in the circle at the top of such ticket.

814. How to mark a mixed ticket: If the names of all the candidates for whom a voter desires to vote do not appear upon the same ticket, he may indicate the candidates of his choice by marking his ballot in any one of the following ways:

1. He may place a cross in the circle at the top of a ticket on which the names of some of the candidates for whom he desires to vote appear and also a cross in the square opposite the name of each other candidate of his choice, whose name appears upon some ticket other than the one in which he has marked the circle at the top.

2. He may place a cross in the square opposite the name of each candidate for whom he desires to vote without placing any cross in any circle.

815. Counting ballots: The ballots shall be counted according to the markings thereon, respectively, as provided in the six preceding sections, and not otherwise. If, for any reason, it is impossible to determine from a ballot, as marked, the choice of the voter for any office, such ballot shall not be counted for such office. When there is a conflict between the cross in the circle of one ticket and the cross in the square of another ticket on the ballot, the cross in the square shall be held to control, and the cross in the circle in such case shall not apply as to that office. Any ballot marked in any other manner than as authorized in the six preceding sections, and in such manner as to show that the voter employed such mark for the purpose of identifying his ballot, shall be rejected.

It will be observed, of course, that there may be several tickets upon a single ballot, as the Republican ticket, the Democratic ticket, and so forth.

The law of 1922 with reference to marking and counting ballots reads as follows:

SEC. 447. Marking the ballot: Upon retiring to the voting booth the voter shall mark his ballot. He may place a cross, if he desires, in the circle at the head of one ticket on the ballot, and the voter may place a cross in the square opposite the name of any candidate for whom he desires to vote, whether he has put a cross in the circle or not.

If the voter does not wish to vote for all of the candidates of his party to an office where more than one candidate is to be elected, the cross in the circle at the top of his ticket shall not apply to said office, but the voter must mark crosses in the squares opposite the names of the candidates for whom he intends to vote. The voter may also insert in writing in the proper place the name of any person for whom he desires to vote, making a cross opposite thereto. The writing of such name without making a cross opposite thereto, or the making of a cross in a square opposite a blank without writing a name therein, shall not affect the validity of the vote. (C. 97/1119; S. 13/1119; 38 G. A. ch. 86/7.)

SEC. 448. How counted: When a circle is marked the ballot shall be counted for all of the candidates upon the ticket beneath said circle, except those offices for which some candidate has been voted for by marking a square. A cross placed in a square shall be counted for the candidate before whose name the square is so marked.

When a square in front of any candidate has been marked, a mark in the circle shall not count for any candidate for that particular office. When more candidates than the number to be elected to the same office are voted for by marking the squares opposite their names the vote shall not be counted for any candidate for that office. If less than the whole number of candidates to be elected are voted for by marking the squares opposite their names, the vote shall be counted only for those marked in the square, and the mark in the circle shall not apply. If for any reason it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office, his ballot shall not be counted for such office, but a mark in the circle of any ticket on the ballot shall not be held to make it impossible to determine the voter's choice. Any ballot marked by the voter in any other manner than as authorized in this chapter, and so that such mark may be used for the purpose of identifying such ballot, shall be rejected. (C. 97/1120; S. 13/1120; 38 G. A. ch. 86/8.)

Note that in section 447 the voter is told that he may mark a cross in the circle and a cross in the square opposite the name of the candidate for whom he desires to vote whether he has made a cross in the circle or not.

This statute has been construed by the Supreme Court and it was held that when the cross was made in the circle that it was a straight vote for every candidate on that particular ticket irrespective of the marks in the squares if no names on any other ticket were marked.

In other words, if there are a dozen candidates on the Republican ticket and a cross is made in the Republican circle and a cross in the square opposite the names of 11 candidates, it is a straight ballot and should be counted for all 12 candidates unless the voter goes over to the Democratic ticket and marks the name of a candidate who is running for the same office that the unmarked candidate on the other ticket is running.

Section 448, laws of 1922, with reference to counting ballots, says:

When a circle is marked the ballot shall be counted for all of the candidates upon the ticket beneath the circle, except those offices for which some candidate has been voted by marking a square. A cross placed in a square shall be counted for the candidate before whose name the square is so marked. When a square in front of any candidate has been marked, a mark in the circle shall not count for any candidate for that particular office.

It is evident that this section has reference to both straight tickets and mixed tickets. Also, that when a cross is put in a circle it is a straight ticket unless the voter shall go over to another ticket and mark some candidate of an opposing party.

If this is not true, the first section of section 448 means that when a voter marks a circle and then marks some of the candidates under that circle and leaves some unmarked, that his vote shall only be counted for the candidate unmarked. Under that construction the ballot exhibited here, although it is marked for President Coolidge, was not voted for him, and that the only candidate voted for is the unmarked candidate.

The idea carried by the old law was simply that a cross in the circle—if no name on another ticket was marked—was a vote for every candidate on that ticket. The same idea was written into the law of 1924.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right at that point?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator read just a moment ago what I recall as the third paragraph of section 811 of the Iowa statutes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand, it is the contention of the Senator that under the terms of the third paragraph of section 811 a ticket marked as the ticket here upon the wall is marked, namely, with a cross in the circle in front of the name "Republican" and various crosses in other circles, but no cross in the square in front of the name of Mr. Brookhart—is counted as a straight Republican ticket, and therefore should be counted for Mr. Brookhart.

Mr. STEPHENS. For Mr. Brookhart; yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. Did every one of the 1,344 ballots in question come in that class?

Mr. STEPHENS. The word "practically" is used in order to show that they did not mark everybody except Brookhart.

Sometimes they might mark several. Sometimes they might mark everybody except Brookhart. They were mixed up in that regard. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was a member of the subcommittee, and he is familiar with that matter. I shall be very glad to have him answer the Senator's question.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission I will make a statement about those particular ballots.

In all of those ballots the circle at the head of the Republican ticket was marked. Then, in approximately 300—I will give round numbers—the circle at the head of the Republican ticket was marked, and every square on the Republican ticket was also marked, except the square in front of Mr. Brookhart's name, or practically every square other than the one in front of Mr. Brookhart's name. Then in something like 500 tickets there was the same cross in the Republican circle at the top and crosses in the squares opposite some of the candidates, very much as in the case of that ticket, but no cross in the square in front of Senator Brookhart's name.

Mr. STEPHENS. Steck's name was unmarked?

Mr. GEORGE. Steck's name was unmarked. Then, in the remainder of the 1,344 ballots, there was the same cross in the Republican circle at the top of the Republican ticket, and crosses in some of the squares on the Democratic and occasionally even on the Progressive ticket, and crosses in some of the squares on the Republican ticket, but no cross in the square in front of the name of Senator Brookhart or in front of the name of Steck in any of those cases.

The cross was in the Republican circle in all of the ballots, but they fell into the three general classes which I have tried to indicate; but there was no cross in the square in front of Senator Brookhart's name in any one of the tickets, nor in front of the name of Steck in any one of them.

Mr. WILLIS. Then, if the Senator will permit an inquiry just there, how does the Senator conclude that the tickets of the third class should be counted in this particular matter? Where there was a cross in the circle in front of the name "Republican," and then a number of crosses over on the Democratic ticket or on the Progressive ticket, how would that ticket be counted, so far as this controversy is concerned?

Mr. GEORGE. The third class is a subdivision of the total of 1,344 tickets.

Mr. WILLIS. And it is the opinion of the Senator that all of those tickets should be counted for Senator Brookhart?

Mr. GEORGE. That was my personal conclusion.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; that is what I mean, and also the conclusion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Otherwise, the committee was against us on that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator restate how many ballots were in the first class, where they were all voted except Brookhart?

Mr. GEORGE. I can not give the number.

Mr. LENROOT. About how many?

Mr. GEORGE. In the first class?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; where they were circled at the top and all other candidates voted except Brookhart.

Mr. GEORGE. All others, or practically all others—there might have been, in some instances, one or two local officers that were not crossed—there were some 381, as I recollect.

Mr. LENROOT. Is there an exact record of the fact somewhere?

Mr. GEORGE. I have the figure, which I shall be glad to supply. I have not it right now, but I shall be glad to get it.

Mr. LENROOT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just for a question before he leaves that division of his argument?

Mr. STEPHENS. This is right in line with what I have been saying, but I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. GOFF. It is a fact, is it not, that section 811 of the civil code of Iowa, to which reference has been made, and section 3 thereof, did not go into effect legally in that State until October 28, 1924?

Mr. STEPHENS. I think that is true—some time in October; I am not sure as to the date. It was stated, however—I read it in the record last night, I think—that the matter had been discussed, and there was, as I understand, no very great change in the matter; and it was held in two or three decisions—ninety-first Iowa and one hundred and fifteenth Iowa, and, perhaps some others—that ballots marked just as this ballot is marked should be considered straight ballots.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. If that be the law, as the Senator has read it, it is in effect saying that such a voter votes twice for the candidates on such a ticket. What is the utility of such a law or such an intention so executed on the part of a voter?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not going to speak on the question of intention. I can not tell; I do not know. I do not know why the legislators of that State wanted to provide three different ways of marking a straight ballot; I only know that they did. I really feel that I am under no duty to speculate as to what the intention of the legislature was in providing three separate methods.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There is nothing in the law of Iowa that prohibits a voter from going down the line and marking a cross in the square opposite the name of any or all of the candidates? There is no prohibition?

Mr. STEPHENS. None at all. In fact, I may say, if I understand the Senator, that it says that he may do it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. But it does not alter the ballot?

Mr. STEPHENS. It does not alter the ballot.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator know of any other yardstick or standard by which the committee could measure the validity of these ballots except the law of Iowa?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say this, that in my judgment there is no other legitimate or legal way by which we can reach a conclusion as to the intention of the voter except by looking to the face of the ballot, with the light of the law on the subject shining upon it, and from the two, determining what the voter's intention was.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have been trying to find out what the committee did in this kind of a case. We have a ballot here where there is a cross mark at the top. There is no marking in this square for Senator Brookhart. There may be some here. Then over here there is no cross in the square opposite the name of Steck. There may be some crosses down here. How did the committee determine that vote would be counted on the senatorship?

Mr. STEPHENS. A vote marked just as this is?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. They determined that it should not be counted at all for United States Senator, as there was no cross opposite the name of any candidate for Senator. They absolutely ignored it.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is, the majority of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am speaking of the majority. They considered it as "no vote," as they termed it, so far as it related to the office of United States Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Take this ballot. Suppose there were a cross here, and there were no cross here for Steck, but there should be some crosses down here. How did the committee count those ballots?

Mr. STEPHENS. I presume that in a matter of that kind, they followed the same rule.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator does not know?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know, because I never went over the ballots. I was not on the subcommittee. I simply know what I was told. But I presume they followed the same rule.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. But whatever the committee did, the Senator, having read the law, claims that the law of Iowa would make it necessary, following the law, to count such a vote for Brookhart?

Mr. STEPHENS. For Brookhart, yes.

I call attention to the case of Whittam v. Zahorik (91 Iowa, 321):

The cross is used, in all cases, to show affirmatively the choice of the voter. When it is placed in the square opposite the name of the candidate it indicates with certainty that the voter desires his ballot to be counted for that candidate. When it is placed in the circle opposite the title of a party, or group, it indicates that the voter wishes his ballot to be counted for all the candidates of that party excepting as he has otherwise indicated by marking in one or more squares opposite the names of one or more candidates of another party or of other parties. When he has made a cross in the circle opposite the appellation of one party and has also made a cross in the square opposite the name of a candidate of another party he has shown a desire to vote for all the candidates whose names are printed under the party appellation marked excepting the candidates for the office for which he has marked the name of the candidate of another party, and that he wishes his ballot counted for that candidate whose name he has marked. In such case the specific marking controls the general, and the ballot must be counted for the candidate whose name is marked by a cross in the opposite square and not for the candidate for the same office whose name is printed under the party appellation the circle of which he has marked. The provision of the statute applicable to such a case is mandatory and plain.

In Spurrier v. McLennan (115 Iowa 461, 88 N. W. 1062), the supreme court of Iowa, quoting from Robinson, Judge, in the case of Whittam v. Zahorik (91 Iowa 23, 51 Am. St. Rpts. 317, 59 N. W. 57), said:

Hence, when a voter has marked his ticket by placing a cross in the circle opposite the title he does not add to the legal effect of that marking by placing crosses in squares opposite the names of candidates on the same ticket. This, we think, is true under the present statute. And we may say, further, that crosses in squares under such circumstances not only do not add to the effect of the mark in the circle, but they do not detract from it; they have no consequence whatever.

The following is taken from the case of Potts v. Folsom (24 Okla. 734):

To our minds it seems clear that under this statute a stamp in the circle at the head of the list of candidates is the statutory method provided whereby a voter may manifest his intention to vote for every candidate under that stamp. If this is true, and, after having placed the stamp there, the voter has succeeded in voting for all of these candidates, then the placing of additional stamps in front of the different names on that same list would either constitute distinguishing marks or be without any effect whatsoever. These are held not to be distinguishing marks in the McClelland v. Erwin case, supra. Hence we conclude they are without effect. Our conclusion herein seems to be supported by the case of Dickerman v. Gelsthrope (19 Mont. 249, 47 Pac. 999), Spurrier v. McLennan (115 Iowa 461, 88 N. W. 1062), Whittam v. Zahorik (91 Iowa 23, 50 N. W. 57, 51 Am. St. Rep. 317), McKittrick v. Pardee (8 S. Dak. 39, 65 N. W. 23).

A cross in the circle conclusively means a vote for the whole ticket printed below it (115 Iowa 288).

There are cases in Arizona, Montana, and other States that hold the same rule in those States.

Brookhart should be given the 1,344 ballots.

From the decisions read and the statutes quoted it seems entirely clear to me that the 1,344 ballots in controversy should be counted for Brookhart.

There can be no doubt that if he were a candidate in Iowa for any office other than United States Senator these ballots would be counted for him. I think no one will deny this. There is no reason why they should not be counted for him in this case.

It is a well-established and most salutary rule that where the proper authorities of the State government have given a construction to their own constitution or statutes that construction will be followed by the Federal authorities. This rule is absolutely necessary to the harmonious working of our complex Governments, State and National.

This is a quotation from a report of a committee of the House of Representatives in a contested-election case. The House is just as anxious to maintain its dignity and powers as the Senate. In that language the House simply adopted the holdings of the Supreme Court on like subjects.

Mr. President, I want to say a word on the question of waiver. In my opinion the contestee has no right to enter into any agreement or stipulation by which the fullest proof on any important matter should not be offered. I am referring to the matter with reference to preliminary proof with reference to the preservation of the ballots.

A contested election is not a mere private litigation, but a great public inquiry, where the real parties are not so much the returned Member and the contestant as the voters of the district.

This is the language of that distinguished Mississippian, L. Q. C. Lamar, to whom I have made reference before.

The right of waiver, while extending to almost all descriptions of contractual, statutory, and constitutional privileges, is nevertheless subject to the control of public policy, which can not be contravened by any conduct or agreement of the parties. (40 Cyc. of L. and Pro. 254.)

It is a recognized principle that everyone may waive a right intended for his own benefit, if it can be relinquished without detriment to the community at large. (83 Va. 26.)

Waiver is the voluntary surrender of a right; estoppel is the inhibition to assert it from the mischief that has followed.

Waiver involves both knowledge and intention; and estoppel may arise where there is no intent to mislead.

Waiver depends upon what one himself intends to do; estoppel depends rather upon what he caused his adversary to do.

Waiver involves the acts and conduct of only one of the parties; estoppel involves the conduct of both.

KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS

A waiver exists only where one with full knowledge of a material fact does or forbears to do something inconsistent with the right or his intention to rely upon that right. Knowledge of the existence of the right, benefit, or advantage on the part of the party claimed to have made the waiver is an essential prerequisite to its relinquishment. No one can be said to have waived that which he does not know; or where he has acted under a misapprehension of the facts. (40 Cyc. of L. and P. 259.)

A waiver involves the idea of assent; and assent is primarily an act of the understanding. (84 Me. 304.)

It is not sufficient that a party should have notice of facts that if followed up by inquiry would have led to information. Nor is there a waiver when one acts on a misapprehension of facts. (State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 426.)

Mere silence at a time when there is no occasion to speak is not a waiver, nor evidence from which waiver may be inferred, especially where such silence is unaccompanied by any act calculated to mislead. (40 Cyc. L. P. 263, citing New York, Alabama, Ohio, Tennessee.)

Must be by people: The term election must mean the act of choosing performed by the qualified electors, in conformity with the requisitions of the Constitution and laws regulating the manner in which the choice shall be made. (Reed v. Coaden, 17th Cong., C. & H. 854.)

Whomsoever the people choose to select: The people are supreme, and whomsoever they choose to select as their representative they are entitled to be represented by that person. And no class of public officers can lawfully disregard their will. (Letcher v. Moore (minority report), 23d Cong., C. & H. 823.)

Free choice of the majority fairly determined: His right is identified with the election itself and the rights of the electors; all must be sustained or sacrificed together. (Gholson and Claiborne, 25th Cong., L. Bart. 16.)

Free choice of the people, fairly determined: Elections are simply the method whereby citizens may manifest their choice; and when they have proceeded in accordance with law and manifested their choice through legal forms, their right so to do shall not be taken away from them, as long as their choice can be ascertained. There are three questions to be answered: Did the electors express their choice in accordance with law? Was the election free and fair? Can the choice be ascertained from the evidence? (Spencer v. Morey (minority report), 44th Cong., Smith 486.)

Votes legally cast, counted, and returned: To validate an election there must be votes legally deposited by legal voters and legally counted and the result legally declared. (Sheridan v. Plinckback (minority report), 43d Cong., Smith 227.)

Will of the people fairly and honestly expressed: The whole theory of a government which is to be managed and controlled by the people exercising the elective franchise is that their will, when fairly and honestly expressed, shall be the law and shall be respected by all the authorities. (English v. Pelle (minority report), 48th Cong., Mobley 179.)

WHERE VOTES WERE ADMITTED TO BE BAD BUT PROVED TO BE GOOD THEY MUST BE COUNTED

Where each party assumed the burden of showing the legality of votes cast for him and charged to be illegal, and the written stipulations in two counties reserved the right of proving the qualifications of voters attacked, but in the remaining counties there was no such reservation, and the votes seemed to have been admitted bad unconditionally—

the committee, however, were of the opinion that, although there was no expressed reservation in the last-named counties, yet, if affirmative and satisfactory proof should be offered showing that the votes objected to were, in point of fact, given by persons duly qualified to vote, that the parties would have no right to stipulate that such votes should be disregarded; and that the stipulation would be only received as prima facie evidence of the want of the necessary qualification of the voter. (Draper v. Johnston, 22d Cong., C. and H. 702-714.)

These principles, announced by the House in contested-election cases, are sound. For that reason I believe that they should prevail in this matter.

Where the contestant admitted 73 illegal votes but the minority could not find so many, they deducted only those shown by the evidence to be illegal.

Generally the admission of a part is received as proof, but it would not be proper to do so in this instance. (Blair v. Barrett (minority report), 36th Cong., Rept. No. 563 p. 44.)

Where fraud was shown in a number of precincts and the only votes proved aside from the returns were for contestant, but contestant in his original brief filed with the committee had conceded to contestee all the votes not proved to have been cast for himself, the committee, on account of this concession, and because it was only a question of the contestant's majority and not of the result of the election, counted the votes according to the method of contestant's brief, but stated that the strictly legal course would have been to reject the entire returns and count only the votes proved aliunde. (Miller v. Elliott, 51st Cong., Rowell, 527.)

The agreement of parties can neither diminish nor enlarge the elective franchise as secured by the laws of the Commonwealth. (Portersfield v. McCoy, 14th Cong., C. & H. 269.)

The agreement of parties has sometimes been received as to disputed questions of fact, but it has always been held that this should be done with great caution, as these are not merely contests between the parties but the rights of the people of the district and of the State and of the people of the United States are involved and can not be agreed away. (Holmes and Wilson, 46th Cong., 1 Ells. 324.)

Mr. WHEELER. That is, both the statutory law, and the law of the supreme court of the State?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes. The statute has been construed by the supreme court.

As I stated, I am going to endeavor to explain to the Senate why I believe that it is our duty to consider these ballots in the light of the law of the State in which they were cast. We have governments regulated by law, not only the Federal Government, but State governments. It is the duty of every Senator to endeavor to carry out the provisions of the Constitution and the provisions of the laws of the Federal Government and the laws of the States as well, where there is a relationship to the Federal Government.

Section 4 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, first clause, reads as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It will be observed that under the Constitution of the United States the State, by the legislature, can act with reference to providing for elections, the times, places, and manner, but there is reserved to the Federal Government the right to enact legislation or make regulations.

I want to call attention at this moment to section 5:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

I am going to take this position, which I believe is entirely sound, that as Senators we are duty bound, in passing upon the election of a United States Senator in a case contested as this is, to give full faith and credit to the statutes of the State statutes where they have been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States gives full faith and credit to many State statutes where they have been construed by the supreme court of the State.

I say, Mr. President, that we are required to look to the laws of the State, because of the complexity of our form of government, the fact that the great United States of America, the Federal Government, is based upon the 48 States which compose the Union.

I know that it oftentimes develops that one body is prone to sneer at the other, but I believe, after serving in that body for 10 years and having known something of it for a longer period, that there are just as able men there and have been at all times as there have been and are in this great body. In passing upon a question of this kind time after time it has followed the rule of having respect and regard for the laws of the State.

But I am going further and say that whenever I, as a Senator, shall disregard the law of the State of Iowa or the law of any other State in the Union in a contested-election case I am not only trampling upon the law of that State, but I am trampling upon the Federal law as well. I say that because of the very provision that I read that the States may prescribe these laws and that they shall have full force and effect unless the Congress shall enact legislation upon the same subject.

In other words, Mr. President, my view is that where a State has enacted laws upon the subject of ballots and balloting as we have them in this case and the Congress of the United States representing the Federal Government has failed to enact legislation of any kind or character on that subject, by that very failure it adopts the State statute and it becomes as fully a part of the law of the Federal Government as if it had been written in the law by the joint action of both branches of the Congress. Yet we have here a majority of this great committee who say, "Away with the law of the State. We will have nothing to do with it. We will wholly disregard it. It is true the Federal Government, the Congress, has not enacted legislation, but we stand higher than the Constitution, we stand higher than the Supreme Court, which is willing to follow the construction of a statute placed upon it by the State courts." These Senators are willing to say, "We will adopt a mere rule." The Constitution of the United States does not say that the Senate may adopt rules in regard to such matters. I contend that whenever power is granted to an individual or to a legislative body or to any officer, although it may seem to be plenary power, yet the presumption is that he will exercise the authority given him within the bounds of law and that he will follow the rules of law.

So I contend that the Senate, although empowered to pass upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, must follow what I confidently believe to be not only the State law but the Federal law as well. Indeed, by failing to enact legislation on this subject there are 48 different election laws that are Federal laws if my view of the matter is correct, and each particular case must be decided according to the provisions of the particular statute under which the contest is made.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that the clause of the Constitution to the effect that each House of Congress shall be the sole judge of the qualifications and elections of its Members was placed there solely to protect the legislative branch of the Government from interference by the other branches?

Mr. STEPHENS. I think that is very true. I agree with that view of it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But it is always implied that that power so vested in the legislative branch will be exercised in accordance with the law of the land?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. GOFF. Do I understand the Senator's contention to be that the law of each State, in so far as it relates to the election of a United States Senator, must be incorporated into the Federal law and must control and govern the Senate of the United States in so far as any one of those 48 provisions may be applicable?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will state my position in this way. Suppose the Federal Congress had enacted legislation under this particular provision of the Constitution, and suppose further that a contest arises, would the Senator, simply because of the second provision that the Senate shall be the sole judge of the returns and elections and qualifications of its Members, hold that that second provision overtopped the law with reference to contests, with reference to holding elections, the time, places, and manner, and all those things that relate to the election that the Senate had the right to consider?

Mr. GOFF. I would hold that the Senate had the right to exercise its own legal discretion in each and every case that came before it, regardless of the law of the State from which the case came.

Mr. STEPHENS. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. Suppose that Congress should enact legislation under section 4 of Article I of the Constitution, as it has the right to do, despite the fact that the legislature of the State had enacted similar legislation, what I want to know is simply this: Would the Senator hold, although the Congress has enacted such legislation, in view of section 5 of Article I, which says that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, that he could stand here or the Senate could stand here and wholly disregard the law that had been enacted by Congress on the subject?

Mr. GOFF. Oh, no. Of course, if the Senate should enact a law which was agreeable to the provisions of section 4 of Article I, the Senator would be bound by that congressional legislation. Section 4 of Article I reads as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations.

Now the term "such regulations" relates back to the time, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives.

But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Then section 5 provides:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

If the Congress of the United States, exercising the authority directly conferred upon it and not reserved to the States by the provisions of section 4 of Article I of the Constitution, should enact a law in no way in conflict with the provisions of section 5 of Article I, of course the Senate would be bound by such a law. If the Senator propounds that question to me, my answer is clearly that the Senate would be bound by such a law as the Congress might pass consonant with the provisions to which I have called attention.

The question which I propounded to the Senator from Mississippi did not relate to that proposition. My question was whether the Senator would have the Senate, without such legislation having been enacted by Congress, bound by the laws of the 48 States constituting this Union when it came to the question of determining the right of a Senator from any of those States to hold his seat in this body. That was the question which I propounded to the Senator from Mississippi, based upon the argument of the Senator preceding just a few moments the question which I asked.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then the Senator I imagine would say that, although, under the very Constitution under which we are acting here and following its provisions, a State should enact laws on the subject of ballots and elections, those laws would be void. Would the Senator say that he would wholly disregard that law although it was passed in accordance with the terms of the Federal Constitution?

Mr. GOFF. I do not say I would disregard that law, speaking for myself individually. Speaking generally, I would not say that the Senate could adopt a uniform rule that would always disregard such a law. I do say, however, that the Senate under the Constitution is independent of the law of any State and is not compelled to follow the law of such a State but can, in the exercise of its best judgment, follow such a law if such law be not inconsistent with the rules and practices and regulations that govern and control the Senate when it comes to the question of passing upon the rights of a man to a seat in this body.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If I understand the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff], his position is that under the provision of the Constitution which has been read, and which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] is discussing, it is conceded that the State of Iowa has passed laws, the power to do which is explicitly given by the provisions of the Constitution to the State, and that the Congress has not done so. As I understand the Senator holds the position—and that is the holding of the majority of the committee in their report—that although Iowa, acting under that provision of the Constitution, has enacted certain laws and regulations with regard to elections, the Senate can with impunity entirely disregard the State statutes and act as though Iowa had passed no law whatsoever.

Mr. STEPHENS. That seems to me to be the logical conclusion.

Mr. GOFF. I agree with everything that the Senator from Nebraska has said if he will only eliminate the word "impunity."

Mr. NORRIS. I will eliminate that word, if the Senator from West Virginia desires, and use any other word that will suit the Senator better.

Mr. GOFF. I think the Senator's statement is agreeable to the conclusion I have reached if he will eliminate the word "impunity."

Mr. NORRIS. I only desire to say, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, having great respect not only for the legal judgment of the Senator from West Virginia but for that of the committee likewise, it is yet, with my limited knowledge, impossible for me to conceive how anyone can take the position that we have a right here in this particular case to disregard the laws of Iowa as to elections as they were in force at the time the election took place. I can not understand how anyone can take that position.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi permit an interruption?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Mississippi, I desire to say that the Constitution, as has been said, reads:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.

That means, Mr. President, according to my view, that everything pertaining to an election, the qualifications of voters, how the ballot shall be printed, and every detail is by the Constitution of the United States solemnly vested in the legislatures of the States. That right continues to exist until and unless—

The Congress may . . . by law make or alter such regulations.

And there Congress is restricted so that it can not place any limitation as to the places of choosing Senators. The Senator from West Virginia has said that if Congress exercised this secondary power, which it can exercise but has not exercised, the law of Congress would be absolutely binding upon the Senate. If that is true, Congress having merely exercised a right granted to it by the Constitution, how can any man say that when the State is exercising a right conferred upon it by the Constitution, the action of the State is not just as sacred as the action of the officers of a State would be if they were acting under a law of Congress? It seems to me a contention to the contrary is untenable.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield until I can reply to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will yield for a moment only. I want to conclude as soon as possible.

Mr. GOFF. As I understand the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], he says that section 4 of the Constitution confers upon the States and their legislatures the right to prescribe the times, manner, and places of holding elections for Senators and Representatives. That is true, but it is not the intention or purpose of the Constitution in section 4 to take away from the Senate of the United States the powers conferred upon it by section 5 to be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Undoubtedly not.

Mr. GOFF. And the construction which the distinguished Senator from Missouri would place upon section 4 would eliminate and subordinate the rights of the Senate as conferred and expressly granted by section 5 of the Constitution. If the different States could pass laws which would take away from the Senate the very right which is conferred upon the Senate by section 5 of the Constitution, then we are driven to the conclusion that section 4 and section 5 of the Constitution of the United States when practically executed and put into use are each destructive of the other. It is for that reason that I dissent wholly and entirely from the conclusion which is reached by my friend the distinguished Senator from Missouri and concurred in by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. REED of Missouri. On the contrary, Mr. President, I do not exclude section 5. I apply to the construction of both sections an elemental rule of construction laid down by every authority in the law, namely, that when there are two sections of the law relating to the same subject they shall both be construed together and both be given their reasonable and natural effect. What is the natural and reasonable effect? First, the State conducts the election as it sees fit; second, when it returns a candidate to the Senate the Senate has the right under section 5 to judge as to the election and returns and qualifications of the man. Judge them how? Judge them according to the law of the State; and if the election has been held in accordance with the law which the State had the right to enact and which the State did enact, we have no right to interfere, because by so doing we destroy the right of the State.

What we can do is to find out whether the election was held in accordance with the law of the State. What we can do is to find out whether the returns were honest returns. What we can do is to find out whether the man who was sent here possesses the qualifications of a Senator. Construed in that way, we give to the State's action full force, validity, and effect; we interfere in no respect with the rights of the State reserved by the Constitution; we exercise our right as to the result; and that is to be measured by this: Does the man possess the qualifications under the Constitution of the United States? Did he receive the votes necessary to put him here? The latter question is to be decided by the action of the State when it placed its statute upon its books. So that both stand and neither are destroyed; but the Senator's construction would mean that under the right to judge of the qualifications of Members the Senate could wipe out every statute of every State, every act of every State, and nullify the will of the State arbitrarily and without reason, setting up our will instead of the will of the people of the State.

Mr. GOFF and Mr. BINGHAM addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I should like to take a little time myself.

Mr. GOFF. I understand the Senator from Mississippi to say that he does not care to yield at this time?

Mr. STEPHENS. How long will the Senator take?

Mr. GOFF. I do not know.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will be very glad to yield if the interruption will consume only a short time.

Mr. GOFF. I withdraw the request that the Senator yield, and when I discuss this question I shall reply to what my friend, the distinguished Senator from Missouri, has said relative to his construction of these provisions of the Constitution, and I trust that he will be in the Chamber at that time.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, if the Senator were addressing a question to me, I should gladly yield, but I rather object to yielding to other Senators to carry on a colloquy.

Mr. GOFF. I quite see the justice and equity of the Senator's position.

Mr. STEPHENS. I thank the Senator; I appreciate his statement.

Mr. GOFF. Too many of us have been talking in the time of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to say, following up what has been said, that it is my idea that the processes of determining a contested-election case and all questions relating to the honesty and bona fides of the election and of ascertaining who received the highest number of legal votes must of necessity forever, owing to the provisions of the Constitution, reside in the Senate. Mark you, Mr. President, I use the words "received the highest number of legal votes." There must be some law on the subject. The Senate has no power to adopt a rule, in view of the provisions of the Constitution which have been read here, that will destroy the law of a sovereign State. The rules that they adopt must be in consonance and in accord with some law; and if the Congress has not enacted a law, then the law of the State under which the election was held must be followed and becomes the law of the case.

In my reading, Mr. President, I found this language from a very distinguished man, a very noted character, a Member of the House of Representatives, and also a United States Senator and Governor of the great State of Tennessee. He said:

The elective franchise, being a political and not a natural right, wholly dependent upon the constitution and the laws of a State, it must, of course, be exercised subject to all the restrictions that the constitution and laws have thrown around it. We must, therefore, refer to the constitution and the laws of that State.

That language was uttered by Isham G. Harris in a contested-election case. That great man had the same idea that has been expressed by several Senators here this afternoon—that the House, that the Senate, either, both, in a contested-election case, there being no Federal law upon the subject, shall look to the law of the State.

But, Mr. President, there are two or three other matters that I desire to refer to, and then I must leave the question.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. BROUSSARD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I am going to occupy just a few minutes longer, and then I shall yield the floor.

If I may have the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] for a moment, on yesterday he and I engaged in a little colloquy here on the floor with reference to the stipulation regarding the subpoena for ballots. It will be recalled that there are two provisions in that stipulation with reference to the duties of the county auditors and the two personal representatives of the candidates, Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart. The first duty related to the signing of the name or signature of each one of the three parties on each envelope or container.

The Senator from Georgia, as I understood him, contended that by reason of the agreement made afterward that the personal representatives of Steck and Brookhart should not go to the various county seats; that nullified the whole provision with reference to writing the name or initials upon the envelope and container, because of the fact that it was supposed to be done by three; and the provision having been changed so that two should not be required to go, the auditor himself was not required to sign the envelope or container. Do I state that correctly or not?

Mr. GEORGE. No; not exactly, Mr. President. I simply said that the subpoena provided for joint examination by the representative of the Senate and the supervisor for Mr. Steck and the supervisor for Mr. Brookhart; and that, having provided for joint examination and joint attestation, when Steck and Brookhart failed to go and expressly waived their right, naturally, then, the only thing left for the county auditor to do was to comply with so much of the subpoena as had reference to his own act, as imposed a requirement on him.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think the Senator and I understand one another. The Senator means by that that the agreement that the representatives should not go to the county seat relieved the county auditor from the duty of signing his name or initials on the various envelopes?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no!

Mr. STEPHENS. It did not?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; it did not relieve him. It was not so interpreted by the county auditor; but he operated under this. Why should he examine the container in the presence of Steck's counsel and Brookhart's counsel? How could he do it when neither was there? Therefore there was no necessity for that, but it was necessary for him to examine it, and he was expressly required to note any evidence of tampering on it; and the auditor did it.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator will remember that we were discussing this particular phase of the matter, and I stated that I had found numerous containers and envelopes and bags, and so on, that did not bear the name or signature of the county auditor; and I understood the Senator to say that by reason of the changed requirement that the representatives of the parties should go he was relieved from signing his name upon the container except in regard to making a notation where envelopes were unsealed.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all he was required to do under the subpoena unless Senator Brookhart's and Mr. Steck's representatives were present and joined with him.

Mr. STEPHENS. Why was he not relieved from the duty of signing his name on these envelopes that were properly sealed?

Mr. GEORGE. He was not required to sign his name on any of those envelopes.

Mr. STEPHENS. He was not?

Mr. GEORGE. No; under no circumstances.

Mr. STEPHENS. Not under the stipulation?

Mr. GEORGE. If those envelopes were the ones that came in the bags—

Mr. STEPHENS. They were; yes.

Mr. GEORGE. He could not get to those unless he had himself broken into the bags.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then on the bag—

Mr. GEORGE. He was to sign there should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any of the original packages.

Mr. STEPHENS. There were two requirements with reference to signing, one for the purpose of identification—

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

Mr. STEPHENS. One for the purpose of showing any defects.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to say right now that I think the whole of the Senator's argument is utterly immaterial, absolutely, and that shall be my position before the Senate.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right.

Mr. GEORGE. But the Senator on yesterday was saying that there had not been any compliance with the subpoena.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. And he was contending that the extent of the waiver was simply to bring the ballots down here subject to all legal objections that might be raised to them. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the provision of the subpoena which he read provides for a joint inspection by Steck, Brookhart, and the county auditor, and a joint notation on the ballot, and that when Steck and Brookhart failed to join in that joint inspection it necessarily relieved the auditor of any duty in that regard, because his duty as an individual was prescribed in the very next sentence, which the Senator had not read at the time I directed his attention to the subpoena. That is all. But I want to say now—

Mr. STEPHENS. Why was he relieved, may I ask the Senator? Was it because these parties were not required to go there to sign?

Mr. GEORGE. Senator, when a man is required to engage in a joint enterprise with three others, and two of them expressly refuse to enter that joint enterprise, and waive their right to do so, necessarily he is relieved from acting jointly with them. But the auditor was required to go on and do what the Senate required him to do—that is, to send here, with the proper notation, any bag that showed there had been any tampering or opening.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me put this to the Senator. Suppose the subpoena had required that the auditor and both the personal representatives of these parties make notations with reference to defects, tampering, and so on—

Mr. GEORGE. But it did not require that.

Mr. STEPHENS. But suppose it had required that?

Mr. GEORGE. Why suppose a case that is not here? That is the one great trouble about this contest.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right, if that is the Senator's answer.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is supposing a case that is not here. I do not care to speculate about a case that is not here at all.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will tell the Senator in all sincerity that that case is here.

Mr. GEORGE. What case is here?

Mr. STEPHENS. A case similar to the one I have just inquired about.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me read this subpoena, then.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right.

Mr. GEORGE. On page 57 the subpoena appears, and I read from the subpoena as follows:

That immediately prior to the transmission of the said books, papers, and documents the envelopes and containers thereof shall be examined by the county auditor in the presence of a representative of each of the contesting parties, who shall be designated for that duty by the respective counsel for the said parties, and the said examiners and county auditor shall sign their names on each and every envelope or container, which shall be sealed in such manner that they may not be tampered with or opened except by authority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate without evidence of such tampering or opening appearing thereon.

That was a provision for the examination of the ballots out in Iowa, before they left the county auditor, in the interest of these two contesting parties, and for the purpose of enabling them to know whether the ballots left Iowa in sealed packages, and apparently without evidence of tampering or fraud. When Messrs. Steck and Brookhart waived that, for reasons undoubtedly good to themselves, for reasons undoubtedly that were sufficient to both of them, then the county auditor did have a duty to perform, but his individual duty, which he could not evade under any circumstances, is found in the next sentence of the same paragraph:

Should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any original package prior to the said examination by said county auditor and examiners, notation of the character thereof shall be made upon the envelope or container by the said county auditor.

I tried to make it plain to the Senator on yesterday—I do not think the Senator understood what I said—that the subpoena of the Senate, subpoena containing this stipulation, was served on each one of the county auditors. Along with it was sent a statement, to be returned by that county auditor to the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, that when the subpoena was served on each county auditor in the State of Iowa each county auditor did in fact acknowledge the receipt of the subpoena, did in fact sign a statement which was prepared by the Senate itself, which statement disclosed the number of packages of ballots he was sending here, from what precinct and from what counties those ballots were taken up; and that receipt or statement also disclosed the number of the mail sack in which the ballot was deposited and also disclosed the number of the discs of the rotary lock which safeguarded these ballots against any and all possible tampering.

If the Senator will examine the subpoenas served upon the county auditors, and the returns made in their responses to those subpoenas, which are a part of the Senate files in the office of the Sergeant at Arms, he will find, I think, everything he needs to find in this case. Those records are not entered in the stenographic report for this reason, that this contest did not begin last December. This contest was actually begun in July, 1925.

A part of the subcommittee was actually here in Washington for varying lengths of time during the greater part, or practically all, I may say, of two months. We could not keep a stenographer running around with every tabulator and with every member of the committee who might be present, especially in view of the fact that we had appointed, for the very purpose of doing away with the necessity of so many formal hearings, the political manager of Senator Brookhart to be present at all times to see that everything was done regularly, and had appointed a man selected by Mr. Steck to be present at every stage of the proceedings to see that everything was done regularly.

While I am on that point, let me say this to the Senator, that I do not think there was any question but that the subpoena of the Senate was complied with; but I think it wholly immaterial, because one fact is undisputed in this case; that is, that on the 20th of July, when the members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate came here to begin this contest, Mr. Brookhart's brother was present; Mr. Brookhart's counsel of record was present, Mr. Mitchell; Mr. Brookhart's political manager, Mr. Cook, was present, and he had been appointed by the committee on the nomination of Senator Brookhart. Every one of them knew how the ballots had been brought down here, and every one of them knew whether or not the names of the county auditors appeared upon those sacks, how many times they appeared, and how many times they did not appear; and they then, with full knowledge, elected to count those ballots.

I do not care anything about waivers, I do not care anything about stipulations. If an American Senate will not hold any contestant bound by that sort of conduct, then it really becomes immaterial whatever else may follow in the case. No man can go with me a mile, and then raise the question that he did not go. Those are the facts. Why worry about the subpoena? Those are the facts in the record in this case.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right. Now, Mr. President, I referred to this matter because it has been stated here, as I remarked yesterday, that there was a breach of the stipulation. I am going to discuss that just for a moment.

The stipulation, whatever it might have been, was a poor stipulation. I have no personal knowledge of that, of course, but the Senator states that the stipulations of the subpoena were complied with. I insist that they were not. I insist that the action of the Sergeant at Arms—unintentionally, of course—and of Colonel Thayer, the chief supervisor, absolutely nullified any effect that any stipulation might have had, any force that might have resided in it, by virtue of the character of the subpoenas issued, and by virtue of the instructions sent out to these auditors.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to be advised as to the time when objection was first made to counting these ballots by reason of any default in the certification of the ballots.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will answer that in just a few moments. I want to get this off my mind, and then I will get to the other.

This subpoena does not follow the stipulation. I think with regard to the first duty imposed upon the county auditor—that is, of signing his name on the containers—it follows the language of the stipulation, that the examiners themselves should sign their names or initials on each and every envelope or container. The stipulation provides further:

Should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any original package prior to the said examination by said county auditor and examiners, notation of the character thereof shall be made upon the envelope or container by the said county auditor and examiners, or either of them.

The subpoena that was issued does not follow that language. It reads as follows:

Should there appear any evidence of opening or tampering with any original package prior to said examination by yourself and said examiners, notification of the character thereof shall be made on the envelope or container.

There is a marked difference in the language. We follow that up by this letter, which went to each auditor, giving the auditors specific instructions. Why was this letter sent by the chief supervisor?

He said:

In answer to many inquiries received from county auditors concerning instructions contained in subpoena from Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate in the Steck-Brookhart senatorial contest, will say:

First, the Sergeant at Arms is merely the sheriff in the Senate, etc.

Now, mark you:

Second, the attorneys for both sides have waived instructions requiring a witness from each side to be present when the ballots are placed in the mail sacks and sealed.

Now, he tells the auditors what their duty is:

The auditor for each county will seal all envelopes containing the ballots and place them in the mail sacks, lock the same, then deliver them to the postmaster. Thereupon the responsibility of the auditor ceases.

There is not a line here that they shall note anything upon the packages, no matter how defective they were. It was said that there were two packages that had notations upon them, but there were 40 or 50 that were tied up one way or another. What was said to the auditors was not to note anything there, not a word said about making a notation, but they were told to seal the packages. How many packages were opened in the 99 counties in the State of Iowa nobody knows. If the auditors obeyed instructions of the chief supervisor, they simply sealed the packages and put them in the mail box and sent them here. They were told that all they must do was to seal and mail. They were not required under these instructions to make any notations whatever and that doubtless accounts for the fact that there were 40 or 50 that we know of. How many more there were we can not say, of course, that were not sent here in the manner required by law. They had not been preserved in the manner required by law.

Let me call attention to the fact that there were many cases where large discrepancies occurred. I recall one of those cases. It came here without any notation and yet Brookhart lost 80 votes at that precinct. I call attention to another that came here without any notation upon it and that was the Estherville precinct. What did we find there? We found that upon the work sheet under the head of "Remarks" the chief supervisor stated that there were 20 less ballots found than the number of names on the poll books. Mark you, those ballots were required to be all kept together, kept sealed, and yet later on a package of 34 ballots came from this identical precinct. Does not that show conclusively that so far as that precinct was concerned the law had not been complied with? Let me call attention further that in that very identical precinct where there were 20 missing ballots, they were produced later because they were written for. It had been discovered that they were missing and some were sent in. But on the ballots that were sent here on the recount that showed there were 20 missing and Senator Brookhart was short just exactly 20 ballots, the number given him by the judges of the election.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator made the point which I understood to go to the certification of all the ballots.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is correct.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It was that which I had in mind and to which I referred in my previous question. I should like to know when the objections were made to the form of certification, which objections have just been discussed by the Senator.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to call attention to two or three other precincts, and then I am coming to the matter the Senator has in mind.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not concerned with the matters the Senator is now discussing about failing to find certain ballots. I am referring to the general question of certification to the questions which relate to certification of all the ballots. When was that objection first raised?

Mr. STEPHENS. I expect to discuss that later. I simply wanted to state, in a connected manner, what I have in mind. However, if the Senator prefers to have me answer his question now, I shall be very glad to do it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Under my own mental processes I wanted to dispose of one thing at a time and find out when the objection was first raised to the failure to make the certificate on all of these packages.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will endeavor to answer the Senator now. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] read twice, I think, from page 63 of the hearings where it was suggested by Mr. Mitchell, representing Brookhart, that there might be a question of discrepancy between ballots and poll books. I am very frank to say to the Senator that there was no objection when the ballots and containers were brought here. There were no objections until long after.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the Senator know from the record when objection was made?

Mr. STEPHENS. It was the 2d day of December, 1925, according to the record. Mark you, the case was not closed. I know it has been stated several times and was stated in the brief by one of the attorneys for Mr. Steck and has been stated really in the record several times, as the Senator will find if he will look through it, that no objection was ever made until after the case was closed. Sometimes it is said that no objection was made until after the argument was presented. As I recall, the Senator from Arkansas said day before yesterday that this objection was never made until after Mr. Mitchell went back to the State of Iowa, and so on.

I am referring to the record, as I said, of December 2, as is shown at page 63 of the hearings, where it will be seen that it was suggested at that very time that there were discrepancies. Senator CARAWAY laid great stress on the fact that Mr. Mitchell said there might be only two or three hundred ballots involved. Mitchell did say that, but Mitchell never knew and nobody knew at that time how many might be involved. Mr. Parsons, representing Steck, said there would be only a very few such, and so on. Mr. Parsons attempted to explain it by saying that it is probably because of the absence of a voter's law, and things of that kind.

But what are the facts? I want to say to the Senator that this objection was made long before the tabulation prepared by the auditors was ever filed. I know that in the latter days of January in a controversy between Senator Brookhart and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. EANS], the Senator from Kentucky contended that the tabulation was there two or three weeks before. Senator Brookhart said it was only a memorandum that Mr. Turner, the tabulator, had. If we go back to Turner's testimony, we find that he said that he did not have a tabulation, that he simply had a memorandum, and on one of the days, the 26th, 27th, or 28th of January, in the hearings, when Senator Brookhart was there personally, it was admitted even at that late date that the tabulation had not been filed and the figures were not complete. It will be found in the record that Senator Brookhart himself, even as late as the 28th of January, thought only 4 or 5 precincts were involved; in fact, he had a little argument there contending that there were only 4 or 5 precincts involved where there was a variance between the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll lists. The record had not been made up. Mr. Mitchell called attention to the matter. He made specific objection to certain precincts, 6 or 7 in one instance and 4 or 5 or 6 in another, but he did not have full knowledge, and the knowledge never came until a month or more after Mitchell had made his objection.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understood the Senator to state just a little while ago in the course of his remarks that long before then objection had been made, and yet the latter remark rather seems to indicate something different.

Mr. STEPHENS. Not long before objection was made.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I mean long before the time the Senator was talking about that objection had been made.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; a small number, two or three hundred.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am afraid I have been unable to express myself well. What I wanted to know was when the objection was made to the form of the certification of these ballots first made, if it was ever made.

Mr. STEPHENS. There never was any certification.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. When was objection made to the absence of certification?

Mr. STEPHENS. It was made in December and in January.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Was it made of record?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish the Senator would tell me where I can find it in the record.

Mr. STEPHENS. All right. I think I can find it for the Senator. I have so many books and papers here it is rather hard for me to do so.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. The ballots were counted on July 20, 1925, and during all of the remainder of that month and practically all, if not all, of August, 1925. There was then no question raised, if any has been raised to this hour, concerning any certification of ballots or any question as to whether the ballots had been in proper custody or whether they had been properly preserved. Even the objection upon which the Senator relies was not made until some six or eight months after the ballots had actually been recounted under the supervision of Mr. Brookhart himself.

Mr. STEPHENS. I said that there was no objection made until long after the ballots were brought here.

Mr. GEORGE. And after they were recounted, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. STEPHENS. After the committee counted them?

Mr. GEORGE. After the ballots had been counted and the contested ballots alone were set aside.

Mr. STEPHENS. Had the committee counted the ballots?

Mr. GEORGE. The committee had counted all the ballots or had approved the agreements made.

Mr. STEPHENS. That does not answer the question.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; we had counted them.

Mr. STEPHENS. All of them?

Mr. GEORGE. All of them.

Mr. STEPHENS. All of the 8,000 or 9,000 contested ballots?

Mr. GEORGE. I said except the contested ballots.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. We did that in June and July, 1925.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; I agree to that. I have not denied that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The question of certification could not have been limited to contested ballots, could it?

Mr. STEPHENS. No.

Mr. GEORGE. It had to be made as to all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to have my attention directed, if anyone can do so, to the time and place when objection was made to the absence of certification, which the Senator from Mississippi has been contending is so essential.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will read it to the Senator right now. It falls under the date of January 6, 1926.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator please read the form which the objection took?

Mr. STEPHENS. Very well. I will go back just a little.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I be permitted to make a statement, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we will be very glad to hear from you.

Senator GEORGE. Before we begin, Mr. Mitchell, may I ask, did the supervisors and the clerks tabulate the returns—tabulate their work?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Senator GEORGE. Is that available here?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what I understood was to be the basis of this hearing this morning; that the tabulation prepared by Mr. Turner as official tabulator was to be introduced.

Mr. PARSONS. I will introduce it.

Mr. MITCHELL. If we can arrive at that point I think we will clarify the whole situation.

Now, in order to answer one question, I will say this, that we are going to object to the recount as a whole for this reason, that the burden, as we understand it, is imposed upon the contestant to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the committee, or in the case of a contest, to the court, that there has been no reasonable opportunity for tampering with the ballots. We will object to the recount particularly so far as it affects the paper ballots for the same reason, that there has been no attempt to show that these ballots, after they were sent in by the officials charged with their counting, had not been tampered with, or there was no opportunity to tamper with them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. Under the law of Iowa it is provided that before the ballots may be introduced in evidence for the purpose of overturning the official count it must be shown that the ballots were not tampered with and that there was no opportunity to tamper with them.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the law of Iowa. Now, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. Was there ever any waiver upon the part of Senator Brookhart, either expressed or implied, of those provisions of the law?

Mr. STEPHENS. None that I have ever heard of. I am going to say this—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. Let me first answer the question of the junior Senator from Montana, and then I will yield to the senior Senator from Montana. From time to time during the hearings this matter was discussed. The question of stipulations and waivers was never mentioned until some time in February, so far as I can now recall, and it was mentioned then in the brief of the counsel in the case for Mr. Steck. It was frequently stated, "You ought to have objected earlier," and so on, but the question of the stipulation did not enter into that at all. Now I yield to the senior Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I was going to say that I see the report of the majority and the argument of counsel for the contestant are to the effect that when it is shown that the ballots came from the proper custody the burden of proof shifts.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir; it is true that the majority makes that contention.

Mr. WALSH. So that it is not necessary for the contestant to submit affirmative proof that the ballots were not tampered with.

Mr. STEPHENS. Not simply that the ballots come from a certain source; that is not at all sufficient; that is not the law, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH. I got that impression from the authorities in the State of Iowa cited in the report and brief.

Mr. STEPHENS. To what page does the Senator from Montana have reference?

Mr. WALSH. Take page 8 of the majority report, for instance, which cites a case reported in Sixty-fourth Northwestern, as follows:

At the trial in the district court the contestant put in evidence ballots as returned to the auditor from the different voting precincts, under rulings of the court, and the ballots so counted gave to the contestant a majority over the incumbent of 18 votes, which the court held to be a prima facie case contestant. The incumbent then put witnesses on the stand who, against objections, were permitted to testify that certain of such ballots shown them were not as they were voted or counted by the judges of election. Contestants insisted that it was error to admit the testimony, for the reason that no such issue was made by the pleading. We think that there was no error in the ruling of the district court in this respect. The issues were such that contestant assumed the burden of showing that he had received a greater number of votes than the incumbent, and to do that he put in evidence the ballots now in question, with others, which gave him a majority. The ballots thus in evidence were valuable, as such, because of their identity as those cast at the election. The proof that they came through the channels and from the custodian provided by law for their preservation and keeping gave to them such a prima facie character. It was then the right of the incumbent to discredit this evidence.

So, apparently, if that is the rule, all they are required to show—

Mr. WHEELER. What was that citation?

Mr. WALSH. The case cited is that of Ferguson v. Henry.

Mr. WHEELER. Where is it reported?

Mr. WALSH. It is reported in Sixty-fourth Northwestern.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am familiar with that case, and I had it here, but some one seems to have removed it. My recollection is that it will be found that the writer of the brief stopped one sentence too soon.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator pardon me for just a moment?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I will call the Senator's attention to One hundred and thirteenth Iowa, One hundred and nineteenth Iowa, One hundred and fourth Iowa, and One hundred and thirty-fifth Iowa. Each and every one of those cases repudiates the rule laid down in the portion of the decision which has been read.

Mr. WALSH. That clears it, then.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir. I have one of the cases right here, if the Senator will let me read from it:

It must affirmatively appear that they—

Referring, of course, to the ballots—

It must affirmatively appear that they have been preserved with that jealous care which precludes the opportunity of being tampered with and the suspicion of change, obstruction, or substitution.

That is from the case of Davenport v. Oelrich, One hundred and fourth Iowa, page 194. There are numerous other cases to the same effect. For instance, in Twentieth Corpus Juris it is said:

In order that the ballots may prevail over the returns or certificate of election, it must first be shown that they are the identical ones cast and that they have been preserved in the manner required by law.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. If the Senator from Arizona will pardon me for a moment, I am going to read from a case reported in Fiftieth Arkansas, which quotes McCrary on Elections.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will yield to me for just a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not interrogate the Senator from Mississippi regarding the point which he is now going to discuss.

Mr. STEPHENS. But the Senator from Montana did ask me a question in regard to it, and I can not answer both questions at once, of course.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that; and, if I may be permitted, I would still like to get an answer to the question which I originally propounded.

Mr. STEPHENS. Very well, sir.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Mississippi read the objection which was made, as I take it, sometime in January of this year.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir; that is true.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The objection which he read was a general objection that it had not been shown that the ballots came from the proper custody.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That did not answer my question. The Senator from Mississippi was discussing the question very forcefully, as I thought, that the ballots were not certified in accordance with the original stipulation or the subpoena. Now, my simple question was, When was the objection raised to the form of the certification or the absence of certification? What the Senator read a while ago, it seems to me, does not bear upon that question at all. What he did read was that that objection was made because the burden of proof had not been sustained, because it had not appeared that the ballots came from the proper custody and came free of any suspicion; in other words, the general rule of law had not been complied with. It did not relate at all to the question of certification.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is very true, but the Senator has not heard all the discussion, perhaps, and it had been argued that under this stipulation there was a waiver of all proof with reference to the care and custody of the ballots. I had contended, first, that the stipulation did not go to that extent; it did not have that effect. In fact, there was never any certification as is required in such cases.

On page 321 of the hearings Senator CARAWAY said when the question of the identification of the ballots was being discussed by Senator Brookhart:

If your contention is true that upon the contestant rests the burden of showing there had been no opportunity to tamper with the ballots, then there is not any contest here, because there is not a line of proof of that.

I contended further that even if there was an endeavor to waive, to accept, as it was expressed here about the middle of February in the language of the attorney for Mr. Steck, the auditor, as the arbiter to pass on all those matters, the stipulation was not complied with.

Of course there was nothing said here, so far as I know or can recall at present, in which the word "certification" was used expressly; but there was a general objection to the recount on the ground that the contestant had not sustained the burden of proof.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And that was in January of this year?

Mr. STEPHENS. That was in January of this year, before the case was closed. In fact, there was a witness on the stand, as I recall, at that time. There was testimony afterwards.

I want to say this in that connection: The Senator from Georgia realized the force and importance of this matter. The attorneys did not realize the extent of this shortage. They did not realize the condition that the numerous bags of ballots were in when they came here. They did not know what little care had been exercised in many cases in regard to these matters. How could they know about the shortages, especially until the committee had actually canvassed the vote?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the Senator right there, with his permission.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Disassociating for the present the question of the shortages in the ballots, and directing our attention exclusively to the want of preliminary proof that the ballots were in the same containers and in the same condition as when they arrived in the office of the county auditor, if this cause were being tried before a court out in the State of Iowa, and the contestant called the auditor with the ballots from the various precincts in his county, and the containers were opened and the ballots were counted without any question whatever as to the proof of their custody and keeping and that kind of thing. It would be too late after the ballots were counted to insist, would it not, that they had not come from the proper custody, or that the preliminary proof of their proper custody had not been offered?

Mr. STEPHENS. No, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Would it be quite fair to allow an officer who has the certificate to, as we might say, gamble on the result? He would take a chance on the count showing a result more satisfactory for him than the official returns; so he withholds his objection and allows the votes to be counted, and the result is disappointing to him, and then he says:

I object to this count because the preliminary proof of the care and custody of the ballots has not been made.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have seen this occur more than once in a court room: A defendant might sit very quietly by and, after the whole proof was in, might offer a proper objection and the cause be dismissed because the plaintiff had failed to make some proof that was essential in order to sustain him.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but, of course, that is simply a question going to the sufficiency of the evidence.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the point. It seems to me that this is a preliminary question, the same as an objection that could be made to the effect that the best evidence has not been offered; or, if the Senator will pardon me, a note is introduced in evidence but complete proof of handwriting has not been made, but no objection was offered to the introduction of the note in evidence and it was received. It occurs to me that that objection stands upon an entirely different footing from the objection that there is a shortage in the ballots, because, of course, neither party could know anything about that until after the ballots were counted; and so it seems to me that an objection upon that ground—namely, that the official vote should be taken and not the recount of the ballots—stands upon an entirely different footing. But the objection as to the preliminary proof necessary to make the ballots appropriate evidence must be made in the nature of a preliminary objection, and in that view I desire to ask the Senator now this question:

In the report of the minority it is stated that there were 67 packages received unsealed. There is no reference to any portion of the hearings sustaining that statement.

Mr. STEPHENS. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. WALSH. Page 26:

Sixty-seven bags of ballots came to Washington unsealed.

There is no reference at all to the hearings. The majority insist that there were only two bags that were unsealed, and there is no reference at all to the hearings, but reference is made there to the affidavit of Mr. P. W. Turner. That is found at page 8:

According to these certificates only two packages were transmitted or received by them in unsealed packages. These refer to two precincts. (See affidavits of Turner and Thayer.)

In the one case reference is made to some affidavits allunde the hearings, and in the other case there is no reference at all. Where can we find the evidence on that point?

Mr. STEPHENS. On pages 224 and 225.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator kindly read it?

Mr. STEPHENS. It covers almost two pages. It is a table. I will say, though, by way of explanation—perhaps that will be shorter—that there were 67 bags of ballots coming from various precincts.

Twenty-seven of them came from one county. Those bags are generally referred to as unsealed bags. However, the parties making this recount had what they called a work sheet, and on that work sheet they would note whether the bag was sealed or unsealed, or what its condition was; they would note the number of ballots and different things pertaining to the matter. Several were simply put down as "unsealed." Now, mark you, the law requires that these ballots shall be strung on a wire and the ends twisted together, and they shall be sealed, and then, under the stipulation here, and so on, all these bags were to be sealed, and under the law every container was to be sealed and put in the regular container, a bag, or something of the kind.

I find here:

Paper-covered bag, unsealed; part sealed, part tied together.

That of itself shows that they were not kept in compliance with law. Then:

Tied bag, unsealed; roll bound with cord; tied bundle; not in sealed bag; wrapped and tied; unsealed, wrapped bundle—

And so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Now let me inquire of the Senator further.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I understand, now, the reference to the record to which the Senator refers to support that statement; but what difference does it make in the result? We now have 67 precincts in which there is some evidence that the packages were unsealed. I suppose probably either one or the other side claims that with respect to those precincts we should not take the recount, but we should take the official returns.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir; that is very true.

Mr. WALSH. What difference does it make in the result if we take the official returns in those 67 precincts?

Mr. STEPHENS. My recollection is that it is 149.

Mr. WALSH. But we have no schedule here to tell us.

Mr. STEPHENS. I understand; but the Senator will find it in the record.

Mr. WALSH. But where will I find it?

Mr. STEPHENS. I can not recall just at this moment. Did the Senator have any further questions?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to call attention to some law on the subject of identity of the ballots.

In order that the ballots may prevail over the returns or certificate of election, it must first be shown that they are the identical ones cast, and that they have been preserved in the manner required by law. (20 Corpus Juris, numerous cases.)

It must affirmatively appear that they have been preserved with that jealous care which precludes the opportunity of being tampered with and the suspicion of change, obstruction, or substitution. (Davenport v. Olerich, 104 Iowa 194.)

The fact that some of the ballots have been tampered with impeaches the integrity of all in that box on the recount.

The presumption that all men know the law applies to election cases.

The presumption is in favor of the canvass.

That elective officers performed their duty honestly and faithfully.

It is a primary rule of election that the ballots constitute the best evidence of the intentions of the voters. (20 Corpus Juris, 244.)

Official returns are quasi records and stand until overcome by affirmative evidence against their integrity. (Powell v. Holman, 50 Ark. 85.)

On the intention of the voter it has been held that where there is no ambiguity on the face of the ballot actually cast extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to show anything about it. Such intention must be determined by the ballot. This is the law in Connecticut, Michigan, and many other States.

In One hundred and seventy-seventh Iowa, page 68, it is said:

The ballots necessarily are the only evidence of what was intended.

In Ninety-second Wisconsin, page 607, it is said:

A ballot which is unambiguous can not be varied by final proof.

A ballot is to be construed as any other writing; and while a resort to parol evidence of extrinsic circumstances may be had for the purpose of interpreting what would otherwise be doubtful, it can not be shown by such or any evidence that the intention of the voter was anything different from what plainly appears upon the face of the ballot. (People v. Seaman, 5 Denio, 409.) And when the ballot intelligently shows that a particular person is voted for to fill a particular office, it can not be counted differently because the court may believe that the voter made a mistake in preparing his ticket. Voting for a person to fill an office for which he is not a candidate may be the result of a mistake, or it may be merely the frivolous exercise of the right of suffrage; but no matter whether such action be attributed to folly or mistake, the ballot is the only expression of the voter's will, and it must be counted according to its legal effect. (Rutledge v. Crawford, 91 Calif. Rept. 531-532.)

In this matter the majority seeks to override the law of the State. The 1,344 votes under the law should be counted for Brookhart, but the committee seek to place its own construction upon the ballot, to say what the intention of the voter was. No voter has appeared to say that a certain ballot is his, and that, although under a legal construction he voted for Brookhart, he did not intend to do so.

It having been shown that many Republicans in Iowa do not like Brookhart, the committee says that these particular persons voted the 1,344.

This means to enter the broad field of speculation and to ignore the law. It is the substitution of a figment of the imagination for legal fact, a supposition for a reality.

I can not agree to this. The right of a State to give its laws full faith and full effect is too sacred to be disregarded in such a manner.

Being a Democrat, if I had voted in Iowa, I should have voted for the nominee of my party. I have always done so. It would give me pleasure to see the Democratic membership of the Senate increased. But I can not violate the law, the constitution, and my conscience to vote to seat Mr. Steck.

The right of a State to have its election laws recognized and enforced is too important to be thrown away merely for temporary party advantage. So I shall not surrender the right of the State in this matter to have another Democrat come into this body.

I want to call attention to the cases cited in the majority report. Not one of them, in my judgment, supports the view of the majority.

First case—Ferguson v. Henry, 64 N. W. 292 (Iowa)

Immediately following the last sentence in the citation in the majority report from this case, there is this sentence:

We do not think that proof that the proper officers have done the things prescribed in the law for the preservation of the ballots in the condition in which they were canvassed is more than a prima facie showing.

By the use of the language "proof that the proper officers have done the things prescribed in the law for the preservation of the ballots in the condition in which they were canvassed," it readily appears that there must have been more evidence in the case than the mere fact that the ballots came from the hands of the county auditor, who was charged with the preservation of the ballots.

In the case of Davenport v. Oelrich (104 Iowa 194), which is a later case than Ferguson v. Henry, the court says:

The ballots, when properly authenticated, afford the very best evidence of who has been chosen by the electors to perform the duties of an office. But before these may be received or considered, it must affirmatively appear that they have been preserved with that jealous care which precludes the opportunity of being tampered with, and the suspicion of change, abstraction, or substitution. McCrary, in his work on elections (p. 209), says: "Before the ballots should be allowed in evidence to overturn the official count and return, it should appear affirmatively that they have been safely kept by the proper custodian of the law; that they have not been exposed to the public, or handled by unauthorized persons; and that no opportunity has been given for tampering with them." The same rule is laid down in Cooley, Constitutional Limitations, 625. * * * After the election it is known how many ballots must be interfered with in order to affect the result, and, before any are received against the finding of the newly authorized board of canvassers, their genuineness should be fully established. As said by Church, C. J., in People v. Livingston, supra: "The returns may be impeached for fraud or mistake, but in attempting to remedy one evil we should be cautious not to open the door to another, and far greater, evil. After the election it is known just how many votes are necessary to change the result. The ballots themselves can not be identified; they have no earmarks. * * * Every consideration of public policy, as well as the ordinary rules of evidence, require that the party offering this evidence should establish the fact that the ballots are genuine. * * * If the boxes have been rigorously preserved, the ballots are the best and highest evidence, but if not, they are not only the weakest but the most dangerous evidence."

The rule is recognized, rather than abrogated, in Ferguson v. Henry (95 Iowa 439). * * * It will thus be observed that the strictest vigilance in the care and preservation of the ballots is enjoined by the legislature, and the possibility of any interference with them carefully guarded against. Security of the ballot after being cast is quite as important as freedom in casting it, if the result as finally announced shall represent the actual choice of the electors. To this end we hold, in harmony with the authorities cited and the evident purpose of the legislature, that the onus is on him who would discredit the official count, before resorting to the ballots as the best evidence of who has been elected, to show that these have been preserved with that care which precludes the suspicion of having been tampered with, and the opportunity of alteration or change.

I now direct attention to the case of DeLong v. Brown (113 Iowa 372). It says:

The statute requires the auditor to carefully preserve the ballots received from the judges of election for six months. (Sec. 1142, Code.) The particular manner or place is not pointed out. If carefully done, this precludes any reasonable well-founded suspicion that they may have been changed or tampered with, and in such event they form the best evidence of who has been elected. With their integrity thus fully established, they are silent witnesses which can neither err nor lie. And it is generally held, where the manner or mode of preservation has been enjoined by statute, a substantial compliance therewith must be shown preliminary to the introduction of ballots in evidence. (Davenport v. Oelrich, 104 Iowa 194, and cited cases; Mentzer v. Davis, 109 Iowa 528; Hudson v. Solomon, 19 Kans. 177; Sone v. Williams, 130 Mo. Sup. 530). See decisions collected in 10 American & English Enc. Law (732, 830); also in briefs to Tebbe v. Smith (108 Calif. 101). The rule seems to prevail in Texas that if the ballots come from their lawful custodian in obedience to an appropriate writ, and are produced in court apparently intact, they are prima facie admissible. (Hunnell v. State, 75 Tex. 233 (12 S. W. Rep. 106); Gray v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 521 (94 S. W. Rep. 699).)

While these circumstances, and also the presumption obtaining that an officer has performed his duty, should be given weight, we do not think they alone afford sufficient assurance of the identity and genuineness of the ballots. The official count as finally declared with respect to county officers is the ultimate conclusion of many officers presumed to have faithfully performed their respective duties, and concerning the correctness of which a very strong presumption obtains * * * so strong that it ought not to be overcome by evidence, peculiarly susceptible of change, unless proven, not merely presumed, to have been properly preserved. This preliminary proof, unless waived, is essential to the competency of the ballot as evidenced for any purpose as against the official count, and certainly no averment in the pleading is required as a basis for an objection to such incompetency.

I want to call particular attention to the language that immediately follows the language just quoted:

In Ferguson v. Henry (95 Iowa, 439) it was merely held that, although the ballots had been received in evidence, the incumbent might show them not to be the same as voted, or counted by the judges of election. What was said of the ballots coming through regular channels was by way of argument. The character of preliminary proof required was neither involved nor decided.

This shows conclusively that the case cited by the majority does not support its contention with reference to the character of proof required to make the ballots admissible as evidence.

Second case—Murphy v. Lentz, 131 Iowa 328

In the citation from this case, as printed in both the brief of counsel for contestant and the majority report, next to the last sentence reads as follows:

At any rate the inference to be drawn from the fact that it, referring to an unsealed envelope, was not in the condition exacted by statute was overcome by this evidence of their court.

The last word of the sentence, as it appears in the decision, is "care" and not "court." This, of itself, shows beyond doubt that evidence of the care exercised by the custodian of the ballots was introduced, and that there was other evidence than the mere fact that the ballots came from the hands of the auditor.

Third case—Ogg v. Glover, 83 Pac. 1030 (Kans.)

This citation in the brief of counsel for contestant and in the majority report throws no light upon the matter now being considered.

In the Ogg case the ballots had been introduced in evidence in the trial court. When the case was appealed the ballots were sent to the court for inspection. After the ballots had been introduced in evidence, an attorney had them in his possession for a time. This was complained of.

Note this language of the court:

The defendant claims that these ballots, from having been for a considerable interval in the hands of persons having an interest in the litigation, have lost their character as evidence and should be ignored. The argument is made that the legislature has been at great pains to prevent the possibility of any tampering with the returns of an election, especially by providing that the ballots shall be opened only in the event of a contest, and then in open court or in an open session of the body trying the contest, and in the presence of the officer in whose custody they are (Laws 1903, ch. 228, sec. 4); that these precautions are rendered wholly unavailing if, after the ballots are opened, they may be placed on file in a public office unsealed, and there handled by interested persons without official supervision. The fallacy of this reasoning is apparent. It is obvious that until the ballots are opened, examined, and counted it is imperative that the greatest care possible be taken to guard against any opportunity for changing them. But when they have been once subjected to a critical inspection, and especially when they have become a part of the records of a court, there is ordinarily no longer the same reason for extreme precaution in that regard, for, their contents having become known with certainty, there is less room for the suspicion of any subsequent alteration, and their very character as part of the court files is a protection. In the present case if it had seemed to the commissioner to be desirable, or if either party had requested it, the particular ballots in controversy might properly have been revealed until such time as this court should reopen them. But since that was not done and the ballots were treated like any other documents on file with the clerk, there was no impropriety whatever in the conduct of the plaintiff's attorneys already related.

Fourth case—Moss v. Hunt, 40 Okla. 20

Even a cursory reading of the citation, appearing in the brief of counsel for Steck and in the majority report, shows that it has no bearing on the question involved here. In that case it was alleged that the judges of the election had failed to perform some duty.

But the court announced the law with reference to the admission of ballots in evidence and the weight to be given them. I quote from pages 27 and 28:

Mr. Justice Brewer, in Hudson v. Solomon (19 Kan. 177), laid down two cardinal rules governing elections and election contests in the following language:

"(1) As between the ballots cast at an election and a canvass of these ballots by the election officers, the former are the primary, the controlling evidence.

"(2) In order to continue the ballots controlling as evidence, it must appear that they have been preserved in the manner and by the officers prescribed in the statute, and that while in such custody they have not been so exposed to the reach of unauthorized persons as to afford a reasonable probability of their having been changed or tampered with."

Fifth case—Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 101

This is the same case that is referred to in the brief of counsel for Steck and the majority report as Tebbe v. Smith (29 L. R. A. 675). In fact, the two citations are but a repetition of the same language, one being a little fuller than the other. For that reason both citations will be considered together at this time.

The first citation is on the shifting of the burden of proof. In the citation the very first sentence reads:

When a substantial compliance with the statute in respect to the preservation of ballots has been shown, the burden of proof shifts to the contestee to establish that, notwithstanding such compliance, the ballots had in fact been tampered with.

It should be noted that in this very sentence the question of evidence with reference to the preservation of the ballots in order to make them admissible as evidence is touched upon twice. I call attention to the language:

When a substantial compliance with the statute in respect to the preservation of ballots has been shown—notwithstanding such compliance.

Section 851, Code of Iowa, 1924, requires that the county auditor "shall carefully preserve" the ballots.

The opinion of the court contains this language:

While the ballots are the best evidence of the manner in which the electors have voted, being silent witnesses which can neither err nor lie, they are the best evidence only when their integrity can be satisfactorily established. One who relies, therefore, upon overcoming the prima facie correctness of the official canvass by a resort to the ballots must first show that the ballots as presented to the court are intact and genuine. Where a mode of preservation is enjoined by the statute proof must be made of a substantial compliance with the requirements of that mode. But such requirements are construed as directory merely, the object looked to being the preservation inviolate of the ballots. If this is established it would be manifestly unjust to reject them merely because the precise mode of reaching it had not been followed.

Sixth case—State ex rel. Thornburg, 97 N. E. 534

The case is correctly cited here. As printed in the report it reads (97 N. W.):

It will be noticed that the citation itself recites that there was proof as to the conduct of the county auditor or clerk with reference to the preservation of the ballots. The case did not rest simply upon the fact that the ballots came from the hands of the custodian of the ballots. There is no variance indicated from the rule that before the ballots are admissible as evidence it must first be shown that they had been carefully preserved.

Seventh case—State v. Creston, 195 Iowa 1372

From the way this citation is placed in the brief of counsel and the report of the majority, it would appear that it is intended to convey the idea that the case approves the other cases cited. This is not the fact. The question before the court was the charge of irregularities on the part of the holders of the election, and it does not relate to any question involved here.

From this analysis of all the cases cited in the report of the majority, it appears that no case cited sustains the contention of the majority.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have a question which I should like to propound.

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the Senator asserts it to be a fact, does he, that there were 67 precincts which sent in the returns in an unsealed packet or package, and that that was not in accordance even with the stipulation, much less the law? Is that true?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I dislike to interfere so much with these questions, but so many of the Senators do not seem to understand the facts.

Mr. ASHURST. That is what I want to get at. I want to know how many bags, packets, or packages were unsealed.

Mr. GEORGE. When?

Mr. ASHURST. When they reached Washington.

Mr. GEORGE. There were about 72 on which the seal was broken.

Mr. ASHURST. There were 72 packages?

Mr. GEORGE. That is, on which the wax was cracked off the string.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. GEORGE. There was none off the wires, and the wires were sealed in every instance.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Georgia says 72. The Senator from Mississippi says 67. Is that correct?

Mr. STEPHENS. Sixty-seven, I think, is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President, there were 72. That was stated on an actual examination.

Mr. STEPHENS. The number was first stated as 67, I know.

Mr. ASHURST. All right. Assume that it was either 67 or 72. Now, then, who were the witnesses—give me the names of the witnesses and read the testimony of the witnesses—who testified that notwithstanding this open condition, this broken seal, the ballots could not have been and were not tampered with? Give me the names of the witnesses who testified that these are the original ballots and could not have been tampered with.

Mr. STEPHENS. There are no such witnesses.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. The State of Iowa issued its prima facie certificate. Are you trying to overthrow a prima facie certificate by showing that the evidence you produce could have been tampered with? You must negative that allegation. You must negative the suggestion. It will not do merely to say: "Here are 67 bags. They may have been tampered with; but you ought to take the results and the votes contained in these packages that were open."

We are asked to accept 67 bags that came here in an unsealed condition. I would like to have some answer to that.

Mr. GEORGE. I will be glad to give it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will ask the Senator from Georgia to pardon me. I am rather tired, I have been standing here a long time, and the Senator is going to speak to-morrow.

Mr. GEORGE. On page 332 of part 2 of the hearings I think the Senator will find a satisfactory explanation about the alleged unsealed packages.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to say just another word or two. As I said a moment ago, nobody could tell about the missing ballots, the number of discrepancies, and so on. Mr. Brookhart himself did not know, even on the 28th day of January, anything about the number of precincts in which shortages existed.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Did the representatives of the contestant and contestee inspect those bags upon their receipt here?

Mr. STEPHENS. This is what was done, as I was starting to tell a while ago: The workers, the counters, or whatever they may have been called, were furnished certain work sheets, and they were to note upon them the condition in which they found these various bags of ballots. They did note those things, and the exception to these 67 precincts is taken from the work sheets as set out by the counters.

Mr. TRAMMELL. What I desire to know is as whether or not the representatives of the contestant and contestee inspected those bags at the time of their receipt, and whether or not they raised any objection, or stated that their appearance was such as to indicate possibly that the ballots had been tampered with.

Mr. STEPHENS. While there were attorneys employed by both parties, yet the work was done by laymen. It was said the other day that Senator Brookhart's brother was one of his representatives, but the record shows that this work began on the 20th day of July and that it ended the 31st day of August. Mr. Thomas Brookhart did not begin to work, so Colonel Thayer stated in his testimony, until the 15th day of August. So this work had been going on about 25 days. It was stated in the record, as I have said, that the work was done by laymen, and with the understanding that they should examine the bags, and so on, and note any defect on the work sheets, which were later examined by the attorneys, and by the attorney for Senator Brookhart brought to the attention of the committee. Of course, the attorneys were not right there when the workers were going through all the motions with respect to the handling of the bags.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Was either of the parties representing the contestant or the contestee present when they opened the bags?

Mr. STEPHENS. The whole matter was in the hands of Colonel Thayer, who was the chief supervisor. He had a crew of men and women, a great bunch of them, at work counting, and so on, and moving things along. I can not furnish information as to all the details of the transaction, because I was not there and did not know.

Mr. TRAMMELL. When for the first time was objection raised to the receiving and the counting of the ballots in these alleged unsealed bags?

Mr. STEPHENS. My recollection is that this particular objection was not made until perhaps January 6.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Was that before or after the count had been completed, except of the contested ballots which had been withheld?

Mr. STEPHENS. That was after most of the ballots had been counted. Of course, there were many contested ballots. But the tabulation had not been presented to the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. In other words, this question of the possibility—not the allegation that there was any fraud or any tampering with the ballots, but the bare possibility—of the ballots having been tampered with was not raised until after the count had been completed, except as to the eight or nine thousand ballots which were withheld.

Mr. STEPHENS. As I stated, this matter was handled by laymen. The attorneys were not there. But I want to suggest this, as was suggested yesterday by the Senator from Missouri, this is not a contest between two private individuals. The people of the State of Iowa are interested, and vitally interested. They have certain rights. This is not a fight between two lawyers representing two private parties in litigation. These were lawyers employed by the people of the United States—by this Government—to see that a fair result was reached; to see that the investigation was made. Steck's lawyer will be paid by the Government, and that is true of Brookhart's lawyer. That, in connection with the thought that these are not the vitally interested parties in the whole transaction, leads me to this conclusion, that you can not put a contested-election case of this kind and character upon the basis of an ordinary lawsuit or upon the basis of an ordinary contested-election case.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Georgia, if I am correctly advised, contends that Mr. Steck has a plurality of about 76 votes. Am I correct in that?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; at least that many.

Mr. ASHURST. As I said, the able Senator from Georgia says that Mr. Steck has a plurality of 76 votes; but more than 76 votes are unaccounted for.

Mr. STEPHENS. Three thousand five hundred and seventy.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, then—

Mr. GEORGE. What does the Senator mean by "unaccounted for"?

Mr. ASHURST. That that many were missing, that more than that were missing from the 67 bags? I want to be advised on that.

Mr. STEPHENS. Not 67 bags.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it would be very much better if the Senator would not state things as facts.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not stating the facts; I am asking for information.

Mr. GEORGE. All that is contended in the record, if the Senator will permit me, is that the number of ballots recounted by the committee was less than the number of names appearing on the poll lists. That is all that is meant by ballots being missing. That is all that is meant by shortage of ballots.

Mr. ASHURST. Precisely. The able Senator—

Mr. GEORGE. Let me finish. But we have more ballots than the official count out in Iowa took into consideration. We have counted more ballots for Mr. Steck and more ballots for Senator Brookhart than were counted by the managers of election on election day out in Iowa. So that when you talk about lost ballots, or missing ballots, you are talking about discrepancies between the actual ballots we have and the number of names on the poll lists. But there is a greater discrepancy between the official count and the names on the poll list.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the very point I wanted cleared up.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I would like to inquire, if the Senator will permit—

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Just what significance the Senator from Georgia attaches to the fact that there were more ballots in the box than were returned by the original official canvassers. If there are less ballots in the box than there are names on the poll lists, does it not follow of necessity that there are some ballots missing?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. The voter's name is not put on the poll list until he votes.

Mr. GEORGE. No; but if he votes, which is the higher and better evidence, what the voter does, or what some clerk at the election does?

Mr. WALSH. All we can do is to assume that the law was carried out, and that when the voter voted, his name was put upon the poll list.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. And we can of course assume—and it would not be a violent assumption at all—that the checkers did not keep the right count. So that we can very readily understand that the official returns might show a less number of votes than there were ballots in the box. But when we come to a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll list and the number of ballots actually in the box, it seems to me indisputable either that some of the ballots got away by mistake, inadvertence, or something of that kind, and are not in the box, or else that some of the ballots put in the box had been taken out.

Mr. GEORGE. Does it occur to the Senator that there might have been some error in the poll lists?

Mr. WALSH. No; I can not conceive of that.

Mr. ASHURST. You can not go behind the poll lists.

Mr. GEORGE. We are speaking of facts. The Senator can not conceive of any errors being made there?

Mr. WALSH. I can not.

Mr. STEPHENS. There are two poll lists made.

Mr. WALSH. There are two poll lists, and one checks against the other. I can not think of two clerks putting down on the poll lists the names of voters who did not vote. I find it difficult to conceive of that.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator this. Is it difficult to conceive—

Mr. WALSH. And particularly as they check against each other.

Mr. GEORGE. We do not know whether they check against each other in this case. We have had only one list here.

Mr. WALSH. Of course; but the law requires that the check be made.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; the law requires two lists to be kept, but we have had only one here.

Mr. WALSH. I think the reasonable presumption under those circumstances would be that all the ballots cast are not in the box, rather than that the clerks put more names on the poll lists than the number of voters who actually voted.

Mr. GEORGE. That involves the question of which is the better and stronger evidence—and I hope the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me—

Mr. WALSH. I would say, under those circumstances, when it is impossible to tell which is the better evidence that you could not take either, but the official count would control.

Mr. GEORGE. Then you would have a number showing a bigger discrepancy than the recount.

Mr. WALSH. That may be true; but you are obliged to overcome the official return, and it has to be overcome by the ballots in the box and the names on the poll lists, and those two do not agree. Under those circumstances I would say that you could not take either one or the other with perfect certainty that you were right about it, but I would say that the greater probability of the matter would be that the poll lists would give the accurate number, rather than the ballots which are found in the box after it comes here to the city of Washington.

Mr. GEORGE. I would say exactly the contrary.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, we want to have an executive session, and I want to get through.

Mr. GEORGE. I will not take the Senator's time unduly, but I merely want to state my position. The whole question is, if there be a discrepancy in the first place, there is such a minor discrepancy when it is averaged between all the precincts in Iowa as to indicate no fraud, none whatever, because there is not an average discrepancy of more than three votes to the precinct.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire what significance the Senator attaches to that. Here is one precinct in which, according to the record, there were 198 ballots short, 198 ballots less in the box than there were names on the poll list. Apparently both parties agreed that with respect to that precinct they could not depend upon either the ballots in the box or the poll list, and so the official count was taken. If we have another one in which there is a discrepancy of 50 ballots and another in which there is a discrepancy of 10 ballots and another in which there is a discrepancy of 1 ballot, and the average is only 12, of what significance is it? The Senator would not take the actual recount in the precinct in which there were 198 short nor in the precinct in which there were 50 short because the average throughout the State was only 12.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is one precinct where there were 198 ballots missing. There is another precinct where Senator Brookhart actually lost 89 votes. I can recall three or four where he lost around 20 or 22 or something like that; so there are numerous cases. It may be in some precincts there is a loss of only one. Then, as I suggested to the Senator from Georgia on yesterday, there were 1,068 precincts in which there was a variance, but whether over or under there is no showing, because the committee never had that compilation made. Therefore we do not know what to take as the divisor of the 3,570 to get even the average, because we do not know how many precincts have too few ballots and how many precincts have too many.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

Mr. STEPHENS. Just a moment, if the Senator please.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think the Senator ought to invite me to answer a question and then let the Senator from Montana make a speech and then not let me make a reply.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator can have all the time he may want.

Mr. GEORGE. I think I am entitled to it now.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. With reference to the ballots that were 198 short, Senators seem to put great stress upon that, whereas they seem to overlook the facts about it. That was the only precinct, the one package of ballots which left Iowa unsealed, broken, with not only the package broken but the wire around the ballots broken.

There was unmistakable evidence that there were probably some lost ballots, and since there were one-fourth of the ballots minus—that is, one-fourth less than the official count, or approximately one-fourth—Mr. Steck's representative and Mr. Brookhart's representative, the committee having nothing to do with it, agreed between themselves that they in that case could do nothing but take the official count. That was only in the case of two precincts that were brought from the State of Iowa broken.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that perfectly well. That is to say, in addition to the fact that there was this shortage—

Mr. GEORGE. And a very great shortage. There was actual physical evidence of the breaking.

Mr. WALSH. There was physical evidence that in all probability those ballots had been lost, but that is aside from the question which I am presenting altogether. There was that discrepancy there. Let us suppose now that they came the same as the other ballots did, with no physical evidence, perceptible at least, that there was any loss; still there was a discrepancy of 198 ballots between the number in the box and the number of names on the poll list. Would the Senator undertake to say that in a case of that character the recount of ballots ought to prevail over the official count?

Mr. GEORGE. I would have to say the ballots are the better evidence. Let me put this case: Suppose in an election in Iowa—and this is the final test of the proposition—the poll books should show that 1,000,000 votes were cast, but on the night when you counted out your election you only found 990,000, are you not going to count the actual ballots as the better evidence of what the voters did?

Mr. STEPHENS. The ballots are the best evidence only when they have been properly identified and proof made as to their preservation. As some court has said, they may become the weakest kind of evidence.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but that is not the case.

Mr. GEORGE. It is the case, the test of which is the better evidence.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the counters count out the number of ballots and the number of votes for each, and they make official returns of them, and the official return, of course, concludes the thing. But that is not the point. The point is now that we are going to try to overturn the official return, and we are going to overturn it by saying that there are a greater number of ballots or a lesser number of ballots than were returned.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. We are going to do it by examining the ballot boxes. Assume that the ballots have been carefully preserved; assume that there has been no tampering with the ballots; the Senate is placed back in the exact position occupied by the election managers on the day of the election, and by all of the authorities and in reason the ballots are the higher and better evidence. If there had been tampering with the ballots, if there had been opportunity even for tampering with the ballots, then, of course, we are impeaching the integrity of the ballots. But if they are preserved, the contest body, the tribunal, in this case the Senate, is in exactly the position of the managers of the election on election night, and we are forced to the conclusion which all of the law writers draw and that all thinkers must draw, I think, that the ballots are the higher and better evidence of who voted.

Let me say, and then I am through, that the poll sheet is made by the clerk. The voter never touches it. The voter does handle his ballot. He marks it and he either places it in the box or gives it to the manager to place in the box. It is upon that principle that all the law writers have agreed that if the ballots are properly preserved, honestly preserved, they are necessarily the highest and best evidence of the actual number of votes cast.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I always listen to the able Senator from Georgia with the profoundest respect. I think he proceeds upon an erroneous hypothesis. He has attempted to draw an analogy between the Senate committee, which after laborious work reached a conclusion, and the precinct judges of election. When the judges under the Senator's conclusion sit down to accomplish their task there is no prima facie to be overthrown. They have counted the ballots. They have issued, or the State of Iowa, in accordance with their count, has issued, its certificate; so when the committee sits it does not sit comparably to the original counters. There is a prima facie to be overthrown. The able Senator from Georgia, it seems to me, falls into error when he argues that the prima facie, the certificate, can be overthrown by absent ballots.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I do the Senator an injustice, of course unwittingly.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw that statement, then. The majority report requests us to believe that the proof shifts during the course of the examination, and we were asked to consider, on page 8, Ferguson v. Henry, some expression of a court to the effect that there is a time when the proof shifts. But unfortunately that case has been overruled three or four times.

Mr. GEORGE. But I have not cited that case.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator from Georgia has not cited it. He is too good a lawyer to do that. The able Senator from Georgia would not do that. But, nevertheless, we are asked in this report written by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to consider and to pass upon a law question, and to show that the proof shifts from time to time he has cited a case that has been expressly overruled.

Here is the law as I understand it: After the prima facie has been issued in the shape of a certificate of election then the burden of proof falls upon the contestant, even as I put my hand upon the Official Reporter here at my side.

Mr. GEORGE. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. ASHURST. And that burden, after having fallen upon the contestant, rests upon him all the way through. He is not permitted to say some ballots were absent which, if they had been gathered in and if they had been counted, would have been for him.

It is quite an act of temerity for anybody here, even the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], to argue the law with the able Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; do not say that.

Mr. ASHURST. I am in no mood for flattery this afternoon, but I say that the diligent Senator has labored and he has worked faithfully, as he always does. He is a great credit to his State.

Georgia lived up to her high place when she sent him here, and she will do herself and her country great good and value if she sends him back. But after his great labors, after much doubt, he finds 78 majority for Mr. Steck. Now, after he has labored he finds 78 majority with 3,300 ballots missing; that is to say, a discrepancy of 3,300 ballots between what was made by the prima facie and what is in the box, and he asks me to send a Senator out through yonder door on such testimony or lack of testimony. No; I will not do that.

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad the Senator concluded by saying a discrepancy of approximately 3,300 votes, because I do not think there is any shortage of ballots. But if there is a shortage of ballots, there is not a moral doubt on earth that the Senate comes back finally into the same shoes occupied by the election managers out in Iowa. It is true that there is a prima facie case that they are right. It is true the presumption is they are right. It is true that that remains the presumption throughout. But the only way we can test whether they are right is to do exactly what they did on election day, and if we find a conflict between the names entered by the clerks of election and the actual ballots that the voters put in the box, the actual ballot is the higher and better and more trustworthy evidence.

In the nature of things, the one big question in this case, and there is but one, is to see whether or not there is a showing of a proper preservation of the ballots here in point of fact. On that point I concede, of course, that Senators may very seriously differ, but if we concede that we have the ballots and if we concede that they have been properly safeguarded, there is no rule either of law or of logic or morals that will not permit us to count the actual ballots and that will bind us by the names that are merely entered upon the poll list. The ballots are the higher and better evidence of the actual number of votes cast.

Mr. ASHURST. I can not agree with the Senator, with due deference. I think the reasoning of the able Senator from Montana is the correct and the safe reasoning, to wit, that when a discrepancy appears, we should have recourse to the poll list. Only one was brought in. Why were not both poll lists brought in? But one was brought here, and there are two. They could have been checked one against the other. Had the Senator been in private life and had he been an attorney for the contestant, the able Senator would have brought here both of the poll lists. Then the able Senator's first move in his case would have been to put witnesses on the stand to prove that those are the ballots and that those boxes could not have been tampered with. He would have explained how this bag was opened and shown that there was no reasonable probability of the ballots having been tampered with. That has not been shown. The best we can say, the best that can be done is to say it is a mere guess, and we will guess one man out of the Senate and another man in.

Mr. GEORGE. No; I do not think so. When the ballots were brought to Washington and the proposition was made to count them, it makes no difference who made it, with Senator Brookhart here present and Mr. Steck here present through their proper representatives, neither Steck nor Brookhart can consent to count those ballots and participate in counting those ballots, thereby robbing the other party of the opportunity of presenting proof that he could then have offered that they had been properly brought here and had been properly preserved, and thereafter say that they were not properly here for us to count.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator will let me conclude my statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GEORGE. Then when we count the ballots and find from an actual count of the ballots an actual result, and ascertain that there is a slight discrepancy in some of the precincts between the number of ballots and the names on the poll lists, the question presented is, How are we to regard that conflict and how are we to settle it? It is the universal rule of elections that we shall not throw out an entire election and nullify all that has been done if any method remains for settling the conflict. In the State of Iowa the law provides what shall be done when there are more ballots in the box than there are names on the poll lists.

It recognizes unmistakably the general proposition and authority, if there are less, that the higher and better and more trustworthy evidence shall be recognized as to what the vote actually was. To the extent that the ballots in the box exceed the names on the poll lists a legislative exception is made and specific directions given by the law of Iowa. If the ballots have been honestly put into the box, if they have been honestly preserved, and carefully preserved, if there has been no tampering with those ballots, if that proof is conceded—I am stating it now in the hypothetical sense—and when we look into the box and find fewer ballots than there are names appearing on the poll list, we are driven to an election between two classes of evidence. We settle that, as we settle all questions of human evidence, by the rule of trustworthiness—which method is more likely to reflect the truth. As a light upon that—though it is not binding upon the Senate, of course—there may be considered how the courts have usually regarded the question; whether they have usually and generally and almost universally considered the ballots themselves to be the higher and better evidence or whether they have considered the poll lists to be the higher and better evidence.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator, Can he refer us to any authority where that question was actually considered?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; I will undertake to do that tomorrow.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be glad to listen to the Senator. I have listened to the Senator's very lucid and clear exposition of his own view. Admitting the strength of the Senator's position—the Senator does not take a weak position and never weakly maintains any position—I think the erroneous hypothesis upon which the Senator, with great deference, I will say to him, has proceeded is that, quite naturally—we all might do it—he has assumed that this could be treated as a contest over property.

Mr. GEORGE. No; I did not so assume.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. I am glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sorry that the Senator obtained that impression. Right on that point, I said yesterday that I recognized the public interest in this case. But let me state the case. According to the official returns more than 446,000 people voted for Steck, and according to the official returns just a little more than 446,000—about 700 more—voted for Brookhart. Therefore the people of Iowa are not represented exclusively in the case by either one of these gentlemen, but the people of Iowa are represented by both of them and prima facie by the one who is holding the certificate of the State. The public interest is the real interest involved in the case.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well; it is quite refreshing to know that the able Senator, as I expected him to do, treats this not as a mere contest over property, because the courts have held that an office, or the right to hold an office, is not a property right. Whatever else it may be—a great honor and carrying with it some emoluments—it is not a property right. Since that be true, who is it that binds me by any stipulation? Who binds the Senate by a stipulation? When the Senate committee comes here—able lawyers, quite legalistic, as we expect them to be, fresh from the bar—we have a right to say to them, "Ample funds were placed at your disposal; you had plenary power; where are the witnesses who testified that this shortage is a harmless error? Where are the witnesses who testified that this shortage?"

Mr. GEORGE. Will not the Senator do like the courts make the lawyers do, say "the shortage, as I contend"?

Mr. ASHURST. We can not do that in the Senate; we might do it in the courts, but we can not do it here, in my judgment. However, Mr. President, I have detained the Senate too long. I thank the Senator for his permission to interrupt him.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me cite an authority, because the Senator from Montana asked me to do so. It is general, but I will undertake to cite a specific authority tomorrow if the question arises, although I do not want to go into a reading of the law. I quote from McCrary on Elections, which is a recognized standard work:

502. It is undoubtedly the policy of the law not to throw too many obstacles in the way of investigating the correctness and bona fides of election returns. On this point the court in Reed v. Kneass very justly observes:

"The true policy, to maintain and perpetuate the vote by ballot, is found in jealously guarding its purity, in placing no fine-drawn metaphysical obstructions in the way of testing election returns charged as false and fraudulent, and in insuring to the people by a jealous, vigilant, and determined investigation of election frauds that there is a saving spirit in the public tribunals charged with such investigations, ready to do them justice if their suffrages have been tampered with by fraud or misapprehended through error."

The following section—and that is all I shall read—is as follows:

503. The returns and other election papers, though conclusive upon the canvassers, may be impeached upon a quo warranto or other form of contested election. The very question to be determined in such a contest is frequently the truthfulness and reliability of the returns, poll books, etc., and the duty of the tribunal trying the case is to ascertain, not who was returned as elected, but who was in fact elected.

And following section 503 of the last edition, I believe, of McCrary on Elections there will be found any number of general authorities stating that, if the ballots have been properly preserved and securely kept, they are the higher and better evidence.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I had hoped to discuss several other matters—to call attention to the shortage of 3,570 ballots, the fact that the committee was inconsistent in adopting one rule in one matter and another rule in a similar matter, the shortage of ballots in the five precincts referred to in the hearings, and to lay greater stress upon the rights of the States. But, owing to the many interruptions, I have already occupied the floor for more than five hours, so I shall simply say that I am firmly convinced that Senator Brookhart was legally elected, and I shall vote accordingly.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Hattigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 37) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States under the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor."

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7378) providing for the holding of terms of the United States district court at Lewistown, Mont., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, April 7, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, the majesty of Thy power is hidden in the framework of the universe; Thy image is in the mind of man and Thy marvelous love is made manifest in the message of Jesus Christ, our Lord. O Saviour, bless us with Thy love and mercy, for there is no mightier or holier affection that can cleanse our divided hearts. Show us more and more the Father in His beauty; leave us not to our own devices and correct our own unheeding ways. Deliver us from the poverty of self-satisfaction and lift us above the false ideals of a materialistic life. May the great world find its good will and cooperation in the divine Teacher, who brought peace for all mankind. May the precepts of Thy Holy Word be our daily guide. Do Thou supply, O Holy Spirit, the deepest needs of our souls, until the shadows lengthen and we can work no more, and life is over. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a short statement from the Patient Body of the National Sanatorium, Tennessee, in regard to the Veterans' Bureau legislation now pending.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following statement from the patient body of the National Sanatorium, Tenn.:

NATIONAL SANATORIUM, TENNESSEE, April 1, 1926.

Hon. GORDON BROWNING,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BROWNING: Immediately upon receipt of advice from Washington that the bill concerning a permanent rate for tuberculars had been reported from the Veterans' Affairs Committee carrying a provision of $35 per month for a period of five years for arrested cases a mass meeting of the patients of this institution was held in order to determine whether it was their wish to continue their fight for a life rating for tuberculars or to be satisfied with the bill as reported. Inasmuch as the contention for a life rating originated at this institution, and feeling that such a rating was only commensurate with our handicap, it was unanimously agreed that we would not change our position at this time. This decision, we are glad to note, is in accordance with your plans.

After considerable discussion it was finally agreed that a committee, composed of three representatives of each of the World War organizations at this institution (Disabled American Veterans, American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars), be elected to represent the entire patient body. Said committee to use every means possible for the enactment of legislation calling for a $50 life rating for tuberculars.

At the first meeting of this committee the fact was brought out that there was some misunderstanding by the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, and possibly by some Members of Congress, concerning the position taken by some tubercular veterans relative to the extension of time for vocational training; also concerning the position taken by the patients of this institution regarding the transfer of the national soldiers' homes to the control of the Veterans' Bureau. In order that this situation may be clarified, we feel that it is only just that we try to correct these misapprehensions.

First we shall deal with the activities of the patients of this institution regarding waiving claim for vocational training and designating a preference for a permanent rate. Some time ago a petition was circulated among the patients requesting them to sign if they were willing to waive their claim, as tuberculars, for vocational training. This petition was signed by a great majority of them. It seems there has been some misunderstanding regarding this move. We were not asking that training as a whole be discontinued, but realizing that vocational training for tuberculars has proven an immense expense to the Government, with only a few being able to carry out their schedule, we were willing to sacrifice our training in an effort to strengthen our claim for a permanent rate. In this way we felt that we were showing a willingness to yield some ground and a willingness to help cut down the expenses of the Government, which seems to be the desire of the present administration, and at the same time we would get adequate relief. Too, some may have gotten the idea that in waiving claim for training and asking for a permanent rate we have lost all ambition and consider ourselves helpless for the remainder of our lives.

The proposition that we are advancing is not based upon any sympathetic attitude that may be held for us as disabled ex-service men, but it is based upon actual facts that have been presented from time to time to the Committee on Veterans Legislation.

You will note that our position deals with tuberculars only.

Second, we understand there is an idea in Washington that the patients of this institution have fought placing the national soldiers' homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Bureau. This conclusion was probably drawn after reading an editorial in the Mountain Branch Vet published at this institution under a recent date. This editorial was not edited by a World War veteran nor by a representative of either of the three World War veterans' organizations, but was rather an opinion of the editor himself, as the World War men have made no expression concerning their wishes in this matter.

If any prejudice has arisen against our claim for a permanent rating on account of misconstrued statements, we trust that these explanations will clearly and satisfactorily show our position on these questions.

Assuring you that we are very appreciative of your efforts in our behalf, we are

Respectfully yours,

W. T. RUTLEDGE, Chairman.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the civil service retirement bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in connection with the proposed amendments liberalizing the civil service retirement act I have obtained some very interesting and helpful tables and statements showing the practical operation of this law which I feel will be of interest to Members of the House when they come to consider the proposed liberalized bill; therefore, under my leave to extend my remarks I herewith insert the following information:

Statement, by fiscal years, showing the amount contributed to the civil-service retirement and disability fund, the interest and profits accruing to the fund, and the total amount

Year	Contribution	Interest and profits	Total
1921.....	$12,513,636.69	$72,752.68	$12,586,389.37
1922.....	14,266,494.35	587,254.64	14,853,748.99
1923.....	14,112,827.70	1,042,781.58	15,155,609.28
1924.....	15,109,451.49	1,523,034.44	16,632,485.93
1925.....	17,905,070.98	2,123,796.71	20,028,867.69
Total.....	73,907,481.21	5,349,620.05	79,257,101.26

There has been a steady increase in the contributions made to the retirement fund by the employees and to the interest and profits derived from investments. In 1921 the contributions were $12,513,636.69; in 1925 they were $17,905,070.98. The interest and profits were $72,752.68 in 1921; in 1925 they were $2,123,796.71. The total yearly receipts into the fund, including both contributions and interest and profits, increased from $12,586,389.37 in 1921 to $20,028,867.69 in 1925.

Statement, by fiscal years, showing the amount paid in annuities, the amount paid in refunds, and the balance in the civil-service retirement and disability fund at the end of each year

Year	Paid in annuities	Paid in refunds	Balance in fund
1921.....	$2,590,568.52	$322,964.07	$9,672,842.08
1922.....	4,188,238.89	2,203,198.04	13,184,263.91
1923.....	4,964,001.92	2,785,755.97	23,510,288.97
1924.....	5,692,443.50	2,564,139.12	33,586,193.19
1925.....	6,235,830.16	2,713,452.16	44,665,778.56
Total.....	23,671,103.06	10,889,508.36

The balance in the fund has increased 362 per cent in four years.

The Treasury Department estimates that there will be $52,000,000 in the fund at the end of the fiscal year 1926.

Total expenditures from the fund:

Paid in annuities..... $23,671,103.06
Paid in refunds..... 10,889,508.36

Total..... 34,560,611.44

The amount of refunds of contributions made to persons separated from the service increased each year up to the year 1924. In 1925 the amount was less than in either of the two preceding years. This would seem to indicate that the peak has been reached. While the number of persons who received refunds has decreased from 70,580 in 1922 to 36,989 in 1925, the average amount of each refund has increased from $12.37 in 1921 to $73.86 in 1925. The decrease in number will be balanced by the increase in amount.

Statement, by fiscal years, showing the amount of annuities paid, the amount of interest and profits derived from the investments of the civil-service retirement and disability fund, the amount of interest paid on refunds, the net amount of interest and profits, and the percentage of annuities that could have been paid from such interest and profits

Fiscal year	Annuities paid	Interest and profits	Interest paid on refunds	Net interest and profits	Percentage of annuities paid
1921.....	$2,590,568.52	$72,752.68	$72,752.68	2.8
1922.....	4,188,238.89	587,254.64	$40,111.12	$647,143.52	13.1
1923.....	4,964,001.92	1,042,781.58	107,904.39	$934,877.19	18.8
1924.....	5,692,443.50	1,523,034.44	144,127.42	1,378,907.02	24.2
1925.....	6,235,830.16	2,123,796.71	171,071.86	1,952,724.85	31.3
Total.....	23,671,103.06	5,349,620.05	463,214.79	4,886,405.26	20.6

The net interest and profits on the invested fund (after deducting interest paid on refunds) has increased from $72,752.68 in 1921 to $1,952,724.85 in 1925. Had the net profits been used in the payment of annuities they would have paid 2.8 per cent of the annuities of 1921, rapidly increasing, year by year, until in 1925 they would have paid 31.3 per cent of the annuities paid in that year.

Statement, by fiscal years, showing the number retired during the year, the number dying during the year, and the number remaining on the roll at the end of the year

Year	Number retired	Number died	Number on roll
1921.....	6,745	274	6,471
1922.....	1,719	614	7,576
1923.....	2,526	768	9,334
1924.....	2,090	882	10,548
1925.....	2,064	943	11,689
Total.....	15,170	3,481

The number retired has decreased in each fiscal year since 1923, while the number who died during each fiscal year has steadily increased from 274 in 1921 to 943 in 1925.

Statement, by fiscal years, showing the number retired for age, the number retired for disability, and the total number retired

Year	Retired for age	Retired for disability	Total number retired
1921.....	6,164	581	6,745
1922.....	1,169	550	1,719
1923.....	1,877	649	2,526
1924.....	1,538	558	2,090
1925.....	1,514	570	2,084
Total.....	12,262	2,908	15,170

¹ Of the number retired for age, 800 were retired under the provisions of the amendatory act of Sept. 22, 1922, on account of involuntary separation from the service.

During the operation of the law 12,262 persons have been retired for age, of which number 869 were retired under the provisions of the amendatory act of September 22, 1922, on account of involuntary separation from the service, and 2,908 on account of disability.

In June, 1922, the scope of the law was increased by the inclusion of certain unclassified laborers and other employees theretofore excluded. This resulted in a considerable increase of the number of retirements during the fiscal year 1923. Since 1923 the percentage of increase has steadily declined from 23.2 per cent in that year to 13 per cent in 1924 and 10.8 per cent in 1925.

It is interesting to note the number of persons who receive annuities at the various rates. In the year 1925, 124 annuitants received less than $180 per annum, 50 cents per day. It is also interesting to know that the number of these stingily paid annuitants increased from 57 in 1923, the first year statistics are available, to 98 in 1924 and 124 in 1925.

The annuity roll of 1925 shows that 124 persons receive less than $180 per year, which is less than 50 cents per day; 1,937 receive less than $360 per year, which is less than $1 per day; 7,544 receive less than $720 per year; while only 4,145 receive the maximum of $720 per year.

Expressed in percentages those receiving less than $720 per annum embrace 64.6 per cent of the annuity roll, while those receiving the maximum annuity of $720 per annum are 35.4 per cent of the roll.

That the number receiving the maximum annuity of $720 per annum is relatively stationary is shown by the fact that this class of annuitants embraced 36.8 per cent of the annuity roll in 1923, 36.1 per cent in 1924, and 35.4 per cent in 1925.

Average annual annuity paid

For the fiscal year:
1921	$568.44
1922, $564.48, decrease	3.96
1923, $551.64, decrease	12.84
1924, $546.30, decrease	5.34
1925, $544.04, decrease	1.60

Total decrease in the average annuity 23.80

Contrary to all expectations, the average annual annuity paid has steadily decreased every year. While the decrease has been small, it has been constant. In no year since the law has been in operation has the annuity paid been as great as it was in the preceding year.

RETENTION BEYOND RETIREMENT AGE

Statistics pertaining to retirements and refunds of deductions will be found in reports of the Commissioner of Pensions, but those relative to continuances are entirely within the province of the Civil Service Commission.

Continuances in service beyond retirement age under the act of May 22, 1920, by fiscal years:

Number serving beyond retirement age	2,515	2,685	2,468	2,805	3,422

Continuances beyond retirement age are authorized in two-year periods. At the end of the two-year period an employee must be again continued or dropped. The second and third continuances swell the figures in the table for 1923 and 1925. The services of 303, or 4.5 per cent of the 6,682 who were continued, terminated by death. The services of 2,957, or 44.25 per cent, terminated otherwise, leaving 3,422, or 51.21 per cent, still in the service.

That employees of retiring age do not want to retire is shown by the number of continuances granted. There has been a total of 9,267 continuances granted to employees beyond the retiring age since the retirement law became effective.

On June 30, 1925, there was continued in active service 50.06 per cent of those of or beyond retirement age. That more than one-half of the employees eligible for retirement have been continued in the service shows more conclusively than any argument can that employees will not retire under present conditions unless forced to do so.

Statement showing the amount of annuities paid during each fiscal year, the increase each year, and the percentage of increase

Fiscal year	Amount paid	Increase	Percentage of increase

1925	6,235,830.16	543,386.57	9.5
Total	23,671,103.08

That the increase in the yearly payments of annuities is rapidly slowing up is shown by the fact that the annuities paid in 1922 were 61.7 per cent greater than in 1921; in 1923 they were only 18.5 per cent greater than in 1922; in 1924 they were only 14.7 per cent greater than in 1923; while in 1925 they had fallen to 9.5 per cent greater than in 1924.

Total	238,217	46.71	172,690	463,214.79

The enormous turnover in the service is sharply brought out by the fact that 238,217 refunds have been paid to persons who have been separated from the service since the retirement law became effective.

The 11,680 annuitants on the retirement roll at the close of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1925, rendered a total service of 324,266 years; but as service beyond 30 years confers no benefit, 31,428 years went for naught, and the annuities were computed on 292,838 years. During this same fiscal year these annuitants drew \$6,235,830.16 in annuities. This indicates that the annuities for the year cost \$19.24 for each year of service rendered, or \$1.60 for each month, or 5 $\frac{1}{3}$ cents for each day.

It is thus evident that retirement last year cost about 5 cents a day for each day's service of the annuitants on the roll. An allowance of 10 cents a day for each day of service would have brought the average annuity up to about $1,000 a year.

Owing to the elimination of 31,428 years of service, the average allowable service of those on the roll was 25.05 years instead of 27.7 years.

The average age of annuitants has decreased only six-tenths of a year, or approximately seven months. In 1922 it was 70.5 years; in 1925, it was 69.9 years. This average age is high in view of the fact that railway postal clerks retire at 62, and other postal employees together with mechanics at 65, and of the further fact that employees involuntarily separated from the service who are 55 years of age and have served for 15 years are entitled to retirement under the amendatory act of September 22, 1922, 809 have been so retired. The average years of service of all on the roll is 27.7 years. This indicates that any legislation which will require 30 years of service to secure a benefit will not reach an unduly large number of persons.

The most significant fact brought out by an analysis of the service of the annuitants is that the 11,689 annuitants on the roll on June 30, 1925, rendered 324,206 years of service. During that year these annuitants were paid $6,235,830.16 in annuities. This was a cost of $19.24 for each year of service, or a bonus or gratuity of less than $20 a year for 28 years of faithful service at a low salary. Surely this is not excessive benevolence.

A study of the years of service and salary received is instructive. There is an idea existing in the minds of many that if the annuity is raised to $1,200 per annum all the annuitants will be paid that amount at once. In the first place, only 830 of the annuitants received an average salary of $1,800 during the last 10 years of service, and only 566 of these had 30 years or more of service. Should the maximum annuity be based on an average annual salary of $1,600 and 30 years of service, it would reach only 1,071 annuitants who were on the roll on June 30, 1925.

THE AVERAGE SALARY BASIS USED

Under the provisions of the present retirement law the annuity is based on the average salary for the last 10 years of allowable service.

This period, 10 years, is too long, and in view of the great reduction in purchasing power of the dollar since 1913 the salary basis should not cover more than 5 years of service, and might with justice even be less than 5 years.

Other retirement systems as a rule use a much shorter service term. Germany, Norway, Portugal, the Netherlands, Massachusetts, and Chicago use the salary paid at time of retirement; Great Britain, the average salary for the last three years of service; Belgium, Denmark, Argentina, Connecticut, Maine, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Boston, and Philadelphia, the average salary for the last five years of service; France, the average salary for the last six years of service. In fact, only three systems appear to use the 10-year period, namely, Canada, the city of New York, and the United States. To summarize, out of the 21 systems examined the salary of the service periods used is as follows:

At time of retirement	6
Last three years of service	1
Last five years of service	10
Last six years of service	1
Last 10 years of service	3

It is thus apparent that 17 out of the 21 retirement systems examined, all available, use a service period of five years or less.

OPTIONAL AGE OF RETIREMENT

The retirement systems of the various countries, States, and cities fix the optional age for retirement as follows:

At 55 years of age: Chicago and France for the "active branch" of the service.

At 60 years of age: Great Britain, Portugal, Italy, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New York City, Philadelphia City and County, Boston and Suffolk County, and France for the "sedentary branch" of the service.

At 65 years of age: Canada, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Connecticut.

No age limit set: Massachusetts grants voluntary retirement after 35 years of service, regardless of age; and Maine retirement after 25 years of service, without age restrictions.

RETIREMENT CREDIT SHOULD BE GIVEN FOR THE MONTHS AS WELL AS FOR THE YEARS OF SERVICE

All the employees should have credit not only for the years of service, but also for the months. Under the existing law most of the employees lose credit for a part of their service, the loss varying from 1 to 35 months.

Under the provisions of Senate bill 3011 credit is given for all the years of service; but in considering service less than a year periods of less than six months are disregarded and periods over six months are counted as a year. Under this plan the inequalities are not eliminated; they are actually increased. To illustrate: An employee with an average salary of $1,800 and a service of 29 years 5 months 29 days will receive an annuity of $1,160, while another employee having the same salary with a service of 29 years 6 months 1 day will receive an annuity of $1,200. Here the difference is $40 a year. If both annuitants live 10 years, the favored one will draw $400 more annuity than the other. That is too much difference in annuity for a difference of only two days in service.

This inequality can easily be eliminated by allowing credit for the months as well as for the years of service. In this way no one will receive credit for a service not rendered, and all will receive credit for the service actually rendered. H. R. 3830 contains a proviso which will remedy this inequality (sec. 6).

The following table shows what the annuities would be for from 1 to 11 months, inclusive, using a service period of 29 years with the months added and the salaries $1,200, $1,500, and $1,800. For purposes of comparison, the annuities under the present law and under Senate bill 3011 are included in the table. The odd days of service can be ignored without working an injustice.

THE GOVERNMENT INDEX OF PRICES AND COSTS

The Department of Labor has compiled very reliable statistics for the Government to show the variations in prices and costs of living from time to time. The prices for the year 1913 are assumed as normal, or as 100 per cent, and the variations are compared with the prices of that year; for example, the index number for 1913 is 100, and for the first six months in 1925 it is 173.5. This indicates that the cost of living during the first six months of 1925 was, on an average, 73.5 per cent greater than it was in the year 1913, and that a salary of $1,735 in 1925 had the same number of purchasing units as the $1,000 salary had in 1913.

The present annuities are based on the average salaries for the last 10 years of service; and as the retirement law became effective on August 21, 1920, the salaries involved extended back to 1910. It should be noted, too, that 43 per cent of those retired were placed on the roll within the first year the law was in operation.

As the cost of living since 1913 has increased so markedly, and as it has also remained so much higher since 1920, when the law became effective, it is apparent that the salary of the employee was based on a 100-cent dollar, but that his annuity is based on a 60-cent dollar, or on a dollar having even less value than 60 cents.

The following table is accordingly submitted to show the purchasing power of, or the purchasing units in, the present annuities, compared with the purchasing power of, or the purchasing units in, the salaries of 1913.

Obviously only the year 1913 and the years 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, and 1925 have a material bearing on the issue, and for that reason all other years have been omitted from the table; and in order to deal with whole numbers, fractional parts of the cent, if less than one-half, have been ignored, and if one-half or more, have been counted as a cent.

¹ For first 6 months, January to June, inclusive.

The purchasing power of the dollar is a very important factor in the consideration of this question. While the retirement law was enacted in 1920, at the close of the war and during a period of high prices, we were still thinking in the pre-war unit of value of 1913. Measured by the prices of 1925, as compared with the prices of 1913, the dollar in 1925 was only worth 58 cents. The average annual annuity of $544.64 paid during that year had a purchasing value of only $315.89, or $26.82 a month, or 88 cents a day. One of the chief values of a study of the purchasing power of the dollar since the enactment of the retirement law is its stability during that period. The average since 1921 being a small fraction above its present purchasing power of 58 cents. This shows that the present level of prices will be maintained.

An annuity of $1,200 to-day is only equal in purchasing power to one of $696 before the war. So that if it be raised to $1,200 it even then will not be equal to the $720 that was intended to be given.

Statement showing by fiscal years the amount of the pay roll, the amount contributed to the retirement fund by the employees at the rate of 2½ per cent, and the amount of annuities paid

Total.....	2,955,070,802.00	73,876,770.05	23,671,103.08

The above table shows that the total pay roll of employees under the retirement law for the five years that the law has been in operation was $2,955,070,802; that the total annuities paid to retired employees during that period was $23,671,103.08. The total annuities paid were eight-tenths of 1 per cent of the total amount paid out in salaries. In other words, had the Congress appropriated an amount sufficient to pay the whole of the annuities it would have increased the appropriation for salaries of the employees under the retirement law only eight-tenths of 1 per cent.

But the employees are contributing to their own annuities in ever-increasing ratio. Statistics are available for only the past three fiscal years, and only for annuitants who have died, as shown in the following table:

Statement showing by fiscal years the number of annuitants dropped from the roll, together with the aggregate annuities paid to such annuitants and the aggregate contributions made by them and the percentage of the annuities paid by the annuitants

That there is no danger of the roll being unduly increased on account of retirements for disability is shown by the fact that in 1923 the number of annuitants retired for disability who died during that year was equal to 33 per cent of those placed on the roll for that cause during that year. In 1924 it was 44 per cent and in 1925 51 per cent. The average age of those retired for disability who died during the year 1925 was 59.7 years, as against 69.7 years for all classes, including those retired for disability as well as those retired for age. Those who are retired for disability die at an age 10 years younger than those retired for age.

THE MATERNITY LAW

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the maternity bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, the discussion of the extension of the maternity law for two years, under consideration by the House on Monday, April 5, 1926, being limited to 20 minutes on a side made it impossible for any Member of the House to know the provisions of this bill, whose extension was being asked for.

Without quoting the bill in full, I desire to give the salient points in it so that the discussion can be better understood.

1. A board of maternity and infant hygiene composed of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education.

2. The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor is "charged with the administration of this act, except as herein otherwise provided, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer."

3. It must be noted that in the act of April 9, 1912, establishing the Children's Bureau section 2 declared "that the said bureau shall be under the direction of a chief" with no limitations upon his or her authority.

4. The maternity law provides for an appropriation of $5,000 to each State in the Union and (2) an appropriation of $1,000,000 to be divided among the States, in proportion to population, with the proviso that the amount thus allotted should be duplicated by the State before such appropriation by the Federal Government could be available.

I

Where appropriation of money is made by Congress to the States without reservation as to power to supervise or control the appropriation, or Congress relinquishes any control over moneys appropriated to the States, it is guilty of a breach of trust. This doctrine is emphasized by Black (Constitutional Law, 3d. ed., p. 287):

Nor could it [Congress] renounce or surrender any of the powers granted to it by the Constitution, whether to the other branches of the Government, the States, or private parties.

Nor can it delegate the powers confided to it, or authorize their exercise by any other body or any person.

Tucker on the Constitution, Volume I, page 434, refers to the same principle:

But if appropriated without reservation, then Congress would give away its discretion to another, to use the money so appropriated for the common defense and general welfare as that other might determine. This would be an unconstitutional abandonment of duty and breach of trust.

The duties confided to Congress are trust duties. The great powers to lay and collect taxes and to appropriate money are the highest trust duties; to use the power to gather money from the people by taxation, and then by appropriation give that money to a State without let or hindrance by Congress is an abandonment of a trust duty which no court will sustain. If the money is appropriated to the State to carry out a purpose within the control of Congress, it is clearly an unauthorized abandonment of their duty to control the people's money; and if the money be appropriated to a State to carry out a purpose denied to Congress, their guilt is only enhanced. If the Federal Government retains partial control, this is equally unconstitutional, for "Congress can not delegate the powers confided to it" at all. How can the United States Government surrender control of its own funds into the hands of another government and keep faith with the people as their chosen trustee? The people, in making our Constitution, never intended that the taxes wrung from them should be used and administered by another distinct government. No such condition was ever heard of in this country, except perhaps under the eighteenth amendment. It is equally an abandonment of a trust duty for Congress to give up any control of moneys entrusted to it. No trustee, charged with a duty, and accepted by him, can escape his responsibility under the trust who abandons his trust by surrendering it to another. Under this law the State agency, if it fails to conduct it according to the views of the board as they may think proper, or in a way that the Chief of the Children's Bureau objects to, the board and the chief can prevent the State getting money for the next year by withholding a certificate; but suppose the State agency, during the year complained of by the board, squanders the money or commits a breach of trust, how can the Federal Government take action against a State officer who owes no duty to the Federal Government?

To be perfectly frank, an examination of this law would seem to indicate that the State has practically no control in its administration, and yet its last section declares, in large letters emphasizing the objects of this section:

State control of administration of act: This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the various States control of the administration of the act within their respective States, subject only to the provisions and purposes of this act.

But as the previous provisions of the act give the administration of it to the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor and make the chief of that bureau the executive officer, with no restrictions upon her powers, this provision as to State control would seem to be only "a sounding brass or tinkling cymbal."

II

The doctrine is accepted by all, and has been affirmed over and over again by the courts, that the States can not trench upon the domain and powers of the Federal Government, and the latter can not interfere with those objects which by the Constitution are left entirely to State control; each is powerless in the domain of the other. The maternity law affects women in child bearing and the care of the child after it comes. Under our Constitution, we ask upon whom does this right or duty devolve? The State or the Federal Government? Fortunately there can be no doubt on this question, for the recent child-labor decisions of the Supreme Court settle it as to children, and the principle controlling these cases applies equally to child-bearing women.

Justice Day, in Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. p. 273), says:

The grant of power to Congress over the subject of interstate commerce was to enable it to regulate such commerce and not to give it authority to control the States in their exercise of the police power over local trade and manufacture.

The grant of authority over a purely Federal matter was not intended to destroy the local power always existing and carefully reserved to the States in the tenth amendment to the Constitution.

A statute must be judged by its natural and reasonable effect. (Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 33, 34.) The control by Congress over interstate commerce can not authorize the exercise of authority not intrusted to it by the Constitution. (Pipe Line cases, 234 U. S. 548, 560.) The maintenance of the authority of the States over matters purely local is as essential to the preservation of our institutions as is the conservation of the supremacy of the Federal power in all matters intrusted to the Nation by the Federal Constitution.

In interpreting the Constitution it must never be forgotten that the Nation is made up of States to which are intrusted the powers of local government. And to them and to the people the powers not expressly delegated to the National Government are reserved. (Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 71, 76.) The power of the States to regulate their purely internal affairs by such laws as seem wise to the local authority is inherent and has never been surrendered to the General Government. (New York v. Milin, 11 Pet. 102, 139; Slaughter House cases, 16 Wall. 36, 63; Kidd v. Pearson, supra.) To sustain this statute would not be, in our judgment, a recognition of the lawful exertion of congressional authority over interstate commerce, but would sanction an invasion by the Federal power of the control of a matter purely local in its character, and over which no authority has been delegated to Congress in conferring the power to regulate commerce among the States.

Justice Day's decision in the above case is affirmed and sanctioned by the opinion of the court in Bailey versus Drexel Furniture Co., decided May 15, 1922, wherein Chief Justice Taft says:

The analogy of the Dagenhart case is clear. The congressional power over interstate commerce is, within its proper scope, just as complete and unlimited as the congressional power to tax, and the legislative motive in its exercise is just as free from judicial suspicion and inquiry. Yet when Congress threatened to stop interstate commerce in ordinary and necessary commodities, unobjectionable as subjects of transportation, and to deny the same to the people of a State, in order to coerce them into compliance with Congress's regulation of State concerns, the court said this was not in fact regulation of interstate commerce, but rather that of State concerns, and was invalid. So here the so-called tax is a penalty to coerce people of a State to act as Congress wishes them to act in respect of a matter completely the business of the State government under the Federal Constitution.

And he further adds:

It is the high duty and function of this court in cases regularly brought to its bar to decline to recognize or enforce seeming laws of Congress dealing with subjects not intrusted to Congress but left or committed by the supreme law of the land to the control of the States. We can not avoid the duty even though it requires us to refuse to give effect to legislation designed to promote the highest good. The good sought in unconstitutional legislation is an insidious feature because it leads citizens and legislators of good purpose to promote it without thought of the serious breach it will make in the ark of our covenant or the harm which will come from breaking down recognized standards.

See how the above principles have been violated in this law. The care of maternity and infant children might belong to either the State or Federal Government—not both, for if granted it belongs to the Federal Government; if not granted and not prohibited to the States it belongs to them, and the Supreme Court has decided that it belongs to the States. Then how can Congress act and, as in this law, appoint the Children's Bureau (a Federal agency) in Washington as the controlling agency to administer this work, which belongs to the States, and appoint its head as the chief executive administrator? Can a Federal officer enforce a State power? The Constitution with clearness keeps the powers, State and Federal, distinct. There is no overlapping or merging of the two. This law on its face pretends to give control of this subject to both State and Federal Governments, when only one can act, and overrides every principle of constitutional limitation in its long stride to socialism.

Under the Constitution the subjects of maternity and child welfare belong to the States. How then can the United States Government take part in their control? The statement of the proposition is its answer.

To enforce a State duty by a Federal officer is to change our Constitution. In like manner, the State agency must report its activities to the Children's Bureau (a Federal bureau) for its approval, and if disapproved the State gets no money; that is, the Children's Bureau controls the State maternity agency, or a Federal agency controls a State agency. So that the Congress (as under this law) has no power to do this, for it changes the Constitution of the United States. If maternity and infants be under care of the State, no other power is competent to interfere with their care.

If the State agency cooperating with the Children's Bureau is to work out this problem together, is it not, to the extent of its activities, "subjecting the Federal Government to the influence of a foreign power," and is not the autonomy of the United States curtailed to the extent of the State's interposition and control? So that even if Congress had power under the general welfare to appropriate money for this purpose, it could not, in doing so, change the Constitution, control its powers or subject it to the influence of a foreign power.

The object of this maternity law is to conserve the health of women and children, the object of which commends itself to all right-thinking people; but who is to do it? Chief Justice Marshall, in an extract from his opinion in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. 1), heretofore quoted, speaking of the reserved powers of the States, says they represent—that immense mass of legislation, which embraces everything within the territory of a State, not surrendered to the General Government; all which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description * * *

Can the location of the power to control the welfare of maternity and infancy be more clearly described than in this language of the great chief justice?

Another witness that ungranted powers remain with the States is George Bancroft. He says:

That all power not granted to the General Government remained with the States was the opinion of every member of the convention; but they held it a work of supererogation to place in the Constitution an express recognition of the reservation. (Bancroft's History of the United States Constitution, vol. 2, p. 91.)

The adoption of the tenth amendment only ratified what already existed.

III

If Judge Story's and Mr. Hamilton's view of the construction of this clause be accepted as valid, this maternity law is still open to the objection that it does not embrace the general welfare of the Union. Judge Story is very specific in pointing this out and showing that the welfare contemplated is that of all the people; not a part; not a section; not a class, but the whole people; and the appropriation carried by this law does not measure up to these requirements. It is an appropriation on conditions, not absolute; and the Congress makes as one of its conditions that there shall be a consideration for this appropriation, and that consideration is a contribution by the States of an equal amount to be given by the several States. In other words, this benefaction (if benefaction it be) is purchased by the States; and they can not have it, unless they pay for it with a sum equal that given by the Federal Government. If Congress has the power, as is claimed, to provide for the general welfare of the people, surely that does not give Congress the power to sell that general welfare for a fixed price.

In the days of her degeneracy it is said all things were for sale in Rome, political influence and offices, while every man was said to have his price; but it has been left to the United States in the passage of this law to add an additional item to this catalogue of corruption, to wit—the open sale of the benefactions of the Government of the United States. The appropriation, therefore, under this bill does not extend to the people of all of the States, for it is upon conditions, and these conditions may never be complied with by some of the States. Indeed, it is stated that even now there are five States of the Union that have not complied with the provisions of this bill. Does its application to Virginia, with New York and Massachusetts left out, make a general welfare? Or can its application to 43 States with 5 left out be considered the general welfare? When this law was passed, at that moment, what people of the United States could claim its benefits? None. What States received its benefactions? Not one. It does not contain a gift to all the States (general welfare) to be forfeited on a condition subsequent; but it is a gift to some, to those who on condition precedent accept its terms. But those who may accept do not make the "general welfare" unless all accept, and at this time five States have not complied and one State has challenged it in the courts. Can such be for the general welfare that requires all to receive its benefits? The object of the law is said to be to promote "the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy." What a field of endeavor arises before the mind in contemplating such a purpose. "The welfare and hygiene" of all the child-bearing women of the country through 10 months of travail and labor and that of all the infant children from their birth to their majority causes those less brave and less daring than the proponents of this law to stand aghast at the proposition here presented. And what is meant by "the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy"?

When does it begin? And where does it end? In what does it consist? Those words open up a vista in future appropriations that would cause a smile of derision to come when any shall speak despairingly of the present enormous debt of the country. "General welfare" of children! Embracing all the children now living or that shall be born in the future. Can anyone doubt that education—mental, moral, physical—that proper oversight of the excesses of youth, the care of diet, the preservation of teeth, of eyes, and of hearing, the removal of tonsils, the care of the nose and throat, must be provided to meet the welfare of the child, to say nothing of vocational training and professional education and the valuable adjuncts which foreign travel and the acquisition of foreign languages would be in molding the highest type of American citizenship?

IV

Admitting the conclusion of Judge Story that the words "the general welfare" in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution do not grant a substantive power to Congress, but do grant power to appropriate money for any purpose which Congress may deem wise, the maternity law is unconstitutional.

The distinction is here made between the power of Congress to create and the power of Congress to appropriate money to build up and support that which has already been created. Under this construction, Congress would have no power to establish a university in one of the States, for that would be a substantive power, but Congress would have power to appropriate money to a university already established in a State. A further distinction must be noted as to the object for which the appropriation is made.

Congress has power by specific grant to establish post offices, and under it may build a post-office building in any State. Congress may thereafter appropriate money to that post-office building to keep it in repair, but it does that under the coefficient clause of the Constitution—to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, etc.

But if the object of the appropriation be one not given to the control of Congress under the Constitution but belonging to the States, such an appropriation is not, under Judge Marshall's definition, bona fide appropriate, for he has said:

Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive power of the States. (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1.)

This maternity law is, therefore, open to the objection that it does not confine itself to the appropriation of money, but in detail builds up a great organization and then appropriates money to it. If this organization is to carry out a power that is given to Congress in the Constitution, there could be no objection to it. If this organization is to carry out by the joint action of the State and Nation a power which rests with the States, it must be declared unconstitutional and void, because to the extent that the Federal Government undertakes the discharge of a State function to that extent it is transgressing the limitations of the Constitution; a fortiori, if the organization is constituted by the Federal Government to carry out alone a State power it is null and void. An examination of the law will show the completeness and extent of such organization.

The first section of the law provides that its object is to promote "the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy," and we are left to conjecture in inspecting other provisions of the bill what this means. It is as broad as human suffering and as general as human misery.

Section 3 provides for a board of "maternity and infant hygiene," to be composed of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. Their duties are quite limited, and only referred to in sections 7, 8, and 11. The administration of the act is given in two sections—section 3 and section 11.

Section 3 declares:

The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor shall be charged with the administration of this act, except as herein otherwise provided, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer.

Section 11 declares:

STATE CONTROL OF ADMINISTRATION OF ACT

This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the various States control of the administration of this act within their respective States, subject only to the provisions and purposes of this act.

If there be any provision in the act giving the States any control over its administration, I fail to find it. The State agency must use the money as the Children's Bureau approves or it will get no more the next year, and it is further specifically denied the right to use any of it for buildings or for maternity pensions, gifts, etc. If one is restricted in certain particulars in the use of money and is subject to the will and approval of another in its expenditure, he is not a free agent, but is merely the agent of the latter. These facts justify the conclusion that the act is to be administered by the Children's Bureau. Let any man point to the power in the Constitution that authorizes a Federal bureau to determine how the taxes of the people of Virginia may be spent.

Section 2 provides for continuing appropriation of five years of certain amounts to the several States on condition that—an equal sum has been appropriated for that year by the legislature of such State for the maintenance of the services and facilities provided for in this act.

And in order to secure the benefits of the act, its provisions must be accepted by the legislative authority of the States (or by the governor in certain cases), and the legislature must designate or authorize the creation of a State agency "with which the Children's Bureau shall cooperate as herein provided in the administration of the provisions of this act," provided the State agency of health. If there be such, shall administer the provisions of this act.

Section 8 requires that the above State agency of health shall "submit to the Children's Bureau detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act within such State." These plans are to be subject to the approval of the board. This gives the board the absolute power of determining methods, procedure, and so forth, and compels the State agency to supply the State's money for uses to be approved by a Federal board, and from which the State is excluded; and this is the more remarkable since the purposes of its uses ("the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy") is entirely under State control, and from which the Federal Government is excluded.

This shows the State agency can not start in its work until the Children's Bureau shall approve its plan of operation, and the money appropriated to the State can not be used by the State agency until such plans are submitted to the Children's Bureau and approved. Then section 11 provides:

Each State agency cooperating with the Children's Bureau under this act shall make such reports concerning its operations and expenditures as shall be prescribed or requested by the bureau. The Children's Bureau may, with the approval of the board, and shall, upon request of a majority of the board, withhold any further certificate provided for in section 10 hereof whenever it shall be determined as to any State that the agency thereof has not properly expended the money paid to it or the moneys herein required to be appropriated by such State for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act.

It is seen from these sections that not only must plans be submitted by the State agency that must meet the approval of the Children's Bureau, but that after such plans have been carried out by the State agency, unless their work meets the approval of said bureau, the certificate for the next year will be denied that State and no money be given; but, mirabile dictu! the Children's Bureau, under the above provision, not only has the power to dictate the mode and manner of the expenditure of money for this purpose given by the Federal Government, but, by this section, has the power to control the money given by the State and administered by the State agency for this purpose, as indicated in the words in italics above. Could mastery by one government over another be more complete than this? Here an agency of the Federal Government can first dictate the plan of action to be followed by the State agency, and though the plan may have been approved, yet, if its execution does not conform to the ideas of propriety of said agency, further appropriations by Congress will be denied the State; and this is followed by the astounding fact that the failure of the State agency to spend the State's money as the Federal Government's agency deems proper will result in a failure to get a certificate for an appropriation for the next year. Could Federal control over State functions and State agencies be more complete? If the care of maternity and infancy belongs to the State, can this law, which puts such care in charge of the Federal Government, be constitutional?

Section 12 provides that no money apportioned to the States under this act shall be applied to the purchase, erection, or repair of any building, or rentals of any buildings or lands, or "for the payment of any maternity or infancy pension, stipend, or gratuity." No such prohibition is made as to the funds appropriated by the Federal Government. Why? Is it because there may be already on the calendars of Congress bills looking to that end?

The above represents the great structure which is attempted to be builded by Congress in this law under the "general welfare" clause, which all, including Judge Story, hold, embraces no substantive grant of power. This structure therefore places the position of these opposed to the law on impregnable ground.

In conclusion, I have sought in my speech in the House on March 3, 1926, to show that Congress, under the "general welfare" clause, has not the power to appropriate money for any purposes which it may deem suitable; and in support of that view I have shown that the convention which proposed the Constitution to the people had before it, in several forms, this unlimited power of Congress to legislate in all matters for the interests of the Union, and it was rejected six times. It would seem that this should end the argument. We have shown that Judge Story and Mr. Pomeroy alone among the law writers indorse this view, while arrayed against them are Madison, Jefferson, Marshall, Cooley, Judge Miller, Hare, Von Holst, Willoughby, Tucker, Judges Brewer and James Wilson, and B. J. Sage.

I have attempted to show that the atmosphere surrounding the making of the Constitution was so deeply impregnated with the fear of Federal power that no article containing what is now claimed for this could ever have become a part of the Constitution; that if the expression "the general welfare" had no such meaning when proposed by the Federal convention, or when ratified by the people it can have no such meaning now. But even if Judge Story's position be accepted as correct, this law is still unconstitutional, for, while he claims the right of Congress to appropriate money for any purpose deemed by it to be for the "general welfare," he denied to Congress any power of legislation, under this clause, of a substantive character, so that this law must still be deemed unconstitutional (1) because the welfare is not general but special and (2) because the law first creates a structure to receive the gift (which Judge Story says is denied to Congress) and then attempts to land the appropriation in the created organism.

If a Federal bureau can determine how the taxes of the people of Virginia can be used, this law is constitutional; but who among those who voted for it will claim such a power?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing 15 telegrams that I have received in reference to the George W. English impeachment case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, are these the same telegrams mentioned by the gentleman the other day in reference to the action the House took in the matter of Judge English?

Mr. BOWLING. There is nothing in the telegrams in relation to the action of the House. They were received before the House took action. There is nothing in them reflecting on the action of the House.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RECEPTION TO PAN AMERICAN JOURNALISTS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the House is highly honored this morning by having present in the galleries some very distinguished visitors, the delegates to the Pan American Journalists' Congress. [Applause.]

In honor of these distinguished visitors I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas, Mr. WURZBACH, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, Mr. DAVILA, have unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed in the aggregate 30 minutes, their addresses to be in Spanish, and that immediately following each address the Clerk read from the desk a translation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas, Mr. WURZBACH, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, Mr. DAVILA, may address the House for a period of not to exceed 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, we are honored to-day with the presence of most distinguished visitors, journalists from our sister Republics of the south. We welcome them as friends, and we welcome them as men having political ideas and ideals identical with our own. [Applause.]

Our Republic, older in years, has been not only the pattern but the inspiration for theirs. Theirs, like ours, were born in bloody revolutions, consecrated by heroic sacrifice and service. Theirs, also like ours, are dedicated to the principle of civil, religious, and political liberty. They have with us a common origin, a common duty, and, let us all fervently hope and pray, a common glorious destiny. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I shall now, in behalf and in the name of the House of Representatives, express a few words of greeting in the Spanish language to our most welcome guests.

Señores, Periodistas reunidos de las grandes repúblicas de la familia Panamericana, al saludaros en nombre de esta Cámara de Representantes, siento sincero placer, en extenderos bienvenidas.

Estamos seguros de que nosotros de las Américas—siempre amigos—igualmente lo seremos en el porvenir. Nuestros intereses y nuestra prosperidad están extensivamente ligados, llamados, al parecer, a un desarrollo común.

No puede desistir en reconocer a la Unión Panamericana como elemento importante para el entendimiento y acuerdo de nuestros pueblos. Sus esfuerzos han traído un conocimiento más cierto del punto de vista y de las opiniones en las hermanas naciones del Nuevo Mundo. Su éxito se manifiesta claramente en la numerosa y amigable concurrencia de hoy.

La prensa sirve como medio íntimo de la expresión de amistad y confraternidad internacional. Bien sabemos que al regresar, vos llevaréis un interés y apreciación para nuestros problemas comunes, sentimiento cuya expresión servirá como mensaje de acercamiento cordial cada día creciente entre las Américas.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the translation.

The Clerk, Mr. William Tyler Page, read the translation, as follows:

Gentlemen, journalists of the great nations of the Pan American Union, on behalf of the House of Representatives I extend you greetings and express our pleasure at your coming. [Applause.]

We of the Americas have always been friends, and I am confident we always will be friends. Our interests and our prosperity are to a great extent dependent upon each other and must develop together. The Pan American Union has been a large factor in the understanding and friendship of our nations. Its efforts from the beginning have been to bring to each nation clearer understanding of the viewpoint and opinions of the people of its neighbors, and its success is well exemplified by the large and friendly representation here to-day. [Applause.]

The newspapers are the immediate channel of the expression of good will and fellowship among nations, and we know that you will take with you on your return a feeling of friendship and sympathetic interest in our individual and mutual problems which will find its expression in a message to your people that will stimulate the ever-growing bond of friendship between the Americas. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent of the House, I shall deliver my address in Spanish:

Se me presenta hoy la más brillante oportunidad de hacer oír mi voz en este congreso, con la autoridad que me da la circunstancia de ser el único miembro representante aquí de un país de origen latino, en ocasión en que bajo las bóvedas de este Capitolio se recibe a los heraldos de la cultura y la civilización de los pueblos latino-americanos.

La celebración del Primer Congreso Pan Americano de Periodistas es de una trascendencia extraordinaria y sus provechosos efectos habrán de beneficiar, por igual, a la América latina y a la América sajona. Servirá para despertar una mutua confianza entre ambos pueblos; una más íntima compenetración de ideales y propósitos entre las dos razas de este hemisferio y abrirá el camino hacia una perfecta identificación de unos y otros en el ideal común de engrandecer la América haciendo más firmes cada vez sus ideales de libertad y democracia y más consistentes cada día sus instituciones de humanidad y de justicia.

Puerto Rico, la Isla que yo represento en este alto sitio, ocupa también, en la persona de sus representantes, su puesto en el congreso que se inaugura hoy, contribuyendo así, de manera directa, al éxito del noble propósito que persiguen los organizadores de este magno acontecimiento. Es motivo de legítimo orgullo para mí saber que Puerto Rico es también un colaborador en la obra iniciada de estrechar las relaciones entre los pueblos del Norte y del Sur. La peculiar situación en que se encuentra Puerto Rico, siendo un pueblo de origen latino que convive hoy al amparo de la bandera y las instituciones de esta Nación, lo ponen en condiciones de aspirar a ser el lazo de unión entre las dos razas de la América. Puerto Rico es la mejor evidencia de como es posible para un pueblo asimilar los principios en que se basan las instituciones de otro pueblo de distinto origen; aprovecharse de sus virtudes; convivir en una íntima comunión de ideas; ser leal a sus instituciones y conservar, no obstante, las tradiciones, el idioma y las costumbres que heredara de sus pobladores y colonizadores.

Puerto Rico no ha renegado nunca de su origen; ama y venera sus tradiciones; siente amor de hermano hacia los pueblos de su raza y de su estirpe; pero en la corriente en que el destino lo ha colocado se desenvuelve victoriosamente haciendo vida americana en la acción y en la convivencia; pero haciendo vida latina en el sentimiento y en la tradición.

Situado en el Caribe, entre las dos Américas, Puerto Rico puede llegar a ser el puente por donde puedan pasar para abrazarse estas dos civilizaciones que si son distintas no son antagónicas y llegar así a comprenderse y a estimarse para laborar unidas y hermanadas para beneficio de ambas.

Estos adalides de la intelectualidad latina, de regreso a sus países, llevarán seguramente el eco de las virtudes y los esfuerzos de esta gran Nación y cuando tengan oportunidad de conocer de cerca al verdadero pueblo americano, a ese pueblo justiciero y democrático de Washington y Lincoln, procurarán realizar una labor de concordia y armonía y se convertirán en paladines de una más franca, sincera y firme inteligencia entre estos pueblos del continente.

El éxito de este congreso dependerá seguramente de la buena fe con que todos laboren; de la amplitud de miras con que todos estudien los problemas y en que todos actúen con absoluta ausencia de prejuicios, atentos solo a la obtención del mayor beneficio posible en favor de la felicidad de América.

Tal vez ahora mismo los espíritus libertarios de Bolívar y Washington, fundadores de estos pueblos, estén prestos a inspirar a todos estos delegados para conseguir así que de sus juiciosas deliberaciones y de sus luminosas ideas surja mañana una perfecta confederación de naciones que haga perdurable en la historia el esfuerzo realizado por las espadas redentoras de esos dos inmortales caudillos. Ojalá que así sea!

Hijos de Bolívar y Sucre, bienvenidos a la patria de Washington y Lincoln. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DAVILA. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I know that it will please the distinguished Delegate from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA] to know that the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has practically agreed to report favorably his bill, which will permit certain residents of Porto Rico who still hold allegiance to Spain to have the right to travel back and forth between Spain and Porto Rico as they please.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that very much. We of Porto Rico have always had confidence in the justice of the American people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk of the House will now read the translation of the speech of the Delegate from Porto Rico.

The Clerk, Mr. William Tyler Page, read as follows:

I am to-day given the most brilliant opportunity of making my voice heard in this Congress, under the authority which is given me by the fact that I am the only Member of this body who represents here a country of Latin origin, on the occasion of the appearance under the domes of this Capitol of the heralds of the culture and civilization of the Spanish-speaking peoples of the American continent.

This gathering of the First Pan American Congress of Journalists is one of extraordinary transcendence and the work that is done here will have the effect of benefiting equally Latin-America and Saxon-America. It will serve to diffuse a mutual confidence amongst the two peoples, one of the most intimate interpretation of ideals and tendencies between the two races of this hemisphere, and will open the road toward a perfect identification of the ones with the others in the common ideal of the aggrandizement of America, making firmer each time their ideals of liberty and democracy and more consistent each day their institutions of humanity and justice.

Porto Rico, the island which I represent in this high place, occupies, also, in the person of its representatives, a post in the Congress which is inaugurated by you to-day, thus contributing in a direct manner to the success of the noble plan which the organizers of this great idea had in view. It is a matter of legitimate pride for me, to know that Porto Rico is also a collaborator in the work initiated here to tighten the relations between the peoples of the North and of the South. The peculiar situation of Porto Rico in being a people of Latin origin which joins to-day in the support of the flag and the institutions of this Nation, places our island in a position to aspire to being the link of union between the two races of America. [Applause.] Porto Rico is the best evidence of the way in which it is possible for a people to assimilate the principles on which are based the institutions of another people of different origin, to take advantage of its virtues, to live together with that other people in a common intimacy of ideas, to be loyal to those institutions, and yet to conserve the traditions, the language, and the customs which it inherits from its original populators and colonizers.

Porto Rico has never denied its origin; it loves and venerates its traditions; it has a brotherly love for the countries of its race and stock; living an American life in deed; a Latin life in sentiment and tradition.

Situated on the Caribbean, between the two Americas, Porto Rico may well hope to be the bridge across which these two civilizations, different but not antagonistic, can stretch hands and learn to understand and appreciate each other, that they may labor together, fraternally, to their mutual benefit. [Applause.]

These champions of Latin culture on returning to their countries will certainly carry back the echo of the virtues and endeavors of this great Nation, and after having had this opportunity for a close-up study of the real American people will endeavor to perform a work of harmony and will become champions of a more frank, sincere, and firm understanding between the peoples of this continent. [Applause.]

The success of this Congress will depend surely on the good faith with which all labor, on the breadth of vision with which all study the problems and which actuate all with absolute absence of prejudices, seeking only to obtain the greatest benefit possible for the happiness of America.

Perhaps in this very hour the liberating spirits of Bolivar and Washington, founders of these peoples, are present here to inspire all these delegates to the end that their wise and illumined deliberations may bloom to-morrow in a perfect confederation of nations which may make forever permanent in history the efforts put forward by the redeeming swords of these two immortal leaders. [Applause.] We pray that this may be.

Sons of Bolivar and of Sucre, welcome to the fatherland of Washington and Lincoln. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. UPSHAW. I rise to supplement these words of beautiful greeting to our distinguished visitors from the Latin Americas and ask the privilege, not only as an individual Member of Congress but speaking for each of us in this House, I am sure to say to each of them, "dios le bendiga." [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, Chief Clerk of the Senate, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 3921. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to enter into an agreement with the Clarendon Community Sewerage Co., granting it a right of way for a trunk-line sewer through the Fort Myer Military Reservation and across the military highways in Arlington County, Va.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) authorizing the Librarian of Congress to return to Solomon's Lodge, No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons, of Georgia, the minute book of the Savannah (Ga.) Masonic Lodge.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate inform the House of Representatives that the Senate is ready to receive the managers appointed by the House for the purpose of exhibiting articles of impeachment preferred against George W. English, Judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Illinois, agreeably to the notice communicated to the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 1144. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to acquire a tract of land for use as a landing field at the air intermediate depot, near the city of Little Rock, in the State of Arkansas.

S. 1250. An act to amend an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1883.

S. 1462. An act permitting Leo Sheep Co., of Rawlins, Wyo., to convey certain lands to the United States and to select other lands in lieu thereof, in Carbon County, Wyo., for the improvement of the Medicine Bow National Forest.

S. 1746. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer the Barnegat Light Station to the State of New Jersey.

S. 1809. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at the city of Vincennes, Knox County, Ind.

S. 2029. An act to authorize the use by the city of Tucson, Ariz., of certain public lands for a municipal aviation field, and for other purposes.

S. 2530. An act authorizing the use of the funds of any tribe of Indians for payments of insurance premiums for protection of the property of the tribe against fire, theft, tornado, and hail.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to propound a unanimous-consent request in respect to the business of the House. I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the completion of the naval aviation bill the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may call up for not to exceed two days any one or all of the following bills: The civil aviation bill (S. 41), the bill respecting commercial attachés (H. R. 3858), the light-house bill (H. R. 10060), and the black bass bill (H. R. 71).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that after the passage of the naval aviation bill the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have two days in which to call up for consideration any or all of the bills enumerated by the gentleman from Connecticut. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman consulted with the minority members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. TILSON. I understood from the chairman of that committee that it is the desire of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to pursue this course.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Has the matter been submitted to the committee as a whole?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I will say that it has been the general impression and talk for a month by those on the committee that these measures would be brought up under some such arrangement as has just been announced by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Have these bills been unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; they have.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is my impression, possibly with the exception of the black bass bill. I think there was one dissenting vote on that bill.

Mr. TILSON. Gentlemen should understand that this is not a request for unanimous consent for the passage of these bills. The sole purpose of the request is to save the trouble and time it would take to secure a rule under which these bills might be considered. Unanimous consent will not obligate anyone to support any of the bills.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And these bills will not be considered under suspension of the rules.

Mr. TILSON. No, no; under the general rules of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Connecticut consulted me concerning the matter, and I was given to understand that this method of procedure is agreeable to the minority members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. TILSON. I so understood.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know whether they are for or against the bill, but I understood that this method of procedure is agreeable, instead of having to bring in a rule.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my only object in asking the question is that the Record may show that it is the unanimous request and that no member of the committee has any objection to it. Else I would have called for a quorum to see whether anyone made objection and that he might have the opportunity to do so if he desired.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Connecticut if it is contemplated to assign a similar day to the military aviation bill, which has been reported to the House, so that it may also be heard as well as the civil aviation bill?

Mr. TILSON. No; I may say that it is not. The circumstances under which this request is made are somewhat peculiar. Earlier in the session the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce brought in the so-called railway labor bill and consumed the two Calendar Wednesdays to which that committee would have been entitled under the rule. The magnitude of the bill entitled it to a special rule, but this would have taken time needed for appropriation bills. At that time it was promised—although it was a sort of gentlemen's agreement, to be sure, and without order from the House—that some time later in the session an effort would be made to secure for the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee two days in which to consider bills which otherwise would have been considered on Calendar Wednesday. I am now making good that promise.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the Committee on Military Affairs at its session to-day passed a resolution requesting or directing the chairman to make a request of this nature to the steering committee and to the leaders, and I trust that when that request is submitted to the committee it will receive the same consideration as has been accorded to the naval aviation bill and the civil aviation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. No; we have a rule on the naval aviation bill.

Mr. TILSON. I have no doubt that the same degree of consideration will be given to the bill the gentleman from New York refers to when the time comes. It is understood, of course, that the naval aviation bill follows the legislative appropriation bill, which must be gotten out of the way before the naval aviation bill is taken up, and then the bills from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will follow the naval aviation bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman that as to two of the bills he mentioned as contemplated for consideration there was very substantial opposition in the committee. There was opposition to two of them. There will be opposition on the floor, as I understand it.

Mr. TILSON. This does not imply unanimous consent to the passage of bills, but only as to the question of consideration, thereby saving the necessity of a rule.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman is asking for two days only?

Mr. TILSON. That is all; two days.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman tell us if he is able to foresee when the legislative bill will be passed? How many more days of general debate will there be?

Mr. TILSON. The general debate will be closed to-morrow. The time has been fixed. We are quite certain it will be passed to-morrow.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman eliminate the bill relating to commercial attachés? It seems to me you have too big a calendar to undertake for only two days.

Mr. TILSON. The request is that we may consider any or all of these bills. The committee will have two days in which to consider them.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think that is too important a bill to be rushed through in that manner.

Mr. PARKER. Is the gentleman familiar with the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am.

Mr. PARKER. The Committee on Agriculture is now in harmony with respect to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1226) to amend the trading with the enemy act, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had ordered that Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. KING serve as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 178) authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HARRELD, Mr. CAMERON, and Mr. KENDRICK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved bill of the following title:

On April 6, 1926:

H. R. 7732. An act amending act of March 4, 1925, for the relief of employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Bethlehem, Pa.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 2602. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Henry H. Sibley, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The call rests with the Committee on Agriculture. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Agriculture.

PROMOTION OF AGRICULTURE BY EXPANDING FOREIGN FIELDS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10129.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the bill H. R. 10129. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10129. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10129, with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10129, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10129) to promote the agriculture of the United States by expanding in the foreign field the service now rendered by the United States Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing useful information regarding agriculture, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire about the time?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule as to Calendar Wednesday one hour is allowed to each side. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is a good bill. It was passed by the House once before, in the last days of the last Congress, and failed consideration in the Senate.

I want to take this occasion to assure the House that this is one of many important small bills which the Committee on Agriculture has and that the hearings on the farm-relief measure have proceeded to such an extent now that I feel sure that the members of the Committee on Agriculture will agree with me that we are going to have a bill in conformity with the agreement that we had with the American people, which will be enacted into law before this Congress adjourns, for the relief of agriculture. [Applause.]

Now if the House will pardon me for a little bit, I want to advert to some of the observations that were made here yesterday by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I do not know why the gentleman, every year or so, feels called upon to devote 15 or 20 minutes of his valuable time to the discussion of a mere man like me. I had not referred to him yesterday at all; neither had I confided to him any of my ambitions. It seems he had got hold of a newspaper, a rather friendly Democratic newspaper, in which the editor stated to the people in all candor, I think, that he thought I would make a good Vice President. I would not object, if I were going to stay in public life, to be Vice President under certain circumstances, but I would not want to be Vice President if my friend LONGWORTH were President, because I do not want to hold a stop watch on NICK LONGWORTH at any time, and I understand the principal function of a Vice President is to be solicitous about the health of the President. [Laughter.]

I agree with my friend from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in this, that ambition will make men do things that are honest that they probably would not do if it were not for the ambition. Unlike the gentleman from Texas, however, my ambition for public service has been absolutely gratified. It was my ambition as a boy, of which I shall never be ashamed, to come to the American Congress and serve a term or two in the greatest lawmaking body in the world, and associate with great men like my friend CONNALLY from Texas. [Applause.] That ambition has been gratified; nay, doubly so. I have had two more terms than I ever anticipated, and I am going into private life as happy a man as lives in America and with no ambition for elective or appointive office.

I can understand the reasoning of the gentleman from Texas. I do not want to be personal, but I want to tell this House that I found out last night exactly the thing that prompts him. I have it reliably—more reliably than from a Republican or Democratic newspaper—from close personal friends that ever since the day my good friend from Texas went to Teddy Roosevelt, when they were about to have the war with Spain, and with those curls hanging down his back, as he so ably described on this floor one day, and said, "Teddy, I want to serve the public; I want to die for my country," that he has been ambitious, and most of the time since then he has been serving his country. I am not discounting that service, but my information is that he is ambitious, if they can ever unseat a Republican President and get a Democratic President, to be our country's representative at the Court of St. James. [Laughter and applause.] I do not know that a man could have a more worthy ambition than that. I can understand how he is finding fault with this propaganda that I might be Vice President and might want to go to the Court of St. James before I get through. But I will tell you how much better fitted he is than I would be for the Court of St. James. No constituent will ever pull at his coat tails; no one will ever make fun of his form; no one will ever have the nerve to stand on the floor of the American Congress and joke my friend CONNALLY about his form—the dapper, flapper, Beau Brummell, and Grecian beauty of the American Congress. [Laughter.]

Why, gentlemen, can you contemplate anything more grand than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] with silk pants coming down to his knees and with little silver buckles on his slippers at a court function in England? And he is preparing himself for it. I want to pause here to say that if they do dress you up over there like they did Colonel Harvey or any of them, that in the name of America and in the name of the women of America, do not let them powder your hair. [Laughter.]

Now, let us have a picture of the first banquet, the first court banquet they have in Great Britain. Let us see whether he has earned his spurs. And, by the way, if Mr. LONGWORTH is elected President, I will not even be a candidate against you for that place; I will even recommend you to him, because you have earned the place.

Imagine at this banquet table our friend, our polite and distinguished friend from Texas. He is going to make a speech and he says, "Mr. King, I earned the spurs I wear to-night. O Mr. King, during my long service in the American Congress I never missed an opportunity to speak against any tariff that would open American factories to the detriment of yours. It is highly appropriate that I represent that great country here, because no man has been your friend like I have. I had the nerve—even when OLDFIELD's nerve failed and he would not say he was for the Underwood bill—when other Members faltered, Mr. King, to say that I was for that bill which protected English industry as against American industry. O Mr. King, I am entitled to the respect of every laboring man in England, because it was I that had the nerve to stand on the floor of the American Congress for years and plead for a policy that would give the English laboring man the same standard of living as the American laborer has. I refused on all occasions to vote for any bill that gave the American laboring man an American standard of living as against a world standard." And he can take statistics and show them how they were downtrodden during the administration of Coolidge under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, and truthfully prove that he has more right to their consideration than any man in America.

Oh, he can go further: "O King, I not only did not stop in my protest at opening American mills after the war; I not only did not stop in my protest against an American scale of wages and an American standard of living for labor, but I opposed it and I alone announced, two or three years after it was passed, that I had the nerve to go back to the Underwood tariff bill, which, O King, if we had kept it on the statute books long enough, would have reduced American agriculture to the status of English agriculture and made peasants of our farmers."

No. I do not want to go to England. I am not ambitious for his place. I could not wear the silk panties with any style;

I would not look like anything [laughter and applause], and God knows I could not make the speech he can make and be consistent.

I do not know whether these folks have misled me, but I think they have picked an ideal candidate for the place. He is in shape to prove to them over there that he has always been their friend, because he said yesterday on this floor that he favored a return to the Underwood tariff law for agriculture in this country, and his own colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], said it was the only tariff law that had left agriculture entirely out and that every dollar of it went to New England.

I think sometimes it is good for us all to talk about these things. We ought to know the qualifications of one another. I do not know whether I would make a good Vice President or not. I know I am not ambitious for the position. I do know that he has earned his spurs to represent this great country at the Court of St. James, and he will make her statesmen look like 30 cents when he gets on those knee pants and silver buckles. Not only that, but what could be more exalting to the womanhood of the world than to know that the most beautiful man in the American Congress had been selected to represent us at the court. I could not go. I can not even do the Charleston. [Laughter.] I have no qualifications for the place, but I hope that the Members of the House will treat this matter seriously, and whoever the President is, let us send the men to the foreign countries that stood for the foreign countries and maybe we can get better treatment from them. We could not send a man there who voted for the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill because he would not be qualified. He would have to admit he believed in an American standard of living and an American scale of wages, and that he was absolutely opposed to reducing the American farmer to a state of peasantry. No, Mr. Chairman, I am not qualified for this job.

I think you are all for Mr. CONNALLY, and all I wanted to do was to convince you that he ought to be appointed, so I thank you very much. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time has been used?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been used 13 minutes.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 13 minutes. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am deeply grateful to my generous friend from Kansas for the many splendid tributes he paid to me and for his suggestion that I would make an acceptable ambassador to the Court of St. James.

The gentleman made a good many personal references about the kind of attire I would wear and things of that kind. Of course, I scorn those things. My conception of an ambassador is something more than that seemingly entertained by the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman from Kansas seems to have the conception that the chief function of an ambassador is to wear clothes and eat food, and perhaps other things that make food taste good. [Laughter.] My conception of an ambassador representing the great Government of the United States, if in accordance with his suggestion I ever become one, is to try to uphold the dignity and the interests of my country.

The gentleman made some reference here, as he did on one other occasion, to some inconspicuous war service I tried to render. If I were the ambassador at the Court of St. James, I would try to represent my country on foreign soil in time of peace with the same fidelity and the same interest that other men represented my country on foreign soil in time of war. [Applause.]

I remember the gentleman from Kansas in 1918 when he first came here, when the rest of the Members, many of whom are now here, were in this Chamber trying to carry on and uphold the President of the United States in the prosecution of the greatest war that ever shook the foundations of the globe, the gentleman from Kansas was out in his district in his initial campaign trying to get to Congress by criticizing and denouncing the great President and a Democratic Congress who were then carrying on that war in 1918. [Applause.]

If I should go to the Court of St. James, let me say to the gentleman from Kansas, that instead of spending my time over the banal things of clothes and social entertainment and food and aping, as he would have you think I would ape, which I would never do, Mr. Harvey, the Republican ambassador to the Court of St. James, who, as his most distinguished service there reflected upon the unselfish and lofty motives of his own country in the war [applause]; if I should go there I would try to represent the interests of my country in that capacity as I have tried to represent them here—to speak for all of the American people and not for a hand-picked few that the gentleman from Kansas has been representing on this floor.

Oh, let me say to the gentleman from Kansas there is nothing personal in what I say about him. I am trying to represent on this floor the interests of the whole American people and present the view that our side of the House maintains, as to how those interests can best be served. The gentleman from Kansas is the first man, so far as he and I are concerned, that ever made any personal reference. But he gets off on the tariff and his reported candidacy for Vice President. Unfortunately, the gentleman would never make a successful Vice President. You know the function of a Vice President is to sit still and keep his mouth shut. [Laughter and applause.]

I understand that the newspaper from which I quoted on yesterday an account as to the candidacy of the gentleman from Kansas for Vice President is a Democratic newspaper, and the gentleman has evinced a great deal of happiness and satisfaction over the fact that the headlines announcing him for Vice President came from a Democratic paper. Well, the Democratic papers are the only papers that want the gentleman to run for Vice President. [Applause.]

The gentleman talks about the tariff. This is an agricultural bill that is up this morning to help the farmer. The gentleman yesterday made a great speech about how the tariff was helping the farmer, but as further proof that the gentleman would never be a successful Vice President, he talks too much. The gentleman talked some years ago—on the 22d of May, 1924—in this Chamber.

I think it was on the McNary-Haugen bill, and in the debate the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] was on the floor. Here is what the gentleman from Kansas said in part:

Mr. TINCHER. * * * But now, when we come here and ask for a law that will give us a little fair chance we are called bolsheviks. I do not believe in a foreign standard of living. I do not believe in any foreign level of wages. As one of the western Republicans I want to say that I want to hold people up and am not willing to kick anybody else down. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Did you not have at the same time a tariff protecting agriculture?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, you can not protect agricultural products as you can manufactured products. We export agricultural products.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Did we not have an emergency tariff to protect agricultural products?

Mr. TINCHER. I will have a Democrat answer your emergency-tariff questions.

In 1924 Mr. TINCHER said you could not protect agricultural products; you could not protect the farmer with a high protective tariff, and he represented the western farmers and said they wanted something to help them besides a high protective tariff. And yet this morning he says he wants a tariff to help the farmers. Of course he knows it does not help the farmer, but in this enlarged horizon the gentleman from Kansas sees the alluring but evasive hope of the Vice Presidency. It is illusory, like the will-o'-the-wisp as its pursuer wanders into mud of the swamp following the ignis fatuus, it leads him on and on to despair and disappointment. The gentleman from Kansas, following this alluring hope of the vice presidential bee, which I doubt will ever sting him, may meet the same fate. [Laughter.] He is now for a high protective tariff, and he wants to denounce Great Britain. Let me remind the gentleman that Great Britain with a free-trade policy which the gentleman always denounces, but with the extreme free-trade policy of Great Britain, a little island, isolated, has been able to command and to-day commands the greatest commerce, the greatest world trade, on this globe without any protective tariff whatever. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We saw this morning sitting in the galleries the representatives of the Pan American press, representing the great countries to the south of us on this hemisphere, which, as eloquent gentlemen have said, have the same political ideas and ideals as we of the United States have. And yet, instead of the United States getting the trade of these countries, Great Britain has got the bulk of that trade.

I have been in Great Britain. I did not see any pauper labor. I did not see any poverty-stricken laborers. I saw British laborers riding in automobiles like they ride in this country.

Now, I do not want to be diverted from my main line of thought, to conditions in other countries. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY] sits in his seat violating all rules of order, and with a coarse guffaw tries to answer arguments in that way which he could not answer with his head. [Laughter.] Other gentlemen join, but if that is the type of parliamentary demeanor, the type of parliamentary courtesy that gentlemen on that side of the House want to display, they are free to do it. However, the section from which I come practices a different kind of courtesy.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen on this side do not laugh at the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I thank the gentleman from Kansas for his solicitude.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the gentleman from Kansas that that is quite an order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from Oklahoma does not know much about politics or parliamentary policy unless there is an order in it somewhere. He has got to have orders from somewhere, and if he did not get them from some one else he will get them from a tariff baron so that he may hijack his own farmers for the interest of other people who get the benefits of the tariff. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, is not it a fact that to-day nearly a million and a half people in England are living on doles of 10 shillings a week, with at least another million out of work?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It is true that there are many people in Great Britain on doles. Up in the State of Washington they are not on doles but they would like to be because from the Northwest we have been hearing the cry of distress and disaster, and the Agricultural Committee of which he is speaking has had hearings for two months, and at the doors of the committee come the cries from the Northwest saying, "For God's sake open up the Treasury and give us some kind of a dole."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman from Texas says that out in the far Northwest they are crying for doles and are now in distress. I want to say to the gentleman that nobody in the State of Washington is in any great distress except possibly those who make and manufacture shingles, who failed on account of the Senate's attitude to get a tariff in the last tariff act, and who now see Canadian shingle manufacturers in full enjoyment of the great United States market.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, all that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has proved by that interjection is his own inefficiency and inability as a Member of Congress to get a tariff for his shingle interests out there when his party was giving it to other special interests. He simply proves the iniquity and unfairness and discrimination of the Fordney bill for which he voted. [Laughter and applause on Democratic side.]

Just one other word, and then I am done. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] talks about the prandial enjoyments and the clothes of the gentleman from Texas when he gets to be an ambassador. What has the gentleman from Kansas done? Let me read to you from the headlines appearing in the last night's edition of the Washington Evening Star:

JARDINE OPPOSES FARM RELIEF BILL

Unprepared to indorse plan for fee on products, he tells Kansans.

Then the article underneath that goes on to say:

After an informal breakfast with the Kansas congressional delegation to-day, Secretary Jardine was described as not being prepared to indorse farm-relief legislation that would embody the plan for a fee on agricultural commodities to be used in handling the surplus problem.

The breakfast was given at the Capitol by Representative TINCHER, Republican. Mr. Jardine indicated, however, that Congress would enact additional farm legislation.

Breakfast at the Capitol! Breakfast! Gentlemen, the farmers in my district eat breakfast at from 5 o'clock in the morning until 6.30 o'clock in the morning, and the farmers of the district of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], if what he has been saying about their being hard-working people is true, must eat their breakfast somewhere about the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to yield me two more minutes.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I shall not need more than two. What time does the gentleman from Kansas get breakfast when he gets to Washington? At 7 o'clock? Oh, no; he has his breakfast at about the time of day his farmers are thinking about the noon meal, and he gives his breakfast in the Speaker's dining room in the Capitol. Let me say to the distinguished gentleman that if I ever get to the Court of

St. James I am going to eat breakfast at breakfast time. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, when I think of the gentleman from Kansas as he first came here and view him now, the speed with which he has gotten rid of his bucolic habits, his rustic accomplishments, makes me marvel. I knew him when he first came. The speed with which he has gotten rid of those old-fashioned habits rivals even the progress that he has made on the Republican side. They tell me that one of his constituents once came to Washington and that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCER] entertained him at a number of meals. The man went back to Kansas and was telling one of his neighbors about it. He said, "Bill, do you know that up there in Washington they don't have dinner at 12 o'clock like we do out here, but they have lunch, and then they have dinner at night." "Well," said Bill, "when in Sam Hill do they have supper?" and Bill said, "Why, they don't have that until the next day." [Laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that we have all greatly enjoyed the two splendid nominating speeches made by our two distinguished colleagues, and I think all of us, irrespective of our political affiliations, will agree that should either of these gentlemen by any good fortune chance to be called to the high stations with which their names are being connected this afternoon, each will grace the position with unusual credit to himself and honor to the country.

Having disposed of that very material matter, I want to address myself for a few moments to the bill under consideration and to say that in view of the fact that I apprehend there will be no contention with reference to it, I do not purpose to take any great amount of time. The measure which is brought here at this time for your approval was passed in its substantial form two years ago without division in the House. It provides simply for a recognition in the organic law of certain duties and activities that have been performed by the Department of Agriculture under continuing repetitions in appropriation bills for a number of years. At the present time we have abroad eleven representatives of the Department of Agriculture in what is known as the foreign service of the Department of Agriculture. I do not know the exact title they bear at the present time, but I think they are called agricultural commissioners. They look after the interests of this country so far as the development of agriculture is concerned. They make very careful observations of agricultural conditions in foreign countries, and they study cooperative movements. They study the demand for agricultural products and in every possible way undertake to cooperate with the Department of Agriculture on this side, and also with the Department of Commerce in securing information that will lead to an outlet for products grown on the American farms.

The first purpose of the bill is to fix these duties in the organic law. The second purpose of the bill is to overcome some of the difficulties that have developed by marking out distinctly the lines of activity between the various foreign services.

We have consular agents appointed by the Department of State, we have representatives of the Department of Commerce, and we also have representatives of the Department of Agriculture abroad. Heretofore there has been some overlapping of duties. There has been some difficulty due to the fact that we had upon the grounds men representing these various departments who were all interested in doing the best they could for the United States, but who did not always take into consideration the particular responsibility each had to bear. I am happy to say that under the terms of this bill, with the succeeding bill referred to in the unanimous-consent request preferred by the majority leader just a few moments ago, the Department of Commerce and the Department of Agriculture have come to an agreement, and we think the lines have been marked out very carefully in the two measures that are now about to have consideration, so that overlapping and duplication of effort in the future will be prevented.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Has the gentleman any information as to about how many attachés will be appointed?

Mr. KETCHAM. I had that matter up with the Department of Agriculture, and the present number of these employees, representatives of the Department of Agriculture, that would be affected by this bill is 11.

Mr. BYRNS. And those are all in foreign countries?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes; and it is not the purpose of this bill nor the purpose of the Department of Agriculture to increase that number.

Mr. BYRNS. In other words, it is not the purpose of this bill to increase the present number of employees? I understand that this bill provides for clerks and clerical force.

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes; the clerical force, the employees under the terms of this bill. It is not contemplated to increase them.

Mr. BYRNS. Are these men in Europe, or where?

Mr. KETCHAM. They are mostly in Europe. We have stations at the present time in London, Berlin, Vienna, Rome, and Mexico. Most of the representatives under that arrangement are in Europe and would be continued there.

Mr. BYRNS. The purpose of this bill is to accredit them to embassies and diplomatic posts rather than anything else?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. COLE. Is there anything in this bill covering our representation at Rome in the National Agricultural Assembly or Congress?

Mr. KETCHAM. No; except that one man under this bill is at present located at Rome.

May I say for the information of the House that the third purpose of the bill, aside from the two purposes I have already mentioned, is to give these representatives of the Department of Agriculture the same rank and station abroad that are now given to the representatives of the Department of State and the Department of Commerce.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. I would be glad to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I notice on page 3 there is a provision to the effect that the Secretary of Agriculture shall appoint the officers of the foreign agricultural service to such grades as he may establish, with salaries in those grades comparable to those paid to other officers of the Government for analogous service. Does the gentleman think that Congress ought to turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to establish the grades of this service?

Mr. KETCHAM. I may say, in response to the gentleman's question, that I had that very matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture, and he advised me that under the provisions of the bill at present the total salary list is $65,000, and if the bill passes with the arrangements of the other departments remaining as at the present time there will be absolutely no increase in the salaries paid to these men, even though they be given the rank the bill provides.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That will be for the present fiscal year, but I presume when he classifies them and puts them into certain grades it no doubt will result in increase of compensation, and Congress will have to make an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. KETCHAM. In my conversation I satisfied myself, in answer to the gentleman's question, that no effort would be made on the part of the department to do that.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. As to these men that are now serving in this field, are they not classified under the reclassification act of 1923?

Mr. KETCHAM. I am unable to say. I believe they are in the civil service.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I do not see why they should be removed and why they should not continue to be classified under the act of 1923. Of course, this takes them out and gives the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to make a classification himself, and not only a classification, but to fix the compensation.

Mr. KETCHAM. My understanding and information is as I have indicated to the gentleman. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas. I questioned particularly what might be the greatest possible increase of salaries should the Department of Commerce's pending bill be passed, and I was assured that the total amount of increase would not exceed, under the arrangements that might be in contemplation, over $5,000 in the total, so that the total amount could not be more than $70,000; and at any rate that matter will be handled subject to the approval of the House, even if it should be recommended by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. COLE. May I suggest that it might be well to place the agricultural foreign service under the same rules and regulations as those established by the Rogers bill for the Foreign Service in the State Department. We have nine grades in that, and the incumbents are promoted according to service and ability.

Mr. KETCHAM. My understanding is that the purpose of this bill has that in mind. I think all of us agree that if in these days we are going to do something of real benefit to agriculture this measure has in it possibilities of developing valuable outlets for our surplus agricultural products; and if there is anything that we can do by the passage of this legislation to stimulate that development I am sure it will be well conceived and worked out.

Now, for the information of the committee may I say this: That one additional reason why the provisions of this bill are deemed necessary is because when men go abroad as representatives of our Government they go into an atmosphere about which we have been told in very striking phrases in the two speeches that have just preceded. We have not very much patience with that idea on this side, but when an American official goes into that sort of atmosphere he should carry with him the rank and station and commission which would enable him on the showing of his credentials to receive all the credit and consideration that are due him as the representative of the great Department of Agriculture of the United States of America.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It seems that 11 men are inadequate. Why should we not add an increase in the number?

Mr. KETCHAM. It is not the purpose of the Department of Agriculture to increase that number, and I suppose that will receive the approval of the committee.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Under section (a) they shall acquire information regarding world competition and demand for agricultural products. In what respect does this bill differ from the marketing bill?

Mr. KETCHAM. This bill, in brief, sets up abroad activities that are now discharged by the Department of Agriculture at home in the foreign field.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Did not the marketing bill cover that?

Mr. KETCHAM. No. The provisions of this bill, you will note, are rather broad, and under its terms we can go into that particular feature if we are privileged to do it at home.

Mr. ALLGOOD. It is not covered in the marketing bill?

Mr. KETCHAM. No; it is not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if he can tell us what have been the practical results of this foreign service up to this time?

Mr. KETCHAM. Let me say that every day at 5 o'clock by radio from the other side come reports from these representatives of our Government. After these reports are thoroughly edited and compiled, they are communicated to the farm press, to the farmers of the country, and to all agencies interested in distribution. They are also given over to the Department of Commerce to be used in connection with their program of stimulating the sale of American products.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. What is the nature of those reports? They bear on what point?

Mr. KETCHAM. These reports cover every point that is covered in this bill in regard to the supply of various farm crops, in regard to cooperative marketing, and, in short, in regard to everything that will be of interest and of value to the farmers of the United States in adjusting their operations.

Mr. ROMJUE. In other words, they gather information as to the quantity of certain products in the foreign countries?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes; and in that way we not only know what our own surplus or our own shortage may be, but we also know the world situation.

Mr. ROMJUE. Can the gentleman give us any idea as to the extension of the activities of these representatives over there in addition to the activities they already have?

Mr. KETCHAM. I should only want them to be extended in line with the provisions of the bill. I would want them to do anything they can do that will stimulate the sale of our products or stimulate an interest in them. I would certainly be very much in favor of that.

Mr. ROMJUE. I was wondering whether the gentleman has any specific matter in mind whereby we might be benefited to a greater extent than we are now?

Mr. KETCHAM. I do not know that I have anything of that kind in mind right now, but I do know that if I had the time, I could outline a number of splendid things which might be done.

Mr. Chairman, summarizing the argument in support of this bill, I would state that it marks out clearly the duties and responsibilities of the Department of Agriculture in regard to its work in foreign countries. It extends to the foreign field the services which the Department of Agriculture now renders in the United States in regard to competition and demand for farm products, marketing, and distributing problems in connection with our surplus farm production, and investigation of problems of farm management, cooperative movements, and other economic questions of interest to American agriculture.

This bill settles the vexed question of duplication in the services rendered by various departments of the Government having representatives in foreign countries. Particularly, there have been difficulties in adjusting the relations in the foreign field between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce. Proof that the present bill meets this situation adequately is shown in the joint letter from the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce indorsing this bill and a similar bill (H. R. 3858) relating to commercial attachés. The Department of State, in a letter signed by Secretary Hughes when H. R. 7111 of the Sixty-eighth Congress was under consideration, expressed the approval of that department to the principle embodied in this measure concerning the rank of agricultural attachés. I am sure this fine bit of teamwork among the departments, with its definite adjustment of the vexing problems that have heretofore confronted us in the expansion of our foreign work, will be welcome news to friends of all these departments. The problem of disposing of the surplus of agricultural products has become one of the outstanding agricultural questions of the day, and I feel certain that the enactment of this law will be very helpful in promoting new markets abroad, and while no claim is made for the measure along the lines of farm relief, yet in the long run I am sure it will supplement such legislation splendidly. While the leading farm organizations of the country did not appear in support of this measure, due to the fact that it was not deemed necessary to repeat the hearings of last year, yet a number of farm organizations, through their officers, have assured me of their continued interest, and in this connection it would be well to refer to the fact that in support of H. R. 7111, a similar bill in the Sixty-eighth Congress, 19 leaders of American agriculture joined in urging its passage. Finally, we must recognize the fact that American agriculture must be thoroughly familiar with rural conditions if it is to plan its program wisely. Facts are stubborn things, and the American farmer realizes fully the necessity of accurate and current information not only as to world production in the various crops that he produces but also the latest possible information as to world demand for the surplus of the crops which he produces. This information can only come to him after the Department of Agriculture is given both means and authority to study production and marketing conditions throughout the world.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am interested in the development of our foreign trade, and I think we have neglected it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman who is in control of the time he has requested me to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOWLING].

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Chairman, I have sought twice, and failed, to get unanimous consent to print in the RECORD 15 telegrams which I received during the progress of the consideration of the English impeachment articles in the House of Representatives last week. I shall not read all of these telegrams, but I want to read one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman preferring a unanimous consent request?

Mr. BOWLING. No, Mr. Chairman; I am speaking in my own time. These telegrams are all practically to the same effect. I shall read one of them and read the signatures to the other 14.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., March 27, 1926.

Judge WILLIAM BOWLES,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.—

It is addressed to me as Bowles instead of BOWLING.

Believing that circumstances demand this appeal by Ministerial Alliance of East St. Louis, in behalf of Judge English, whose official acts in administering justice to violators of Volstead Act have met with our approval and, we believe, the entire dry forces, we recommend and urge complete and impartial hearings.

Rev. J. M. PREPPE,
President Ministerial Alliance.

I have 14 other telegrams to the same general effect, signed by—

Rev. J. M. Pepper, president Ministerial Alliance, East St. Louis; N. C. Henderson, pastor Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church, Mount Vernon, Ill.; Rev. John H. Cudiff, pastor First Methodist Episcopal Church, East St. Louis; Rev. Zeck Fred Bond, pastor First Baptist Church, East St. Louis; C. H. Reed, president Men's Bible Class, United Presbyterian Church, Sparta, Ill.; E. F. Williams, pastor Methodist Episcopal Church, Marissa, Ill.; Rev. Clinton D. Harris, pastor Methodist Episcopal Church, O'Fallon, Ill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I know of no desire for time on this side. There is no opposition to the bill, and I am ready to suggest the reading of the bill.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, that is satisfactory to this side of the House.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield for a question?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Is not the object of this bill to prevent conflict and duplication between the Foreign Service of the Department of State, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Commerce abroad?

Mr. ASWELL. Precisely.

Mr. LAZARO. And it is in the interest of economy and efficiency?

Mr. ASWELL. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of encouraging and promoting the agriculture of the United States and assisting American farmers to adjust their operations and practices to meet world conditions the Secretary of Agriculture shall—

(a) Acquire information regarding world competition and demand for agricultural products and the production, marketing, and distribution of said products in foreign countries and disseminate the same through agricultural extension agencies and by such other means as may be deemed advisable.

(b) Investigate abroad farm management and any other economic phases of the agricultural industry and in so far as is necessary to carry out the purposes of this act conduct abroad any activities, including the demonstration of standards for cotton, wheat, and other American agricultural products in which the Department of Agriculture is now authorized or in the future may be authorized to engage.

Sec. 2. (a) The agricultural commissioners now representing the United States Department of Agriculture in foreign countries shall hereafter be known as agricultural attachés, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall appoint from time to time other agricultural attachés after they are found to be competent through examinations held by the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Agriculture in coordination.

(b) Such officers shall constitute the foreign agricultural service of the United States, and any officer of such service when designated by the Secretary of Agriculture shall, through the Department of State, be regularly and officially attached to the diplomatic mission of the United States in the country in which he is to be stationed. If any such officer is to be stationed in a country in which there is no diplomatic mission of the United States, appropriate recognition and standing, with full facilities for discharging his official duties, shall be arranged by the Department of State. The Secretary of State may reject the name of any such officer if in his judgment the assignment of such officer to the post designated would be prejudicial to the public policy of the United States.

(c) The Secretary of Agriculture shall appoint the officers of the foreign agricultural service to such grades as he may establish, with salaries in those grades comparable to those paid other officers of the Government for analogous foreign service.

(d) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to promote or demote in grade or class, to increase or decrease within the salary range fixed for the class the compensation of, and to separate from the service officers of the foreign agricultural service, but in so doing the Secretary shall take into consideration records of efficiency.

(e) No officer of the foreign agricultural service shall be considered as having the character of a public minister.

(f) Any officer of the foreign agricultural service may be assigned for duty in the United States for a period of not more than three years without change in grade, class, or salary, or with such change as the Secretary may direct.

Sec. 3. (a) Subject to the requirements of the civil service laws and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to appoint, fix the compensation of, promote, demote, and separate from the service such clerks and other assistants for officers of the foreign agricultural service as he may deem necessary.

(b) When authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the regulations of the Civil Service Commission, officers of the foreign agricultural service may employ in a foreign country, from time to time, fix the compensation of, and separate from the service such clerical and subclerical assistants as may be necessary.

Sec. 4. (a) Any officer, clerk, employee, or assistant of the Department of Agriculture, while on duty outside of the continental limits of the United States and away from the post to which he is assigned, shall be entitled to receive his necessary traveling expenses and his actual expenses for subsistence or a per diem in lieu of subsistence equal to that paid to other officers of the Government when engaged in analogous foreign service.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture may authorize any officer of the foreign agricultural service to fix, in an amount not exceeding the allowance fixed for such officer, an allowance for actual subsistence, or a per diem allowance in lieu thereof, for any clerical or subclerical assistant employed by such officer under subdivision (b) of section 3, when such clerical or subclerical assistant is engaged in travel outside the continental limits of the United States and away from the post to which he is assigned.

(c) Any such officer, clerk, employee, or assistant while on duty within the continental limits of the United States shall be entitled to receive the traveling expenses and actual expenses incurred for subsistence, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, authorized by law.

Sec. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, State, Territory, district, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, cooperative and other farm organizations, or any person, and shall have power to make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, maps, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel and subsistence allowances, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of the act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. With the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, an officer of the foreign agricultural service may enter into leases for office quarters, and may pay rent, telephone, subscriptions to publications, and other charges incident to the conduct of his office and the discharge of his duties in advance in any foreign country where custom or practice requires payment in advance.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES. Would it not be possible, in view of the fact there are a number of bills to be considered, to lay them aside and report all of them at one time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, because the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the specific consideration of this bill.

Mr. JONES. I would suggest, then, that that course be followed in reference to the other bills in order to save time.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10129 had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PURNELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry before we proceed further. I would like to know by what manner of means we can proceed with the consideration of several bills and have them laid aside without moving that the committee rise each time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is possible under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

Mr. JONES. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES. Is it not possible for the gentleman to move that the House go into committee for the consideration of several bills which the chairman may call up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks that each bill must be acted upon separately under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

Mr. PURNELL. That was my information, but I wanted to get the opinion of the Speaker on it.

INSPECTION OF CERTAIN PLANT PRODUCTS FOR EXPORT

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6241) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect and certify as free from disease and insect pests certain plant products offered for export, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill being on the Union Calendar, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6241, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no desire on this side to use any time.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding there is no opposition to the bill, and I would suggest the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to inspect domestic fresh fruits, vegetables, and seeds, and nursery stock and other plants for propagation, when offered for export, and to certify to shippers and interested parties as to the freedom of such products from injurious plant diseases, and insect pests, according to the sanitary requirements of foreign countries, and to use such means as may be necessary to accomplish this object, including the employment of assistance in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and the necessary appropriation to carry out the aforesaid purpose is hereby authorized: Provided, That moneys received in payment of charges fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture on account of such inspection and certification shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BURTON) having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6241 had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURTON). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MARKET AGENCY FOR THE WEIGHING OF LIVESTOCK

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7818) to amend section 304 of an act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in livestock, livestock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes," approved August 15, 1921.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7818) with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana desire any debate?

Mr. ASWELL. There is no request for time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 304 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in livestock, livestock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes," approved August 15, 1921, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 304. It shall be the duty of every stockyard owner and market agency to furnish upon reasonable request, without discrimination, reasonable stockyard services at such stockyard: Provided, That in any State where the weighing of livestock at a stockyard is conducted by a duly authorized department or agency of the State, the Secretary, upon application of such department or agency, may register it as a market agency for the weighing of livestock received in such stockyard, and upon such registration such department or agency and the members thereof shall be amenable to all the requirements of this act; and upon failure of such department or agency or the members thereof to comply with the orders of the Secretary under this act he is authorized to revoke the registration of such department or agency and to enforce such revocation as provided in section 315 of this act."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BURTON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7818) to amend section 304 of an act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in livestock, livestock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes," approved August 15, 1921, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JANE COATES

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5726) for the relief of Jane Coates, widow of Leonard R. Coates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5726.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the bill appropriately on the calendar for Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would think not unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what the bill is about?

Mr. PURNELL. This is one of the most meritorious bills I have known of for a number of years. The Department of Agriculture, through the negligence of its quarantine officials, killed 75 cows for Doctor Coates, who was conducting a dairy in or near the District of Columbia. The department has admitted the liability of the Government, but for one reason and another payment has been delayed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman how the Department of Agriculture came to make the mistake?

Mr. PURNELL. The Department of Agriculture's agent had killed a herd because of tuberculosis. After this man had started out with a new herd of 95 cattle, through the carelessness of the agents of the quarantine service in the use of their disinfectant of bichloride of mercury, the new herd was destroyed.

Mr. McDUFFIE. As I understand the gentleman, this is a claim?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes; it is a claim.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I was wondering how the Committee on Claims let it go to the Committee on Agriculture. It has escaped the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PURNELL. It has been with the Agricultural Committee a great many years. There is no opposition to it. Doctor Coates, who owned the herd, has since died, and this is for the benefit of the widow. It does not carry the full loss, but it is in accordance with the report of the Department of Agriculture and should be passed without delay.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there are any other private bills which the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture proposes to call up to-day?

Mr. HAUGEN. It would only be by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to say that this is way out of the ordinary routine of business. Here is a bill of which the committee has not jurisdiction, which should have gone to the Committee on Claims, called up on Calendar Wednesday when it is not in order, and which except in a very extraordinary case should not be permitted to be called up on Calendar Wednesday, and if there are other bills which would permit the committee to embark on a practice which ought not to be encouraged I should object.

Mr. HAUGEN. The committee is not embarking on any new course. These bills have been coming to the Agricultural Committee ever since I have been here.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to say that I have been pretty familiar with the business of the House for many years, and I do not recollect of a private bill being considered on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jane Coates, widow of Leonard R. Coates, the sum of $4,750 in compensation for 75 cows killed as a result of the negligence of the Department of Agriculture in the enforcement of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, unless some one in the House desires to ask some questions in respect to this bill, I do not care to say anything about it. I have no disposition to take up the time of the House unnecessarily, but I want the Members of the House to know what they are voting on.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. How does it come that the Department of Agriculture enforces the sanitation in respect to a man's farm where they discovered tubercular cattle? That is not a rule of the States.

Mr. PURNELL. This case arose under an act approved March 2, 1895, to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia. Doctor Coates conducted a dairy. A sample of milk from his dairy was taken and showed live tubercular bacilli in it. Under the authority of the act his permit to sell milk in the District was revoked, and they also forced him to enter into an agreement whereby they took possession of his herd, destroyed such as were found to be infected, and separated the others so that they might be further investigated. After this procedure they then disinfected his farm, his stables and barns under the authority of the act.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The tubercular cattle, of course, under the law would be slaughtered.

Mr. PURNELL. Yes; they were slaughtered.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And I understand the justice of the claim, as it is urged here, is that the Government then prescribed a certain sanitary action which poisoned his cattle?

Mr. PURNELL. That is right.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Under ordinary circumstances the disinfectant to be used by the farmer would be such as would be prescribed by the State or the Federal Government that was enforcing the cleansing of the stables. In this case they required him to use a specific disinfectant that killed his cattle?

Mr. PURNELL. They used it for him, and the manner in which they used it was over his protest. The agents of the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Animal Industry, went out there under authority of law, took possession of his place, and, to use the doctor's language, they "squirted" bichloride of mercury in every crevice and crack of his barn and sheds, and they did it in a manner, which to his way of thinking, was unjust and improper. Following that, after the department had thoroughly disinfected the place, Doctor Coates brought into his dairy 95 tuberculin-tested cattle. They were poisoned by this bichloride of mercury and this loss resulted. The department has made two favorable reports upon the bill, both of which have fixed the loss at $6,847.75.

The committee has felt that under the circumstances $4,750 would be the proper compensation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And the committee is satisfied that this bichloride of mercury placed there by the Department of Agriculture's own agents was the means whereby the cattle were poisoned?

Mr. PURNELL. The committee is not only satisfied, but the Department of Agriculture so states.

Mr. ROMJUE. Is the committee's report unanimous?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes; there is no opposition to this. This is a matter of justice too long delayed.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Was this quarantine work done for the District of Columbia?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes; in the sense that they were trying to protect the health of the people of the District.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Then why should not the District share in the payment of this claim?

Mr. PURNELL. I do not think that would be proper. The Bureau of Animal Industry took possession of the cattle and destroyed them under its authority. In other words, the Government did it.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. But it was acting as a local quarantine agent for the District of Columbia.

Mr. PURNELL. In a sense it was. The claim, as I stated, grew out of the fact that the milk from the original herd was infected.

Mr. WOODRUFF. But the District was in no way responsible for the placing of this bichloride of mercury in the barn.

Mr. PURNELL. No; the Department of Agriculture was responsible for that, and they have so stated a great many times. It was done through the negligence of the Government's employees and not through the negligence of any employee of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, we have no requests for time on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PURNELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF "DISEASES OF THE HORSE" AND "DISEASES OF CATTLE" PUBLICATIONS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10775) to provide for the distribution of the publications entitled "Diseases of the Horse" and "Diseases of Cattle."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the bill (H. R. 10755) providing for the distribution of the publications known as the Diseases of the Horse and Diseases of Cattle. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CHINDBLOM, will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10775.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are no requests for time in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no debate, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the publications entitled "Diseases of the Horse" and "Diseases of Cattle," the appropriation for the printing, binding, and distribution of which may have been, or which may hereafter be, made for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1926, shall be distributed one-third through the folding room of the Senate and two-thirds through the folding room of the House of Representatives, and said documents shall be distributed by Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BURTON having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CHINDBLOM,

Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10775 and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THIRD WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up H. J. Res. 213.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 213. The House automatically resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] to take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 213, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 213, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 213) for participation of the United States in the Third World's Poultry Congress to be held at Ottawa, Canada, in 1927.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the resolution will be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. If no debate is desired, the Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it may not be important, but I would like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill to state how many delegates, in his judgment, would the Government be entitled to send?

Mr. HAUGEN. The authorization of the appropriation is limited to $20,000. That is, for the expenses.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe that would send a delegate from each of the States of the Union?

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no. The cost would be considerable.

The committee has no information as to the number of delegates to be sent. In the two world's poultry congresses that have been held heretofore, one in Spain and the other at The Hague, no representative on the part of the United States attended. In view of the fact that the poultry industry of the United States is important, aggregating annually about a billion and a quarter dollars, it seems that the United States ought to avail itself of this opportunity to be properly represented in this congress.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I will ask the gentleman another question. Does not the gentleman believe that this is of so much importance as to warrant Congress in providing a representative from each of the States? The business is scattered all over the country, and in some sections of the country it preponderates over all other industries.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; but I doubt if Congress would authorize that. The gentleman had better accept of $20,000 and have but a few representatives sent there rather than send none.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. At the proper place I shall offer an amendment. I think it is clearly important that every State of the Union should have a representative there.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then the gentleman can offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the Clerk read the resolution for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the United States has been invited by the Government of Canada to send delegates and an exhibit to the Third World's Poultry Congress, to be held at Ottawa, Canada, during July and August, 1927: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That said invitation be accepted.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to designate official delegates to enable the United States to participate in the proposed congress.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prepare and install a suitable national exhibit for display at the proposed congress, portraying in a correlated manner the fundamental features concerning the organization and development of the poultry industry of the United States, including the broad problems of production, distribution, and marketing of poultry and poultry products, and the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of preparing, transporting, and demonstrating such an exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair takes the privilege of suggesting that the first section should be eliminated so as to contain the contents of the preamble, and that the preamble should be eliminated. The parliamentary clerk has prepared an amendment which, without objection, will be read as being offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, there is no precedent of the House with which I am familiar which prohibits the adoption of the preamble to a bill. There is no valid objection to it as such, so that it would require amendment.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 3. On page 2, line 5, strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of Kansas: Page 2, line 5, strike out the figures "$20,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000."

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I know the committee will strongly oppose this amendment, and I am not fortified with any specific figures or statistics in its support; but I want to say that the products that are considered in this resolution considerably exceed $1,000,000,000 a year. Now we are spending money, and I do not know of anything that is more in conformity with our idea of economy and prosperity than to adopt this amendment. The industry is developed throughout the United States without exception to any locality or State. It is growing, and it is preponderant in many localities over all industries, and I think that every State in the Union should be entitled to a delegate to this meeting. The amount of the appropriation is infinitesimal. It is ridiculous, taking into consideration the great importance of the industry that it affects.

I know that the committee has gone over this subject carefully. I did not know that it was being considered in committee. But I think that to-day we can do no more proper or appropriate thing than to adopt this amendment. The chairman has not stated how many representatives we might have. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, the manner of their selection. But I do know that we are dealing with a great proposition here to-day, one of the most important and dependable and profitable industries in the United States. It is developing constantly and consecutively year after year. It is a little thing, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate $40,000 to send delegates from the States to represent an industry in which each individual State of the United States is greatly interested.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kansas undoubtedly has merit, but in view of the recommendation of the department, which has given the matter consideration and recommended an appropriation of $20,000, it would seem only wise to adhere to the suggestion of the department.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. ASWELL. Is it not true that the amount requested by the Department of Agriculture is exactly the amount carried in the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly $20,000, as carried in the bill.

Mr. ASWELL. And they did not want any more than that?

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill was introduced as requested by the department.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. May I ask the chairman a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. How many delegates is it proposed to send to this congress?

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill carries $20,000, and I take it that with the $20,000 this Government would send the same number that other countries will send to this congress, and I take it the number will be fixed by the congress or the nation inviting the United States.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Can the gentleman state what the probable expense of attendance at this convention would be per delegate?

Mr. HAUGEN. Possibly a few hundred dollars for each delegate, but I could not say as to that.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Well, Mr. Chairman, let us legislate intelligently. We ought to know something about what we are doing.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will read it to the gentleman.

That the President is hereby authorized to designate official delegates to enable the United States to participate in the proposed congress.

That may be somewhat indefinite, but the appropriation is limited to $20,000.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think there is any question but what my colleague from Kansas is entirely correct in his statement that every State in the Union should have a delegate at that great convention, but I want to call attention to the fact that $20,000, will easily pay the expenses of 48 delegates, if the President should appoint one from each State in the Union to attend that convention, and perhaps delegates can be procured to go for their expenses.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If it is intended to send representatives from the 48 States, will representatives of poultry dealers be selected entirely, or how will the consumers come in on this?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is for the Secretary to determine who shall be appointed.

Mr. TINCHER. This is a chicken growers' convention.

Mr. ADKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. ADKINS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think some gentlemen have a misconception of what the Government is trying to do. The Federal Government and the different departments here, in the matter of State fairs, very often prepare exhibits. The War Department does that sometimes as well as the Agricultural Department. They send those exhibits to State fairs, and sometimes they send them to other nations if they have an appropriation with which to do that. Now, as I understand it, the Department of Agriculture wants the United States represented at this exposition and has stated that $20,000 would be ample—and they usually ask for enough for those things—to make a creditable exhibit by the Department of Agriculture, representing this country at this exposition. It is not a question of sending delegates, as I understand it. When I had the State agricultural department under my supervision we made arrangements with the War Department and the Agricultural Department to make exhibits; they had an appropriation with which to do that, and they made those exhibits. This is simply a proposition to make an ample appropriation which will permit the Nation to make a creditable exhibit at this exposition, and I am quite well satisfied from the representations made that they have asked for ample funds to make a creditable exhibit. I think that if the gentleman from Kansas understood the situation, he would not insist on his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Of course, I am against the amendment and it ought not to be considered seriously. There is no use throwing money away, and the agricultural sections of the country ought not to be imposed upon except where it is necessary, and there ought not to be any additional expense imposed upon them. If $20,000 will do the job, why should we give them $40,000? Nobody suggested $40,000, and the Agricultural Department has not suggested it. The gentleman from Kansas has probably not given very serious consideration to the advisability of making it $40,000.

This question will have to go through another series of examinations before they get the money, no matter what you put in this bill; but please do not add indiscriminately to the cost of the Government. It may be said that this is not an appropriation bill, but appropriations usually follow these authorizations, and I beg you not to adopt the amendment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I simply want to state to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that perhaps it may be well for the United States to be represented at this poultry show in Canada, but if you would hold a poultry show in New York I believe it would do more good for the sale of poultry and eggs.

Of course it is very nice to take these trips and be represented at these poultry shows in Canada and other countries. In giving consideration to the farmer we will cooperate with you in anything you want to do, but please do not forget the consumer. After all, you know it is up to the consumer to buy your farm products.

We have quite a market in New York for poultry and eggs if we could only afford to pay for them. I do not say that the farmers are getting these high prices; in fact, I know they are not getting the high prices that we have to pay for chickens and eggs in New York City. I repeat, however, what I have said so many times before, that the farmers and the consumers ought to get together, and instead of spending money for a poultry show in Canada—I do not think we have anything to learn there that will do any good to the farmers—let us have some sort of conference between the tenement dwellers in my city who are paying exorbitant prices for your products and can not afford to pay such prices and get the necessities of life, and the farmers who are producing these products, in order to try to eliminate some of the waste in the present system of distribution. This would be very useful to the farmer and beneficial to the consumer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ACKERMAN). The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which the Clerk has at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Strike out the preamble in section 1 and insert after line 2, page 1, the following: "That the invitation of the Government of Canada to the United States to send delegates and an exhibit to the Third World's Poultry Congress, to be held at Ottawa, Canada, during July and August, 1927, be accepted."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, this is in line with the suggestion I made a moment ago. It has been customary in the House to strike out preambles. In this case if the House struck out the preamble, section 1 would be without meaning. There can be no possible objection to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ACKERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the resolution (H. J. Res. 213) had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the resolution as amended do pass.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO PLANT QUARANTINE ACT OF AUGUST 20, 1912

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution (S. J. Res. 78) for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infested when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution (S. J. Res. 78), with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, for a number of years the different States have been establishing quarantine regulations with reference to disease-infected plants which might come into or pass through their States and which they thought might interfere with the growth and development of some of the products and plants of the State.

A few weeks ago the Supreme Court of the United States held that these quarantine regulations of the different States were invalid, because the Federal Government had taken possession of the field under its power to regulate interstate commerce. The purpose of this measure is simply to permit the States to continue such regulations where they are not in conflict with the regulations of the United States Government or where the regulations of the United States Government do not cover the particular plant or thing which the State laws undertake to cover.

In this connection I have a letter which has been addressed to me from the Department of Agriculture of the State of Texas, signed by three divisions of that department. This letter was sent to all the members of our delegation. Our State department of agriculture has taken a great deal of interest in the matter, and has done some valuable work in quarantine matters. I ask unanimous consent to insert this letter in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. The letter covers just a little more than a page.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, STATE OF TEXAS,
Austin, March 30, 1926.

HON. MARVIN JONES,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You are perhaps familiar with a recent decision of the Supreme Court with respect to rights of States to institute quarantine regulations to prevent the dissemination of dangerous insect pests and plant diseases. We shall inclose part of this decision. According to our understanding, the law is now construed that no State has any authority to quarantine against any other State or part of any other State on account of any sort of plant pest.

All of the States have certain pest-control laws, and a great deal of good is being done. As it now stands, under this decision States have the right to cause nurseries, for example, to be inspected for interstate shipment, but such stock would not have to be inspected for interstate shipment unless, perchance, the Secretary of Agriculture had placed a quarantine against certain plants produced by such nurseries. As matters have operated heretofore, there has been reciprocity between the States by which they accept inspection certificates one from another. As it now stands under this decision, one State—Texas, for example—might require its own nurseries to be inspected, but Arkansas nurseries or individuals can ship any sort of nursery stock to any point in Texas and it would be nobody's business to interfere.

There is introduced into the Senate and House, we understand, a joint resolution. For your convenience, and to enable you to identify it, we will inclose copy. Our understanding of what this joint resolution seeks to do is: To restore to the States the right to keep out such pests as are not considered by the Secretary of Agriculture, but which appear to them locally, to be a menace. Getting down again to specific example, the pink bollworm of cotton has been considered by the Secretary, and certain quarantine restrictions placed on certain districts.

It seems to us that this joint resolution would not restore to the States the right to make any quarantines of greater extent than the quarantines promulgated by the Secretary on this insect. On the other hand, the sweet-potato weevil is an insect not heretofore considered and determined by the Secretary as being a menace; but with all the Southern States it is a serious pest. The various States have "weevil-free" and "infested" areas. Under the decision of the court they can prevent infestation going into weevil-free areas from within their own boundaries, but not from other States. There are many other problems, local in their nature, that can be handled more satisfactorily and economically by the States.

After giving very careful consideration to the whole matter, it is our conclusion that this joint resolution ought to be passed at the earliest possible moment, because it seeks to restore to the States inherent rights they ought to have, and, further, because the Secretary of Agriculture would undoubtedly be wholly unable with the funds at his disposal to take care of all the minor and purely local plant diseases and insect-pest troubles throughout these United States.

There is considerable confusion, of course, with respect to the multiplicity of State quarantines and from overlapping of duties of Federal and State authorities. This condition is being improved, however, through the action and cooperation of the various State and Federal authorities.

Respectfully,

R. E. McDONALD,
J. M. DEL CURTO,
G. J. SCHOLL.

(Inclosure.)

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
(No. 187, October term, 1925)

Mr. Chief Justice Taft delivered the opinion of the court.

It follows that pending the existing legislature of Congress as to quarantine of diseased trees and plants in interstate commerce the statute of Washington on the subject can not be given application. It is suggested that the States may act in the absence of any action by the Secretary of Agriculture; that it is left to him to allow the States to quarantine, and that if he does not act there is no invalidity in the State action. Such construction as that can not be given to the Federal statute. The obligation to act without respect to the States is put directly upon the Secretary of Agriculture whenever quarantine, in his judgment, is necessary. When he does not act, it must be presumed that it is not necessary. With the Federal law in force, State action is illegal and unwarranted.

The decree of the Supreme Court of Washington is reserved.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his courtesy, and I do not think I will use the five minutes allotted to me. I simply desire a brief moment in which to congratulate the Committee on Agriculture for bringing in a unanimous report affecting this situation, which presents a very serious one in many parts of the country.

As stated by the gentleman from Texas, under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered in October last by Chief Justice Taft, the power of the States through their departments of agriculture to regulate the protection of their States against the importation of infested plants and seeds was declared unconstitutional. In other words, the effect of that decision is that the original police power of the State has been merged into the Federal Government by virtue of the act of 1912. Thereafter all acts of the State authorizing and exercising their own independent activities with reference to the importation and control of infested seeds in plants was nugatory and without effect. So you will see that the effect of the decision was to place the entire burden on the Federal Government as to the regulation of these matters.

In a case arising in my own State affecting the sweet-potato industry, a very large industry in that State, the effect of that decision was that the State authorities did not have the power to exercise any control whatever over the importation of infested sweet-potato seeds or plants from adjoining States which were coming into our own State and causing throughout the State great havoc in the sweet-potato industry.

This bill will correct the situation speedily, and I chiefly desire to congratulate the committee for the speed and diligence with which they are remedying a rather threatening situation.

In that connection I ask unanimous consent to incorporate a letter from our State commissioner of agriculture with reference to the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to incorporate a letter in his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

STATE OF ALABAMA AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRIES DEPARTMENT,
Montgomery, April 2, 1926.

HON. WM. BROCKMAN BANKHEAD, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BANKHEAD: I am writing to invite your attention to the far-reaching effect of a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, No. 187, October term, 1925, styled "Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co., plaintiff in error, v. State of Washington," and to urge your support of the joint resolution of the Congress to correct the unfortunate defect in the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912. The resolution (H. J. Res. 210) is pending in the Committee of Agriculture in both the House and the Senate.

You will note from records that the opinion of the Supreme Court in question was delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Taft. I will not attempt to state the questions at issue. What I do desire is to call your attention to the fact that this opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States renders every State plant quarantine act null and void in so far as the power of a State relates to keeping dangerous plant pests of other States or Territories out of its domain.

To illustrate the predicament this State faces under the opinion in question, I call your attention to a recent sweet-potato weevil infestation in Baldwin County and to a number of cars of sweet potatoes from Louisiana to Birmingham which were known by Louisiana authorities to be infested with sweet-potato weevil. The Federal authorities have not been effective in keeping these potatoes out of Alabama, and as a result the sweet-potato industry of this State is in peril and the State faces the necessity of an expenditure of large sums to eradicate the sweet-potato weevil infestation now prevalent. This State has quarantined against the Louisiana sweet potatoes; has placed a State plant-control inspector in the city of Birmingham and two inspectors on duty in the Baldwin County area. The board of revenue of Baldwin County has just finished the expenditure of approximately $1,800 in assisting the State department of agriculture and industries in this fight against the spread of the sweet-potato weevil on sixty-odd farms over a wide area of Baldwin County, and we are now very hopeful of having this pest under control. However, we must maintain an inspection force in this area for a long time yet to hold the sweet-potato weevil in check and to completely eradicate it. We are concentrating our State inspection force on the Birmingham market and its trade territory also.

Under the opinion of the United States Supreme Court in question Alabama quarantine against Louisiana potatoes falls and we are wholly dependent upon the action of the United States Secretary of Agriculture in protecting the farms of this State against the serious pests of Louisiana, and in fact every other State where such do now or may hereafter exist.

This situation is brought on by a serious error committed by the Congress in the passage of the plant quarantine act of 1912, when by the provisions of this act the police powers of the States were rendered null and void. I need not attempt to analyze the situation further as, when you read the opinion in question and the plant quarantine act of 1912, you will readily understand.

I am inclosing herewith a copy of a proposed joint resolution for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of 1912, so as to restore to the States the police powers inherent and continuing when not abridged by the Congress. This joint resolution was recently prepared by the plant conference board of the Middle Atlantic and Northeastern States, T. J. Headlee, president, New Brunswick, N. J., and Ernest N. Cory, secretary, College Park, Md.

If this proposed amendment is added at the end of section 8 of the plant quarantine act of 1912, it appears to me that the Federal plant quarantine officials and the State plant quarantine officials will be jointly cooperative and far more powerful in their work to prevent and, wherever possible, to eradicate the spread of dangerous plant pests.

I hope you may become active in getting its adoption, as written, at as early a date as possible. I mention the adoption "as written" advisedly for the reason that this amendment places the States, in my opinion, squarely where they belong and enables the Secretary of Agriculture to be more cooperative and effective with the States in this all-important work.

In connection with a study of the seriousness of plant pests I desire to call your attention to the inclosed copy of an address by Doctor Marlatt, chairman Federal Horticultural Board, before the commissioners of agriculture in Chicago on December 30, 1925. This speech brings to mind the fact that the inspectors of this department located several months ago the oriental fruit worm, or moth, around some 25 cities and towns of this State. Just the extent of this serious pest remains to be determined. In our continued survey we will likely find traces of other pests not heretofore recognized and known to exist in Alabama. We are organizing our inspection force to the point where we propose to challenge products imported from suspicious areas long enough to determine for ourselves that the products are free of plant pests. This course will protect the agriculture of this State against the probable errors of letting pests move out of another State into our State.

I am reliably informed that the several cars of sweet potatoes, infested with sweet potato weevil, were known by the growers in Louisiana to have been infested, and they were shipped to Birmingham on the belief that they would not be intercepted, and if sold and consumed would bring desired returns to the growers.

Yours very truly,

J. M. MOORE,
Commissioner Agriculture and Industries.

PRESENT QUARANTINE SITUATION AND WORK OF THE REGIONAL PLANT CONFERENCE BOARDS

By Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chief Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C. Parts of his speech

I have spoken before this body, . . .

NEED FOR CONTROL OF PLANT ENTRY

For some 125 years this country was without any protection whatever against entry of foreign plant pests. The result has been that probably the majority of the really dangerous and serious plant enemies with which our agriculturists and farmers have to deal to-day are of foreign origin. The losses they occasion to our agriculture have been conservatively estimated—and I emphasize "conservatively"—at a billion dollars a year. The boll weevil has been estimated as causing the loss of half of that in a single year. Looked at in another way, these losses mean additional labor on the part of the farmer. The pests take about 2 hours of every 10 hours' work that the farmer does; without them he would get the same yield with an 8-hour day. That is a continuing loss that will go on forever. He feeds the pests first, and man and animals get what is left. That is what we are paying for the negligence in allowing these pests to come in.

I think most of you are familiar with the important plant enemies that have thus entered the United States. We were a virgin land to begin with; we had native pests, such as our grasshoppers, the chinch bug, Colorado potato beetle, etc., and others doubtless will show up later, but most of our farm and orchard pests are of foreign origin. The Hessian fly, way back in 1779, in connection with the War of the Revolution, came with the ships bringing Hessian troops. The boll weevil came across from Mexico in 1892—that is the "billion dollar bug." The alfalfa weevil—those of you representing Western States know something about it—was brought in about 1904, possibly with some importation of plants with soil. It hibernates in the soil and could easily have entered in that way. The San Jose scale came to us in 1870 with a shipment, made by a missionary in China, of flowering peach trees. The importation was sent to a resident of San Jose, and the scale became established there—and this put San Jose on the map. The codling moth was an early comer. Its record in America goes back to 1790.

In the instance of many of these pests, there was no vital necessity for the importation that brought them. An example is the chestnut blight, which has destroyed most of the chestnut stand of our Appalachian regions, at a loss which runs into the hundreds of millions. This disease was brought by an importation of a few Chinese or Japanese chestnuts. This chestnut has no great value. The only reason for bringing it in was the desire to complete a "collection of all the chestnuts of the world." The disease was first found in the Bronx, in New York City, the seat of the New York Botanical Garden. Whether that was the first importation or not, we don't know. That was the first finding of the disease, and from that general center it spread as noted through most of the Appalachian region.

Many of our grain rusts are of foreign origin. The potato wart is also. These all came in before we had a plant quarantine act—the potato wart just the year before. We have it now in Maryland, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. It is being very effectively controlled. It has not spread, in the years since it entered, from these districts. Fortunately they are not commercial centers of potato growing, and the control is in planting immune potatoes. . . .

It is of interest just now, in connection with this potato wart, that a very strong effort was made a few weeks ago to have this quarantine modified or withdrawn, so that potatoes from countries in Europe invaded by this disease could again be imported into the United States. The high price of potatoes in New York stimulated an urgent demand for foreign potatoes, which meant letting down the bars to the disease. I hardly need to say that the bars were not let down. Immune varieties are grown in the principal northern and southern areas of potato production, but there is a large area through the center of eastern United States where very susceptible varieties of potatoes are grown, and there seems to be no other variety that will take their place.

The Japanese beetle was brought in on an importation of Japanese iris. I brought some lantern slides to show you something that would give you a vivid visual view of that insect so that you could better understand it. It is a pest you will all hear a good deal about in future years.

The oriental fruit worm is another pest you haven't heard much about as yet, but is going to be one of the worst of our orchard pests. It was brought in during the period of furor for the Japanese cherry, one of the most beautiful flowering plants in the world. This plant now lines our driveways along the Potomac and along the Riverside Drive, New York, and in both places these trees have been centers of spread of this new pest. The publicity given to this tree at that time led to many other importations, and we now know this pest to have more or less foothold from the Mississippi Valley eastward.

Knowledge of this constant entry of plant pests is what led to the effort to secure the plant quarantine act of 1912. I fancy most of you are familiar with the history of that legislation. I don't want to take the time to go into it, for I want to discuss other matters. . . .

POINTING A MORAL

There is a moral I want to stress just here. Apparently many people don't like plant quarantines. Some of our fines; people don't like them. Our garden-club women don't like the restrictions on the entry of bulbs and other ornamentals necessary to exclude new pests. Many of these garden-club women are wealthy and have wonderful gardens. As a rule they employ gardeners of foreign training, who think only in terms of foreign products. Influenced more or less by such gardeners, these women feel aggrieved that they can't import anything they want. They make appeals to the Secretary of Agriculture, to Members of Congress, and to the President. About the only constructive suggestion they make is: "Why don't you allow all of these things to come in and then safeguard the country by inspecting them as they come along or controlling them after they are in?"

The corn borer is the answer, the Japanese beetle is the answer, the citrus canker is the answer, and the pine blister is the answer, and many others. The cost of control is terrific, and the losses go on forever. Few of these pests can be excluded by inspection. The citrus canker and pine blister may not show on the tree for several years after it is introduced. Other pests are so concealed they couldn't be found except by tearing the plant to pieces. Certain bulb and other crop pests which enter with bulbs are only discovered by cutting the bulb to pieces. I found our inspectors in New York determining the infestation by external examination and by feeling. If a bulb was soft or mushy, that was the indication that it was infested, and it was put aside for later dissection. It was clear to me that this was only guessing. As a check on this method, I suggested that a hundred bulbs be taken at random and cut open. This more exact method indicated that the old method was disclosed only from one-fifth to one-twentieth or less of the actual infestation.

THE JAPANESE BEETLE

The Japanese beetle is a subject you will hear a lot about later on. It does not have the menace of the corn borer, but it is a pest that can do a lot of damage. In the first place, it is a soil pest. I mean a meadow pest, a grass pest. Its grubs live on the roots of grasses. It is destructive to golf links, and the adult beetle is very annoying on putting greens by getting in the way of the ball.

The methods of control of its breeding areas in meadows are expensive, much too expensive for the ordinary farmer to use to protect his meadowland and pasture land. The damage done by this pest in addition to the work of the grub on the roots of grasses is by the adult beetle to the foliage of different kinds of trees and later in its attacks on the fruit. I have seen peach trees with the peaches looking as big as your doubled fist from the beetles clustered over them, four or five deep, the outside fellows waiting for their turn. I have seen orchards in New Jersey with trees swarming with beetles. It reminded me of the days when the grasshoppers took the peaches off the trees and left the pits; the peach trees had only a crop of pits. It attacks also most other orchard fruits.

This Japanese beetle has spread steadily and we are controlling the long jumps, as in the case of the corn borer, but it is evident that very soon the situation will be such that we will have to give up further efforts at such control and rely on spray—none yet very satisfactory—and control by natural enemies which we are seeking in Asia.

I could with more time tell you about our pink bollworm work, which on the whole has been very successful. We have eradicated the pink bollworm over most of the area in which it had been established, and when I say "eradicated" I mean apparently; that is, to such an extent that it has not been found in any of these areas for three years, and in some of these areas for seven years.

REGULATION OF ENTRY OF FOREIGN PLANTS, ETC.

Domestic plant quarantines: There are now being enforced some 16 domestic quarantines controlling the interstate movement of plants and plant products. These have for their object prevention of spread within the United States of such plant and forest enemies as the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth, the pink bollworm of cotton, the date-palm scale insects, the Japanese beetle, the European corn borer, the white-pine blister rust, and the potato wart.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to congratulate the Committee on Agriculture on the expedition with which it has brought the pending resolution before this House for action. I deem the immediate passage of the resolution to be a matter of paramount importance. On March 1 last the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co. against the State of Washington declared State quarantine laws to be illegal and unwarranted. The Supreme Court held in this case that the Federal quarantine act enacted by Congress on August 20, 1912, with one fell swoop struck down all the quarantine laws of the States. This leaves the States at the mercy of plant pests and diseases of every kind, except in so far as they are protected by the United States Department of Agriculture operating under the Federal quarantine act. The pending resolution will give back to the States the power taken from them by the Federal act and will enable them to help and cooperate with the United States Department of Agriculture in the matter of their protection from these plant pests and diseases. Until the decision of the Supreme Court on March 1 last the United States Department of Agriculture, charged with the enforcement of the Federal quarantine act, had felt that in many instances the control of the spread of certain insect pests and plant diseases might well be left to State regulation. The department even advised and encouraged the placing of State quarantines by which the States could protect themselves against the entry of plant pests and diseases from other States where they were known to exist.

As the report of the Committee on Agriculture well states:

In the case of many insect pests and plant diseases, which are known to exist in the United States, there is considerable uncertainty as to the extent to which the States and the districts therein have been affected by the pest or disease during the years in which there has been opportunity for their carriage and distribution in all sorts of traffic as well as in the movement of farm crops. In view of this uncertainty of distribution it has seemed clear, in many instances, that any quarantine under a control that would be of benefit to a particular State could be administered more efficiently and at vastly less cost under State than under Federal action. Placing a Federal embargo on the movement of alfalfa, for instance, and other products which would carry the alfalfa weevil, would undoubtedly be more drastic than conditions justify, and yet a Federal regulating quarantine, to be of any real service, would involve control, inspection, and certification with respect to the movement of all products that could carry this pest; for example, hay, potatoes, and all other farm crops, as well as farm equipment, household goods, etc. The milling of alfalfa meal in the infested areas would have to be regulated. It would also necessitate inspection of highway traffic and inspection and cleaning of railway cars, as well as extensive surveys to determine distribution. All this would necessitate a very large appropriation and an immense personnel. On the other hand, a State quarantine prohibiting entry of certain products requires comparatively little money for enforcement and can be very efficiently administered.

The United States Department of Agriculture has encouraged State quarantines to such an extent that there are now 30 States which have established quarantines against certain plant pests and diseases where no action whatever has been taken by the Federal Government. With the complete wiping out of the State quarantines by the decision of March 1 last, the condition in many States is precarious. In my State of Alabama, we have been fighting for months under the State quarantine law to rid the State of the sweet-potato weevil infestation and to protect it from further importation of this pest. One county in my district, the great county of Baldwin, has just recently spent $1,800 in this fight.

The Hon. J. M. Moore, commissioner of agriculture for the State of Alabama, advises me that the State to-day is seriously threatened with an importation of this weevil from Louisiana and that it has on duty two plant-control inspectors in Baldwin County and one in the city of Birmingham. Mr. Moore also advises me that his department has just within the past few months located the oriental fruit worm near some 25 different cities and towns in Alabama. And yet, under the ruling of the Supreme Court, the State of Alabama stands helpless to protect herself from further importation of these pests.

A glance at the history of plant pests and diseases in this country can not but convince us that both the States and the Federal Government should do everything in their power to prevent further spread of these plant pests and diseases and to wipe them out. For nearly 125 years this country was without any protection whatever against the entry of foreign plant pests. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, the majority of the really dangerous and serious plant enemies with which our farmers have to battle to-day are of foreign origin. It was during the War of the Revolution that the Hessian fly came over on the ships bringing the Hessian soldiers. Of the two, the fly worked much the greater havoc than did the soldiers. In 1892 there came from Mexico the boll weevil that is commonly known as "the billion-dollar bug" on account of the tremendous loss due to its ravages. The alfalfa weevil was brought in about 1904. It hibernates in the soil and probably came with some importation of plants with soil.

The chestnut blight, which, according to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chief of the Federal Horticultural Board, has destroyed most of the chestnut stand of our Appalachian region at a loss which runs into the hundreds of millions, was brought to this country by a few Chinese importing some Japanese chestnuts. The only reason for bringing it in, Doctor Marlatt tells us, was the desire by these Chinese to complete a "collection of all the chestnuts of the world."

The San Jose scale, the codling moth, the potato wart, the Japanese beetle, the oriental fruit worm, the corn borer, the citrus canker, the pine blister, the camphor scale, the gipsy moth, most of our grain rusts—all of these and many others came in from foreign lands. The Department of Agriculture conservatively estimates that they cause American agriculture a loss each year of $1,000,000,000. In one single year the loss due to the boll weevil alone has been estimated to be half of a billion dollars. As Doctor Marlatt so well says:

These losses mean additional labor on the part of the farmer. The pests take about 2 hours of every 10 hours' work that the farmer does. Without them he would get the same yield with an 8-hour day. This is a continuing loss that will go on forever. The farmer feeds the pest first, and man and animals get what is left. That is what we are paying for the negligence in allowing these pests to come in.

In the face of this terrible loss to the American farmer and to American economic life, I ask you, gentlemen, if we are to be further negligent in this matter? Are we to permit these pests and diseases to spread throughout the States of the Union except in so far as their spread may be stopped by the Department of Agriculture here in Washington? Mark you, gentlemen, one little department is too small to police and protect against this multitudinous army of blights and plagues such a vast country as ours, with its 48 States, extending from Maine to California and from Canada to the Gulf. Are we by our inaction to force the States which we represent to remain powerless and impotent to assist this department and to protect themselves against these hordes of parasites? Are we to permit our people to remain at the mercy of these scourges? Gentlemen, let us pass this resolution and enable the States of this Union to make war, war to the death, on these ruinous pests.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I want to second very heartily the suggestions that have been made by the gentlemen from Alabama. I have had the same cry of distress from the farmers and from the agricultural extension people in my own State, especially in regard to the sweet-potato weevil. I simply want to heartily second their suggestion to join my voice in appeal for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, in view of the complimentary references made by the gentlemen from Alabama to the work of the Committee on Agriculture in connection with this resolution, I think it would be of interest to relate a little history in connection with it. The report of the committee records the fact that the decision of the Supreme Court that made the resolution necessary was filed on March 1, 1923. I think since that time practically every State agricultural commissioner, or whatever name that authority may bear in the several States, has taken up the matter and has brought the question to the Congress of the United States. Action was taken in another body and reported to the Committee on Agriculture on Friday last. Hearings were held by our committee on Saturday morning, the resolution was ordered reported the same day, and here you have it for consideration. [Applause.] That indicates that the wheels of government move rather speedily when public opinion is well considered and united on a proposition that is vital to the welfare of the country. [Applause.]

As an example of the cooperation of the States in this matter, I present a letter from the commissioner of agriculture of our State, Hon. L. Whitney Watkins.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Lansing, Mich., March 29, 1926.

Hon. JOHN C. KETCHAM,
Member of Congress, Fourth District of Michigan,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I notice that in a decision of the Supreme Court rendered the other day all State quarantines preventing movement of diseased or infested articles from one State to another was nullified, due to the fact that they are in conflict with interstate requirements.

This decision of the Supreme Court leaves the State of Michigan without protection against the gypsy moth, the oriental fruit moth, the alfalfa weevil, and other diseases that threaten the forests, horticulture, and agriculture of this State.

I understand that there is before the Senate a joint resolution providing for an amendment to the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to "allow the State to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infested, when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes."

If the joint resolution is passed Michigan will be able to maintain certain quarantines which she has sought to put in force for some time.

The State department of agriculture, which has charge of the regulatory work of your State, sees great danger to this Commonwealth if the bars are thrown down and diseased stock of all kinds is allowed to enter. We are trying to reestablish forests in Michigan; we are a great horticultural State, being first in the production of small fruits; we have increased the acreage of alfalfa to 400,000 acres and will probably plant the largest acreage the coming year that has ever been planted in the State. It is necessary that Michigan be kept clean from diseased or infested articles of all kinds if we succeed.

We are advised that there is opposition to this resolution by some nurserymen, but we can not understand their attitude. Why any nurserymen would want to move or sell diseased stock is more than I can understand. Nurserymen who take that attitude should receive no consideration at the hands of the lawmaking body of the United States.

The men interested in reforestation, in horticulture, and in general agriculture will appreciate anything which you can do to assist in the passage of the joint resolution referred to.

Very respectfully yours,

STATE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
L. WHITNEY WATKINS, Commissioner.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, two years ago I led an active campaign of education in behalf of farm legislation. Our bill was known as the McNary-Haugen bill. We sent out more than 30,000 letters from my office to farm leaders throughout the United States. At one time I predicted the passage of that bill. I was not mistaken at that time. It was finally defeated, but "murder will out." We now know "who killed cock robin." The Colorado Wheat Grower of February 20, 1926, tells a story that will interest every farmer in America. I quote from the Wheat Grower:

GRAIN OFFICIALS TELL HOW FARMERS' BILLS ARE BEATEN—SECRETARY OF GRAIN DEALERS' NATIONAL ASSOCIATION EXPLAINS HOW McNARY-HAUGEN BILL WAS DEFEATED AFTER LOBBYISTS INTERVIEWED CONGRESSMEN; "WE WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP"

How a well-organized minority can impose its wishes on a poorly organized majority was entertainingly explained by Charles Quinn, secretary-treasurer of the Grain Dealers' National Association, speaking before the Colorado Grain Dealers' Association in Denver last week.

More specifically, Mr. Quinn's story described how 16,000 grain dealers have been able to maintain their marketing whip hand over 7,000,000 farmers.

With pardonable pride Secretary Quinn told "what an association can do." (He referred to an association of grain men.)

He told how the Grain Dealers' National had helped to defeat the McNary-Haugen bill. He told how the grain dealers' lobbyist in Washington carries on his work. He told how the Grain Dealers' National is always on the job and "works while you sleep."

Speaking on the work of the Grain Dealers' National, he said:

"When the McNary-Haugen bill was introduced, a canvass of the House showed enough votes to pass it with 95 to spare. The Grain Dealers' National Association got busy. Grain men gave freely of their time and we had from 5 to 15 men in Washington all through the danger period.

KILLING THE McNARY-HAUGEN BILL

"We met in the morning and each man was assigned to see certain Congressmen. In the evening each man reported the results of his interviews. Before a vote was called every Congressman had been interviewed and we estimated we had beaten the bill by 75 votes. The following day the returns showed it was beaten by 73. That is what an association can do.

"Many bills to help the farmer are before Congress now, but there is only one that is really dangerous and that it is necessary to fight—the Dickinson bill."

Mr. Quinn did not explain why it is necessary for the grain dealers to fight a bill which is, by his own statement, designed "to help the farmer." Neither did he say, in so many words, that the grain dealers' interests are directly opposed to the interests of the farmer. His listeners were left to draw their own conclusions.

Speaking on the work of the Grain Dealers' National, he said:

"It [the Grain Dealers' National] is always on the job, looking out for the interests of the grain trade; looking out for the interests of the Colorado Grain Dealers' Association, as well as those of the 18 other affiliated organizations. Every industry has lobbyists in Washington. And it is necessary that the Grain Dealers' National Association keep a man there also, which we do. He goes every morning to the clerks and finds out what bills have been introduced. Then he checks on what happens to them in all the various details and keeps me acquainted by letter and telegraph. I in turn acquaint the State organization secretaries with any developments of importance, that they may carry it to their membership.

"I took the secretaryship of the national association on January 1, 1914. During the last 10 years hell has broken loose."

Mr. Chairman, while I do not believe Mr. Quinn spoke for all millers throughout the United States, I do suggest that all Members of Congress reread and ponder his statement when general farm legislation is under consideration. Perhaps we can corral some of this fire and brimstone in behalf of the farmer.

STATE QUARANTINE

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the Committee on Agriculture upon their speedy work in reporting out this plant quarantine bill, and wish to point out the vigilance with which the commissioners of agriculture in our various States act. The particular case which made necessary this legislation came up to the Supreme Court from the State of Washington on account of the transportation through that State of alfalfa infected with weevil. When the court decision was rendered Mr. Barnes, commissioner of agriculture in my State of Washington, wired me. A few minutes later I took the matter up with the Department of Agriculture here before it was generally known that the Supreme Court had rendered the decision and before the decision was printed. There was a little delay, therefore, in finding out what legislation would have to be enacted to restore to the States the authority which they had prior to that time exercised. In the meantime the various State commissioners of agriculture have informed their delegations and we come here united to-day in behalf of remedial legislation. We are glad to say the Department of Agriculture instead of desiring to hold on to this great Federal power, which was conferred by the Supreme Court decision, came before the committee and asked that this authority be returned to the States, because the States could exercise it more economically, more efficiently, and more satisfactorily, and because this power should be lodged with the several States rather than with the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, after several conferences with the Department of Agriculture I introduced House Joint Resolution 192. After further consideration and another conference with the department and with Mr. Lee A. Strong, assistant director of agriculture, State of California, who offered valuable suggestions, I introduced House Joint Resolution 210 on March 22. The substance of that resolution we are enacting into law to-day.

The comprehensive report of the committee covers not only the urgent need of this legislation but also the justice of it.

By a decision of March 1, 1926, of the Supreme Court in the case of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co. v. State of Washington, which involved a quarantine by the State of Washington in accordance with chapter 105, Washington Session of Laws of 1921, for the purpose of preventing the entry into the State of alfalfa hay from the State of Idaho, it was held that the Washington statute could "not be given application," and that the State action embodied in this quarantine was "illegal and unwarranted" so long as the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, was in force. In reaching this conclusion the court held that a consideration of the act showed that it was the intention of Congress to take over to the Agricultural Department of the Federal Government the care of the horticulture and agriculture of the States so far as these might be affected injuriously by the transportation in foreign and interstate commerce of anything which, by reason of its character, could convey disease to and injure trees, plants, or crops, and that all the sections of the act look to a complete provision for quarantine against importation into the country and quarantine as between the States under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture; that the obligation to act without respect to the States is put directly upon the Secretary of Agriculture whenever quarantine, in his judgment, is necessary; when he does not act in a given case, it must be presumed that such action is not necessary.

Until this decision of the Supreme Court was handed down, the Department of Agriculture, charged with the administration and enforcement of the plant quarantine act, has felt that, in many instances and for specific reasons, the control of the spread of certain insect pests and plant diseases might well be left to State regulation, and so has advised and encouraged the placing of State quarantines and orders by which the State would protect itself against the entry of such diseases and pests from those other States in which they were known to exist.

The reason for the attitude of the department above referred to was as follows: In the case of many insect pests and plant diseases, which are known to exist in the United States, there is considerable uncertainty as to the extent to which the States and the districts therein have been affected by the pest or disease during the years in which there has been opportunity for their carriage and distribution in all sorts of traffic as well as in the movement of farm crops. In view of this uncertainty of distribution it has seemed clear, in many instances, that any quarantine under a control that would be of benefit to a particular State could be administered more efficiently and at vastly less cost under State than under Federal action. Placing a Federal embargo on the movement of alfalfa, for instance, and other products which would carry the alfalfa weevil, would undoubtedly be more drastic than conditions justify, and yet a Federal regulating quarantine, to be of any real service, would involve control, inspection, and certification with respect to the movement of all products that could carry this pest, for example, hay, potatoes, and all other farm crops, as well as farm equipment, household goods, and so forth. The milling of alfalfa meal in the infested areas would have to be regulated. It would also necessitate inspection of highway traffic and inspection and cleaning of railway cars, as well as extensive surveys to determine distribution. All this would necessitate a very large appropriation and an immense personnel. On the other hand, a State quarantine prohibiting entry of certain products requires comparatively little money for enforcement and can be very efficiently administered.

Until the decision of March 1, 1926, was rendered the Department of Agriculture administered the plant quarantine act in the belief that it had never been decided definitely by the Supreme Court that the act was a declaration by Congress of its intention to take over the entire subject of the care of horticulture and agriculture of the States, so far as these might be affected by the interstate shipment of plants and other articles carrying insect pests and plant diseases, and so the department issued and administered its quarantines as to particular pests and diseases in the belief that the States might legally take similar action with reference to subjects not covered by a Federal quarantine.

As has already been stated, such regulatory action by the States was encouraged, with the result that there are now 30 States which have established quarantines against certain plant diseases and pests with respect to which no action has been taken by the Federal Government. Some of these quarantines, with reference to particular pests, are very widely established, as, for instance, that which aims to prevent the introduction into certain of the States of the alfalfa weevil; quarantines against this pest have been established by the following 19 States: Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. In the case of the potato tuber moth, quarantines have been established by Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Utah, and Washington.

Inasmuch as it seems clear that this recent Supreme Court decision has invalidated all such State quarantines by its holding that such State laws "can not be given application" and that they are "illegal and unwarranted," so long as the existing legislation of Congress is in force, it has been felt by some of the States, and the Department of Agriculture has concurred in this, that the situation can be corrected only by an amendment to the plant quarantine act itself which will permit the State to act in cases where the Department of Agriculture has not acted and does not act under the authority given by Congress in the plant quarantine act.

In view of the critical situation which has arisen with respect to these various State quarantines and the danger to the State which may result if their regulatory quarantines and orders are to become and remain unenforceable, it is believed that this joint resolution, as amended, should be passed without delay.

If it may be said Congress acts slowly we point with some degree of pride to this act. This legislation, which is being enacted only five weeks after the Supreme Court decision which rendered it necessary, is of vast and far-reaching importance.

Its value to agriculture can not be measured in dollars nor millions. Without such legislation destructive plant diseases would soon be distributed indiscriminately throughout the whole country. Alfalfa weevil, European corn borer, boll weevil, Japanese beetle, Gypsy moths, and numerous other pests would wreak vengeance everywhere. The damage to agriculture would be beyond repair.

FIELD DAY FOR AGRICULTURE

The Committee on Agriculture of the House has favorably reported and we are to-day passing several other bills of importance to agriculture.

Among these bills we find:

(1) An amendment to the packers and stockyards act of 1921.

The bill makes it possible for the State to have the railroad and warehouse commission registered with the Department of Agriculture as a market agency and makes it possible for the department, under the terms of the Federal statute, to control the operations incident to rendering service at the stockyards in precisely the same manner that it is now possible to control the operations of other market agencies in stockyards.

TIMBER PRODUCTION

(2) A bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories in promoting continuous production of timber.

This resolution would authorize the extension of such cooperation to the Territories and other possessions, and would be very helpful to them in furthering the forestry programs, which they have undertaken.

(3) An amendment to an act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor.

This bill would permit a more efficient cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the States in the administration of the act of June 7, 1924, known as the Clarke-McNary Act. This legislation is especially valuable to the North-western States.

WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS

(4) For participation of the United States in the third World Poultry Congress to be held at Ottawa, Canada, in 1927.

The Secretary of Agriculture tells us the United States is the most important poultry-raising country in the world, producing more than one-third of the world's supply of poultry and eggs. The industry ranks fifth in value of all the major agricultural industries of this country, having a total annual production valued considerably in excess of $1,000,000,000. It is very desirable, therefore, in the judgment of the department, that this important industry be suitably represented by accredited delegates and by national exhibit at the coming congress, and it is recommended that the necessary authority be secured to make this possible.

The congress to be held at Ottawa will be the first international poultry meeting to be held in America. Indications are that it will be the most thorough attempt ever made in any country to bring together at one series of sessions and exhibitions the most advanced knowledge relating to the production, distribution, and use of poultry products. The poultry congresses are held under the auspices of the International Association of Poultry Investigators and Instructors every third year. The first congress was held at The Hague in 1921 and the second in Spain at Barcelona in 1924. I am informed that the prestige of the poultry industry of the United States has suffered in the eyes of foreign countries through failure of the United States to be officially represented by accredited delegates and a national exhibit at either of the previous congresses, when most of the other countries had extensive national exhibits portraying the fundamental features of their respective poultry industries.

CONSERVING WATERSHEDS

(5) A bill authorizing an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled:

"An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers."

It appears that a program is necessary if the department is to carry out effectively an acquisition program such as it is believed would accomplish the purposes intended by the Weeks Act and the Clarke-McNary Act. The department reports that the complete fruition of these purposes will require further purchases of from three and one-half million to four million acres to complete the original Weeks law program, plus about two and one-half million acres in the Lake States and an approximately equal area in the pine belt of the South.

(6) A bill to provide for the distribution of the publications entitled "Diseases of the Horse" and "Diseases of Cattle."

These horse and cattle books are very valuable to farmers and dairymen. They are supplied by Members of Congress without cost on request of those who need them.

UNITED STATES AGRICULTURE IN FOREIGN FIELDS

(7) A bill to promote the agriculture of the United States by expanding in the foreign field the service now rendered by the United States Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing useful information regarding agriculture, and for other purposes.

The committee has outlined the purposes of this bill so completely and in such an interesting manner that I quote freely from that report:

This bill definitely places in the Department of Agriculture the foreign agricultural service of the United States in conformity with the spirit and letter of the organic act creating the department and puts into permanent legislative form authority now carried in the annual appropriation bill. It clearly defines the activities of the department, extends to the foreign field the services that the department is now rendering in the United States regarding competition and demand for agricultural products, the marketing and distribution problems of cotton, tobacco, wheat, fruits, and vegetables, animal and animal products, and all other farm products, the investigation of farm management and other phases of the agricultural industry, and the conduct of any activities in which the Department of Agriculture is now authorized or in future may be authorized to engage.

A consideration of the problems involved in the disposition of the surplus of agricultural products abroad and the adjustment of farm production at home and the work that is already being done in the Department of Agriculture convinces the committee of the value and importance of this work.

COOPERATION WITH OTHER DEPARTMENTS

The foreign service of the Department of Agriculture comprises the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, where, through cooperation with the Department of State, a representative of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics is the permanent delegate of the United States. Through the institute the department maintains contact with 64 of the leading nations of the world, and from their ministries of agriculture receive periodic reports relative to areas seeded, crop conditions, production, stocks, imports, and exports of agricultural products, price trends, and other pertinent information.

This exchange of information is an interchange between the departments of agriculture of the world, cleared through the international institute at Rome. From 26 of the most important agricultural centers this interchange of agricultural information is effected by telegraph.

This basic reporting service of the international institute is supplemented by cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the Consular Service of the Department of State. Through arrangement with the office of the consul general the Bureau of Agricultural Economics is coordinating the reporting on agricultural subjects by the 400 American consuls stationed in every quarter of the globe. The Department of Agriculture handles about 500 consular reports each month on agriculture and allied subjects.

The Department of Agriculture cooperates with the Department of Commerce through its Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce with reference to international trade in American agricultural products. As reports on the exports from the United States are received in the office of the above bureau, the department is notified and experts from the Bureau of Agricultural Economics cooperating with experts from the Department of Commerce tabulate the information and the results are available to both departments. As reports of the commercial attachés are received in Washington, all of those pertaining to agriculture and general economic conditions are supplied to the Department of Agriculture. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics handles about 165 attaché reports each month.

At present the Department of Agriculture is coordinating the current reports on agriculture being made by the international institute at Rome, the Consular Service, and the commercial attaché service summarizing this material into a homogeneous whole and making this information available to American farmers at the earliest possible moment after its receipt. To supplement this routine work by other departments, the Department of Agriculture maintains in foreign countries at strategic points highly specialized experts working out special problems that are technically beyond the scope of the organizations of the other departments.

During the fiscal year 1925-26 eight field workers have been maintained abroad at permanent stations, while more than 60 specialists have been in foreign countries engaged upon problems of vital interest to the production and marketing problems of the American farmer. The permanent offices in foreign countries report by radio, cable, and mail on the current economic and agricultural conditions in the countries under their jurisdiction.

Over 65 cables and between seven and eight hundred written reports are received monthly by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics alone. This bureau comprises 80 sections covering the economic production and marketing of agricultural commodities and is in contact with every important cooperative association and private marketing organization in the country. The extension bureau of the department with its 2,300 county agents is in contact with the individual producer whether associated cooperatively or marketing his products individually. Through these channels of direct contact the information relative to competition from abroad and the demand of foreign markets for American agricultural products is transmitted in the most direct and understandable manner to producers and to those marketing farm products.

FOREIGN NEWS SERVICE

The foreign news service of the Department of Agriculture is coordinated with the domestic market-news service and utilizes the machinery already established in the Department of Agriculture, thus giving the foreign agricultural information wide distribution at a comparatively small cost. This dissemination machinery consists of Foreign Crops and Markets, containing the current information received from every source on the condition of the principal crops in foreign countries and representing conditions affecting demand in foreign markets, together with special studies of countries and commodities.

Reports including a monthly review of world agriculture and a monthly survey of the foreign dairy situation, as well as weekly statements on foreign crops and markets, are prepared for weekly publication in Crops and Markets, which goes to 125,000 crop reporters, farmers, county agricultural agents, and tradesmen.

The department operates in connection with its market-news work more than 7,000 miles of leased telegraph wire stretching to all parts of the agricultural country. As foreign agricultural news is received at Washington the reports are flashed over this telegraph system to more than a score of branch offices, which, in turn, disseminate the information among producers through newspapers, mails, and radio.

More than 75 radio broadcasting stations, blanketing the entire country, cooperate without compensation in dispatching both domestic and foreign agricultural news.

Foreign agricultural news is at the present time being collected throughout the world and is being correlated and disseminated with dispatch throughout the United States.

The Ketcham bill, which we are now considering, proposes to make permanent this service to the American farmer.

EXPORT CERTIFICATES

(8) A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect and certify as free from disease and insect pests certain plant products offered for export, and for other purposes.

This bill is of widespread interest to agriculture; it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect domestic fresh fruits, vegetables, and seeds, and nursery stock and other plants for propagation, when offered for export, and to certify to shippers and interested parties as to the freedom of such products from injurious plant diseases, and insect pests, according to the sanitary requirements of foreign countries.

Mr. Chairman, the passage of these eight bills in one day is a red-letter day for the farmer.

OTHER BENEFICIAL LEGISLATION

It has been my pleasure to support every piece of farm legislation enacted since I came to Congress seven years ago. I can not recall them all; they have been numerous.

William Jennings Bryan once said:

The Sixty-seventh Congress passed more legislation that was beneficial to the farmers than any Congress before in the history of the country.

You will remember that we passed the intermediate credit act, affording the farmer new channels for credits running from six months to three years commensurate with his production and marketing methods.

We then passed a bill which increased the amount individuals may borrow on farm mortgages, through cooperation with the Federal farm loan banks from $10,000 to $25,000.

Then we placed the meat-packing industry under Federal supervision, making it possible to ascertain the status of the meat-packing and stockyards activities.

We passed the cotton standards act, which has operated so successfully.

We placed a tax on trading in grain futures, supervised the grain exchanges, and legalized the membership of cooperatives on the grain exchanges.

We legalized cooperative marketing.

We furnished a farm-to-market highway program and appropriated funds to be used for the next three years.

We increased the working capital of the Federal loan system, making it possible to float bond issues more easily.

We made it easier for the joint-stock land banks to provide capital for farmers.

We revised the tax schedule downward three times.

We limited immigration to 3 per cent of the foreign-born recorded in the 1910 census. Later the quota was restricted to 2 per cent of the 1890 census.

We prohibited the manufacture and sale of filled milk.

We placed a representative of agriculture along with industry, commerce, and finance on the Federal Reserve Board.

We reenacted the War Finance Corporation law and extended its usefulness to stockmen and farmers.

We appropriated funds for the Department of Agriculture and enacted an emergency tariff, followed by the permanent tariff.

A few days ago the House passed the farmers' cooperative marketing bill, which should aid all cooperatives throughout the United States.

SHIPPING POINT INSPECTION PROTECTS FARM PRODUCTS

The Federal inspection of perishable farm products at shipping point law, which I had the honor to write and to help enact into law, seems to have proven of great value to growers and shippers throughout the country.

It promotes honest dealing and is of immeasurable benefit to the farmer, says the Department of Agriculture.

W. L. Close, district horticultural inspector of Yakima, says that shipping-point inspection:

1. Promotes grading and standardization of farm products.
2. Secures uniform application in different sections of recognized standards.
3. Enables shippers to correct errors in grading and packing at their source rather than adjust them at destination.
4. Is a strong advertising point, and so assists in making sales.

5. Gives distant buyer an impartial report on quality and condition of products which he is purchasing.

6. Assists in forcing acceptance of products which are up to grade.

7. Shipping-point certificate together with receiving-point certificate furnishes valuable evidence in adjusting claims against carriers.

8. In case of litigation gives shipper prima facie evidence of quality and condition of his products in courts of United States and courts of many States in which they are issued.

This service in the Yakima Valley has grown from less than 500 cars in 1920 to more than 6,000 certified cars from the 1925 crop.

Daniel C. Rogers, marketing expert of Missouri, says of this law:

Nothing within the last 15 years has been offered and I prophesy that nothing within the next 10 years will be offered that will prove so helpful in placing the production of crops upon efficient, profitable, businesslike, and permanent basis.

VOLUMINOUS TESTIMONY MAY PROVE FATAL

But I have waited patiently and I am now waiting impatiently for the Committee on Agriculture to report out the Dickinson bill or some other general bill for the stabilization of agriculture. For seven weeks the hearings have continued, practically every day and often till near midnight. We are inclined to say the hearings have continued too long, but farmers representing large groups have come and are still coming from every section of the country. Their views are widely divergent. In fairness the committee must deal impartially and must hear all important groups. In my great eagerness to secure general stabilization legislation in behalf of the farmer I sometimes fear the voluminous testimony may result in a lingering death to all relief.

AMERICAN FARMER SEEKS NO SPECIAL FAVORS

The American manufacturer makes and sells on a higher plane than his foreign competitor, and rightly so.

The American laboring man receives higher wages than are paid in any other country, and rightly so. He and his family live on a higher plane, and no one would have it otherwise.

The American farmer and his family must strive to live up to American standards, while they compete with low standards and pauper labor beyond the seas.

The American farmer seeks no special favors. He wants only legislation that will do for him what we have done for capital and labor.

DOWN ON THE FARM

When I was a boy down on the farm we planted a few acres to corn, we sowed a few acres to wheat and oats and grass. We milked a few cows, we sold an occasional calf, we fattened a pen of hogs; a heterogeneous flock of poultry ran everywhere. A small band of sheep supplied blankets and socks, mittens, "pulse warmers," and red, white, and blue "comforters," and hoods for the girls.

The "Summers boys" worked early and late six days a week and cared for the stock all day Sunday. Any additional labor was procured at "50 cents a day and board," or 75 cents a day if the laborer boarded himself.

We took a few sacks of wheat to mill twice a year—that furnished flour and bread for the family for the entire year. We shelled a bushel of corn occasionally and took it to a near-by mill, waited for it to be ground, and returned with "the makings" of our corn bread and mush for winter evenings.

We swapped bacon for jeans and copper-toed boots. We swapped butter, at 8 to 18 cents a pound, and eggs, at 7 to 15 cents a dozen, for sugar and coffee and rice and "calico."

When we went courtin' we rode a mule or a stray colt. Those were the good old days our eastern friends still have in mind. No freight problem. No auto. No gasoline. No hard roads. No telephone. No radio. No phonograph. No piano. No organ—only a "jew's-harp," and I couldn't play that. No electric lights nor gas nor electric range. No coal bills. We cut our own fuel from our own or a neighbor's "woods" without restraint. No "store clothes" for Johnnie. No reaper. No mower. No "header." No "combine." Those were the days of the "scythe and cradle." No movies. No soda fountains. No nothin' for a boy down on the farm but work, fishin', huntin', trappin', the old swimmin' hole, and school and "spellin' bees" and games and "exhibitions" and church and Sunday school and "singings." That was the simple life.

Those were "the good old days" down on the farm. There was no farm problem then.

FARM PROBLEMS EXTEND BEYOND CROSS-ROADS GROCERY

Mr. Speaker, it has been difficult for the great industrial East to realize that agriculture has emerged from the shrouds of the Dark Ages. It has been difficult for some gentlemen here to realize that farming itself has become a complex industry, with problems that reach far and beyond the farm. But we are making progress. The campaign in behalf of the McNary-Haugen bill two years ago has led to the very general acknowledgment that there is a farm problem. The farmer's problems reach beyond district, State, and national lines. They extend to the fields of Canada, Argentina, to Egypt, to Holland, to China, the plains of India, Australia, and Russia. His problems no longer end at the cross-roads grocery. They do not end in Chicago or New York. He is vitally concerned with Liverpool and Paris and London.

The farm problem is the most complex, the most difficult, and the most important now confronting the country. It is not one problem, but a vast network of intricate, interlocking problems. The solution of one problem standing alone might be easy, but they can not be solved that way.

• SURPLUS IS BIG PROBLEM

I am now and throughout my life have been rather extensively engaged in farming. I am experiencing many of its difficulties month after month and year after year along with the millions who reside on the farm.

I have no panacea to offer to cure all our ills. I wish I had, but it can not be done that way. The laws already enacted are beneficial, but other legislation to help solve our surplus problem is needed. I am laying these simple facts before the Congress, with the sincere hope that they may help us all to face the farm situation with a fair, square, honest, sympathetic purpose to help and not hinder in the solution of America's biggest problem.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I shall speak on this bill for only a moment to show that the interest in it comes from all sections of the country. The State of Montana, through the action of its own legislature, put into effect quarantine laws that had shut out from my State infected plants of all kinds, which laws had worked very successfully. One result was shown in the fact that the commissioner of agriculture for Montana says that during this present year he has certified a half million dollars' worth of alfalfa seed in addition to shipments that were not certified. That alfalfa seed from the State of Montana brought in addition to the high price, on account of the high quality of seed, an extra premium of 5 to 7 cents per pound, because of the effectiveness of the quarantine laws of that State. This recent decision of the Supreme Court breaks down that protection which the State, through the action of its own laws, has been able to give to the farmers within the State. Montana is particularly interested in the passage of this resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a letter from the commissioner of agriculture for the State of Montana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by placing therein a letter from the commissioner of agriculture of the State of Montana pertaining to the subject under consideration. Is there objection?

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF MONTANA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, LABOR, AND INDUSTRY,
Helena, Mont., March 17, 1926.

The Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: I have written our two Senators concerning the quarantine laws and wish to bring this to your attention also. The October term of the Supreme Court's decision on the quarantine leaves Montana helpless in so far as our quarantine laws are concerned, and the matter of shipments of alfalfa is an important factor. We do not know how to act. This State is free from alfalfa weevil, and if it becomes prevalent in the State hundreds of thousands of dollars would not cover the loss we will sustain. Our quarantine regulations on this is inclosed, as are other regulations on bees, peas, etc.

I have certified from this office this year alfalfa seed which has been shipped out of the State worth nearly a half million dollars, besides large shipments have gone out without certification. Our alfalfa seed commands a premium of 5 to 7 cents per pound over any other State.

It seems to me that soon the States will have no rights they can call their own. If at any time it becomes necessary for us to quarantine against disease we have to go to Washington to do it—as slow as the Government functions, the damage may be done before we can get action. It would seem in cases of this kind the State would be the better judge.

Idaho, joining Montana, is full of weevil, so is Utah, Colorado, and there is some in Wyoming. This is a serious thing for our State, and I wish you or our other friends would look into the matter. Will you see Senator WALSH and Senator WHEELER; it may mean millions of dollars to us.

I am also inclosing you a copy of section of Montana law under which we quarantine. I hope you may be able to give us some definite information as soon as possible, so we may know how to proceed.

Thank you for your attention.

Very truly yours,

A. H. BOWMAN, Commissioner.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to strike a discordant note here. There seems to be a general unanimity of opinion as to the work of the committee in its expedition in reporting out this resolution a few days after the Supreme Court handed down its decision. It seems to me that the matter of quarantine of plants and seeds and fruit should be under the control of the Department of Agriculture entirely. It is not at all impossible that this very resolution you are here pleased to pass to-day will cause a great deal of trouble between the States.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. This proposed legislation takes no authority away from the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture has requested its passage.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I realize that, but we have had some experience in our city with quarantine laws, and usually we pay the bills. No one is going to ask that infected seeds or plants should be permitted in transportation from one State to another, but hasty action on the part of the State will result immediately in retaliation on the part of another State, and in that way, instead of helping the farmers, you are liable to cause a great deal of damage. Only recently we had a quarantine on Bermuda onions. Whether it was justified or not makes no difference. Coming from a foreign country, we were not concerned, although it boosted the price of Texas onions, and that was all right; but as this is going to create a warfare between the States and hasty embargoes to be placed on the importation of food products from another State, it will result in retaliation, and you will have a state of confusion instead of facilitating the conditions.

Mr. LEAVITT. But this will establish no new conditions. These quarantines between the States have existed in the past without any such conditions as the gentleman speaks of having arisen. The decision of the Supreme Court simply interferes with existing conditions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman state that in the past there were no cases where hasty embargoes were placed under the quarantine laws of the States?

Mr. LEAVITT. I know of none, and I think it is particularly important that even by proclamation of the governor a suddenly arisen condition can be taken care of.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How long will it take to communicate that same information to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. LEAVITT. It would not take much longer, but it would take them a great deal of time to act. That has been the experience.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have had experience in New York City where embargoes unnecessarily placed have simply boosted the price of food, and we have paid for it. I am pretty sure the producer in the country never got the increased price because the food by that time was out of his hands. Let us be frank about this thing. If you gentlemen who come from farming districts are satisfied with the bill, all right, but we are going to pay the price. I do not think it will do what you think it will.

Mr. ALLGOOD. But this is not a case of war against States, but a case of war against insects, those things that destroy the crops, so that the gentleman can have better apple crops in the State of New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; and I suppose our distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], who is also a member of the Committee on Immigration, will put a provision in the immigration bill to prevent these insects from coming in.

Mr. ASWELL. Would not that be a good thing?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] objects to the bill for the reason that it gives the States power to enforce a quarantine.

The only objection to the bill before the committee was from some nurserymen that were afraid of the State of New York, because the State of New York has a very strict quarantine and apparently a very competent and efficient service of this kind. They were afraid that the State might, by reason of its location, be able to work a hardship on some of the nurseries of New England shipping through the State. However, the gentleman from New York knows more about whether you can trust New York than I do. It is the only State that there is any doubt about, and the only State that there has been any complaint about, and we can not very well pass a law and give the other States the power and not give it to New York. So I am going to suggest that we pass it, treating New York as though it were in the Union for the present. [Laughter.] Perhaps we may have to amend this act in the future, but for the present let us give New York the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. What would the State of Kansas do with its wheat if it were not for New York?

Mr. TINCER. Oh, we would ship it to Galveston. Very little of our wheat goes through New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Could you finance it except through New York?

Mr. TINCER. Oh, that bread that you have been eating labeled "Made from Kansas flour," is probably a fake advertisement. Kansas wheat usually goes to the South. However, I am not knocking on New York, but the nurserymen said the conditions were such in New York that it was dangerous to give them the power. The committee determined that for the present we will give New York the same rights as we give to the other States.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is awfully nice on the part of the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCER. I am sorry to hear the Congressmen from New York corroborate the nurserymen from New York.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. We will continue to pay our taxes, so that you can get along.

Mr. ADKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen from New York are raising some question about this. I happened to be the chief quarantine officer of my State. In enforcing the quarantine law on one occasion I went to New York when there was a dangerous pest, and I found the officials of New York State just as much concerned as the officials of other States and ready to help us contend with the danger and to help us make a recommendation to our Government and recommend a quarantine against anything being shipped out of their localities. I found that the New York officials were just like those from Massachusetts when we went over there on the same mission, and I found also that the New York officials were proud to enjoy the privilege of looking after their own local affairs. So that I do not think there is any more danger to be apprehended from the State of New York than from any other State. I do not think the objections raised by the nurserymen to this law were serious. From my acquaintance in an official way with the quarantine officials of New York, I think the nurserymen will find them just as reasonable as they are in Illinois or any other State.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infested when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes

Resolved, etc., That the act of August 20, 1912 (37 U. S. Stat. L. p. 315), as amended by the act of March 4, 1917 (39 U. S. Stat. L. p. 1165), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end of section 8 thereof the following:

"Provided further, That until the Secretary of Agriculture shall have made a determination that such a quarantine is necessary and has duly established the same with reference to any dangerous plant disease or insect infestation, as herein above provided, nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any State, Territory, insular possession, or District from promulgating, enacting, and enforcing any quarantine, prohibiting or restricting the transportation of any class of nursery stock, plant, fruit, seed, or other product or article subject to the restrictions of this section, into or through such State, Territory, District, or portion thereof, from any other State, Territory, District, or portion thereof, when it shall be found, by the State, Territory, or District promulgating or enacting the same, that such dangerous plant disease or insect infestation exists in such other State, Territory, District, or portion thereof: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, whenever he deems such action advisable and necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, to cooperate with any State, Territory, or District, in connection with any quarantine, enacted or promulgated by such State, Territory, or District, as specified in the preceding proviso: Provided further, That any nursery stock, plant, fruit, seed, or other product or article, subject to the restrictions of this section, a quarantine with respect to which shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of this act shall, when transported to, into, or through any State, Territory, or District, in violation of such quarantine, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State, Territory, or District, enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such nursery stock, plant, fruit, seed, or other product or article had been produced in such State, Territory, or District, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the resolution back to the House with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the resolution (S. J. Res. 78) for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infected when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass without amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 1226, insist on the House amendments, and send the bill to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 1226, insist on the House amendments, and agree to a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker appointed as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. PARKER, Mr. COOPER of Ohio, and Mr. LEA of California.

R. 9795) making appropriations for the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHREVE, Mr. TINKHAM, and Mr. OLIVER of Alabama.

PROTECTION OF FOREST LANDS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3108) to amend section 2 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. p. 653), as amended by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. p. 1127), entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor."

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3108, with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor," approved June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. p. 653), as amended by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. p. 1127), is further amended by striking out the words "and for which in all cases the State renders satisfactory accounting" and substituting the following: "and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make expenditures on the certificate of the State forester, the State director of extension, or similar State official having charge of the cooperative work for the State that State and private expenditures as provided for in this act have been made," so that section 2 as amended will read as follows:

"Sec. 2. If the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the system and practice of forest-fire prevention and suppression provided by any State substantially promotes the objects described in the foregoing section, he is hereby authorized and directed, under such conditions as he may determine to be fair and equitable in each State, to cooperate with appropriate officials of each State, and through them with private and other agencies therein, in the protection of timbered and forest-producing lands from fire. In no case other than for preliminary investigation shall the amount expended by the Federal Government in any State during any fiscal year, under this section, exceed the amount expended by the State for the same purpose during the same fiscal year, including the expenditures of forest owners or operators which are required by State law or which are made in pursuance of the forest-protection system of the State under State supervision, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make expenditures on the certificate of the State forester, the State director of extension, or similar State official having charge of the cooperative work for the State that State and private expenditures as provided for in this act have been made. In the cooperation extended to the several States due consideration shall be given to the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, but such cooperation may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be extended to any timbered or forest-producing lands or watersheds from which water is secured for domestic use or irrigation within the cooperative States."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 3108) to amend section 2 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. p. 653), as amended by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. p. 1127), entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor," had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COOPERATION WITH TERRITORIES AND OTHER POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE PROTECTION OF FOREST LANDS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 37, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States under the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor."

The SPEAKER. This resolution is on the Union Calendar and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 37, with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States on the same terms and conditions as with States under sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor," approved June 7, 1924.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 37, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States under the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor," had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF THE WATERSHEDS OF NAVIGABLE STREAMS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 271) authorizing an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," as amended.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 271, with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the provisions of section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L. p. 961), as amended by the acts of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L. p. 825); June 30, 1914 (38 Stat. L. p. 441); and the act of June 7, 1924 (Public, No. 270); $3,000,000 available July 1, 1926; $3,000,000 available June 1, 1927; $3,000,000 available July 1, 1928; $3,000,000 available July 1, 1929; $3,000,000 available July 1, 1930; $5,000,000 available July 1, 1931; $5,000,000 available July 1, 1932; $5,000,000 available July 1, 1933; $5,000,000 available July 1, 1934; $5,000,000 available July 1, 1935; in all, for this period, $40,000,000, to be available until expended.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, after the figures "270," strike out all of the balance of line 4 and all down to and including the word "expended" in line 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$2,000,000 to be available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928; and $2,000,000 to be available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee amendment be agreed to.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the committee amendment.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, a motion is pending that the committee amendment be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Ohio that the proper action for him to take is to oppose the committee amendment and not to propose that the language which he favors shall be stricken out, for until the committee amendment is adopted the provision which the gentleman desires to have remain is in the bill.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to oppose the committee amendment. As I understand, this bill in its original form was proposed by the conservation forces of this country; that the bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator McNARY and has passed the Senate committee in its original form. For some strange reason our House Committee on Agriculture proposes to take the heart out of the bill.

The original proposition was for an authorization of $40,000,000 spread over a period of 10 years. This has been reduced by the committee amendment to $4,000,000, to be expended over a period of two years.

It simply means, gentlemen of the House, that we are indulging in horseplay with the great problem of conservation. It seems to me that from the standpoint of conservation the American people would be better off to have no bill than to have the gesture that is being made by the Committee on Agriculture, because the paltry sum of $4,000,000 will make no material dent in this great problem.

I understand the committee followed the theory they did not want to bind succeeding Congresses, but we violate that theory over and over again. Just a little while ago this House passed a buildings bill of $165,000,000 binding succeeding Congresses and administrations. We do that over and over again, and that theory falls flat. It is used as an excuse to cut down an appropriation for one of the most important things affecting America.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. I would rather not just now.

Why, gentlemen of the committee, I am amazed that so paltry a sum should be set aside for a problem so great and fundamental as the saving of America from a treeless situation. I can not understand the philosophy that would give only $4,000,000 to this purpose and would set aside $165,000,000 to build monumental buildings of stone all over the country. What will those buildings amount to if you have no trees? We have devastated our forest wealth at such a fast pace that we will pay the penalty within a few years. It was said just two or three years ago by the distinguished Governor of Pennsylvania that, in his judgment, there would be a lumber famine in this country within 25 years. He may be overstating the case a little bit, but it is only a question of a relatively short time until America will pay a terrific price for its folly of neglect in this matter.

If we have the welfare of the future of America at heart, we can not sit by and allow a small sum of only $4,000,000 to be authorized for so great a problem. It seems to me it is a civic crime that Congress has so long neglected one of the most important problems confronting us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the bill now before the committee is a bill I introduced in the House. As the gentleman from Ohio has stated, an identical bill has been introduced in the Senate, and the Senate Committee on Agriculture has reported the bill out as it was introduced, carrying an authorization for the full $40,000,000 over a period of 10 years.

This same bill was introduced in the Sixty-eighth Congress. In that Congress it was likewise reported out by the Senate committee. When the Committee on Agriculture of the House this year called for a report from the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of Agriculture on this bill, the Bureau of the Budget limited its approval to the program in the manner outlined by the committee amendment.

It is interesting to know that the Bureau of the Budget made another report on this same bill a year ago, and I am going to read that to the committee.

In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, dated January 22, 1925, written by Howard M. Gore, Secretary of Agriculture, he states:

Senate bill 3736 would authorize an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1926, and a like amount for each of the four succeeding fiscal years. This would be followed by an authorization for an appropriation of $5,000,000 for each of the five successive fiscal years beginning July 1, 1931.

And then below he states:

Submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, pursuant to Circular No. 49 of that bureau, and returned to the Department of Agriculture under date of January 30, 1925, with the advice that the foregoing is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Now, one year ago the Bureau of the Budget approved this bill in its entirety. It approved an authorization for $40,000,000 to be expended for the purchase of lands for reforestation purposes over a period of 10 years. Surely at that time the Bureau of the Budget and the administration, together with the Department of Agriculture, appreciated the importance of this legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Gladly.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the gentleman must understand that since that time we have reduced the taxes $387,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Oh, I understand that perfectly, and the gentleman further understands that since the taxes have been collected for this quarter, we have something like $100,000,000 over what we expected to receive.

Mr. MADDEN. I think they collected more than they counted on, but nobody can estimate just exactly what that means, for the reason that many people may have paid their taxes for the entire year.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Oh, yes; but the gentleman from Illinois knows very well that the same condition exists every year and that all those things are taken into consideration when statements are issued at the Treasury Department relative to the probable income of the Government for any one tax-paying year.

Mr. MADDEN. No; they can not very well do that, because nobody can tell.

Mr. WOODRUFF. They have the same situation confronting them every year.

Mr. MADDEN. I know that.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And they prophesy what the income of the Government for that tax-paying year will be at the end of the year.

Mr. MADDEN. And I may say they frequently make mistakes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes; and I will say for the benefit of the committee that in every prophecy made by the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the probable income to be received by the Government from the taxpayers of this country he has been hundreds of millions of dollars under the actual receipts.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will let me interject one statement in his remarks, I will be pleased.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I will be very glad to do that.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say I am unequivocally opposed to the increase of the sum over the recommendation of the committee because if you continue doing that you are going to create a deficit and you are going to put the finances of the country in such shape we will have to raise additional taxes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I just want to call attention to the fact that this appropriation is spread over a number of years.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes; it is spread over a period of 10 years, and in no year will there be a charge of more than $5,000,000 against the Treasury. Now, I want to answer the gentleman from Illinois when he states there will be a deficit.

Mr. MADDEN. I am talking about this matter and other matters of appropriation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I understand, and I will say it is my understanding that when the legislative program—

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Not just now. Every Member of this House knows perfectly well that any legislation, which does not have the approval of the steering committee and the leaders of the House, has not a chance to appear here for the consideration of the House. In the last Congress, as a result of the activities of some of us, the rules were amended to permit the House to govern itself. In that Congress it was possible for the Members, if a majority was not in agreement with the committees having legislation under consideration, or if they were not in harmony with the steering committee, to take such action as in their judgment seemed wise. All this is changed, however, as the present House repealed the rules adopted in the Sixty-eighth Congress and thereby the Members obediently shackled themselves to such an extent that they now find themselves in a condition where the will of the leaders, so far as calling up legislation is concerned at least, is of necessity the will of the Members themselves.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, the legislative program was agreed upon by the steering committee when the amount of tax reduction had been determined and before the tax receipts were known. When the program was agreed upon the Secretary of the Treasury was prophesying a small deficit, approximately $20,000,000, at the end of two or three years. Since that time, however, the first quarterly payment of taxes has been made, and instead of receiving the amounts the Treasury Department expected, these amounts have been so increased that it is now announced by the department that the excess over the amount anticipated will approximate $100,000,000. The gentleman from Illinois has in mind other appropriations to be made from the Treasury. Of course he has. So had the steering committee when it agreed upon the legislative program. No doubt this bill as amended was approved by the leaders of the House at that time and was a part of their program. It must have been, otherwise you gentlemen would not have an opportunity to-day to vote upon it. If we strike out the committee amendment, we increase the demands upon the Treasury this year only $1,000,000. Next year and the three following years a like amount. Five million dollars would be authorized for the five following years. In view of the vast increase in tax receipts over those estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, I fail to appreciate the concern which some of the Members feel as to the condition of the Treasury should the committee amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Gentlemen of the committee, there is no one who will be more careful about bringing a deficit upon this country than I will be. I do not ever want to see a deficit facing this country. I am satisfied, and the conditions I have just outlined have convinced me, that even should we adopt a bill authorizing double the amounts of appropriations carried in my original bill, there will be no deficit at the end of this year nor in the next 10 years.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman any information that the corporation tax has been increased?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I have the same information that the gentleman has. I know the capital-stock tax has been repealed and the corporation tax has been increased to offset the loss occasioned by the repeal of that tax.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The receipts indicate that there will be a reduction in the corporation tax.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Then the experts of the Treasury Department and the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate are poor mathematicians. They knew the amount derived from the capital-stock tax and the amount derived from the corporation tax. They must have known how much it would be necessary to increase the one to offset the loss on the other.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. None of them have said that the prospective corporation tax will be increased.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Everybody knows that when they raised the corporation tax they believed that would offset the loss occasioned by the repeal of the capital-stock tax, and the purpose of the repeal of the capital stock itself was not to reduce the tax on the corporation, but to get rid of the nuisance of making a separate return on their capital stock.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think every man here, certainly every man here ought to know what the situation in the country is relative to our forests. I wonder how many of you know that to-day there is being consumed in this country five times the amount of timber that grows each year in the country. Our timber supply is limited. It is growing more limited each year, and a man does not have to be much of a mathematical expert to realize that the time is coming very soon when we will have no forests in the country unless something very substantial is done to replace these denuded forests. There are many millions of acres of land in this country that are worthless for anything but the growing of timber. This bill proposes to put these now worthless lands to work. I do not want to go further into this, because I know the Members feel the gravity of the situation as well as I do.

I want to say again that in view of the fact that the Bureau of the Budget a year ago approved of this identical measure, that they approved of it in its entirety, that since that time the Congress has given to the taxpayers of the country $387,000,000 in reduction of taxes, and that there will be a surplus at the end of the taxpaying year, it is my sincere hope the House will vote down the committee amendment.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. In your bill you set out a 10-year program for forest conservation?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. And the committee amendment reduces it to a two-year program?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. Do they make the same appropriation for the two years that was made in your bill for a 10-year program?

Mr. WOODRUFF. They do not. In my bill there was provided $3,000,000 a year for the first five years and $5,000,000 a year for the second five years. The committee has reported a committee amendment with only $2,000,000 for each of two years.

Mr. RAGON. What is the attitude of the people who have the forest conservation in this country in charge?

Mr. WOODRUFF. A year ago the Secretary of Agriculture was in favor of the original program. I believe the officials of the Forest Service were for it without exception. The spokesmen for that service now find themselves in a delicate situation as a result of the most recent mandate from the Bureau of the Budget, and while the witnesses from the Forest Service appearing before the committee did not urge the adoption of the bill in its entirety it is significant that not one word was said against it by any one of them. I believe every Member of the House should realize the situation that exists and be for the bill as originally introduced.

Mr. RAGON. I think I am.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The conservation organizations of the country, the organizations interested in wild life, in playgrounds, everywhere, have indorsed the bill and there is no objection to it from any source, except that which comes from the Bureau of the Budget and the Agricultural Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendments. This proposition comes before the House in a peculiar way. In the first place it is not the only conservation law we have in the United States. We have the national forests, we have the Weeks law, we have the Clark law passed by this Congress.

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. DAVEY. I want to call attention to the report of the United States Forest Service published in 1920, in which they say there are 81,000,000 acres of land fully cut and burned and unproductive and that that land still remains unused.

Mr. TINCHER. Well, I have yielded, but that has not one earthly thing to do with this. Here is what happened. The Committee on Agriculture without a single exception are as seriously conservationists as is the gentleman from Ohio or any other man. They were confronted with a practical proposition, they are serious minded, and on this feature of conservation the Department of Agriculture and the Budget Bureau agreed that there should be but $2,000,000 a year expended in the next two years.

The gentleman comes here now and questions the sincerity of the Committee on Agriculture in its entirety, as to its members being conservationists. Instead of appearing before the committee as an industrious, hard-working Congressman has a right to do, the gentleman waited until we reported out the bill, and then comes into the House of Representatives and takes his place on the floor and denounces us for our lack of being faithful on the subject of conservation, because, forsooth, we would not carry on his little playhouse by advertising him as a great conservationist. Some of us were conservationists when he was still studying treeology, and some of us love the trees as much as he does, with all of his advertisement. The gentleman has no right to impugn the good faith of this committee in reporting out a program that is in keeping with the recommendations of the department and charge us with lack of loyalty to a program of conservation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman knows that I have not impugned the action of the committee.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no; the gentleman from Michigan has not been writing any round-robin letter.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The action which the committee took relative to this bill was taken before the tax returns had been made, was it not?

Mr. TINCHER. No.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Well, it was at a time before the tax returns were in, when everybody looked forward to a deficit in the Treasury as a result of the tax reduction.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, I do not agree to that statement. I never looked forward to a deficit. I agree with the gentleman in one way, that whenever Mr. Mellon says that we are going to have a surplus of $11,000,000, I look forward to a surplus of $111,000,000, because he runs the Government just like every successful business man runs his business, and he overestimates the deficit and underestimates the income, and so long as he runs the Government in that way it will be in good shape. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Inasmuch as the gentleman has just made the statement he has, can he consistently say to this committee this afternoon that if we adopt this bill as originally introduced we will have a deficit facing us at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I would not say that, but if we let enthusiasts with a round-robin letter denounce the committees reporting out authorizations and appropriations, and have them write the bills instead of the committees that hear the testimony and talk to the departments, we surely will have a deficit.

Mr. WOODRUFF. But this is my bill.

Mr. TINCHER. And the gentleman did not write us all a letter.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I did not.

Mr. TINCHER. So far as I am concerned, my answer to the letter is this, that if the committee amendment is not adopted, then the bill should go back to the Committee on Agriculture for further consideration, because I do not think we ought to write laws with round-robin letters.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. What was the committee's reason for reviewing the Woodruff bill and making this two years?

Mr. TINCHER. The department asked for it; the Budget asked for it; and I am not sure that this is a good program for conservation. I am not sure that this 10-year plan is a good plan, and I believe about half the Committee on Agriculture will agree with me upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, I am asking the gentleman for information. The gentleman speaks of the department. From what department has he a report against this bill? The Agricultural Department?

Mr. TINCHER. The people who spend the money. You can not go and say to them "The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] is a great conservationist; he is the only lover of trees in the whole world, and here is $4,000,000; you buy $4,000,000 worth of land instead of $2,000,000 worth of land and we tell you to do that, although the committee is unanimous against doing it, but the gentleman wrote a round-robin letter and everybody has jumped into the band wagon now, and you have got to buy that land, whether you have got the money or not, or whether you think it is a good conservation program or not." So far as I am concerned, as I have said before, if you defeat the committee amendment, then I think the bill ought to go back to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the members of the committee have forgotten the situation with respect to the revenue bill. Nobody predicted a deficit, so far as I know, for this year. I did not. I said that there would be a surplus for this fiscal year. It is to the years 1927 and 1928 and from then on that we have to look with care. There are more than $100,000,000 of reductions carried by the tax bill that are not in force yet.

Mr. TINCHER. And if we adopt the policy of appropriating for the pet subjects of every enthusiast in this House between now and the day of adjournment, we will have authorized an appropriation of half a billion dollars in that time in new appropriations. Are we going to do that, with round-robin letters telling us what to do, or are we going to stand by the committees and the departments of the Government in what they ask?

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman declined to yield to me when I wanted to ask him a question. The time for debate upon this amendment is exhausted. I do not want to be unfair, but when he had the floor I wanted to ask him a question. Ten minutes were consumed against the amendment and six or seven for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it was not my thought in opposing the committee amendment to put this upon the basis of personality. It is not a question as between the gentleman from Kansas and myself. It is a question involving a great principle, and I think that, representing a great district as I do, equally great, I think, with that represented by the gentleman from Kansas, sovereign in its own right, I am well within my own right in proposing any amendment to legislation that I see fit. And if I have that argument, then it seems to me there is nothing improper in that line. I am perfectly glad to assume the responsibility for the letter that was sent to the membership of this House, and I meant every word I said in that letter.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Why did you not come to the Committee on Agriculture and give us your views? Why did you not come before the committee?

Mr. DAVEY. Well, that is water that is over the dam.

Mr. TINCHER. Why did you not do that instead of condemning us as a committee? Why not follow the regular channel?

Mr. DAVEY. I have my duty and my right also. I want to say that in my judgment this paltry sum of $4,000,000 is a mere gesture, and it will not begin to solve the problem. I was told last summer that one-fifth of the forest land in the State of Michigan has gone back to the State for nonpayment of taxes, because it had been so stripped of its timber and robbed of its value that there was no use in paying taxes on it any longer. The owners turned it back. The State of Michigan is absorbing the loss of tax revenue on that land because of devastation. This is a great problem, affecting the welfare of America. It is not a question of enthusiasm, but a question of economics.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I have some constituents living in my district who own land in Michigan, and their complaint is that the State of Michigan is overtaxing nonresidents. That is the reason assigned for the land going back to the State.

Mr. DAVEY. That is the reason they assign, but the situation is as I have stated it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is only a million dollars a year.

Mr. DAVEY. If that is so, why is this committee against the increase? Why is there an objection to passing it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That was the determination of the committee.

Mr. DAVEY. The committee is made up of individual Members of this House. They are entitled to respect only so far as their judgment is right. I am casting no reflection on the members of the committee. I admire and respect them just the same as every other Member of the House. But I have convictions on this subject, and I shall not alter those convictions to indulge in personalities. This is a great fundamental problem affecting your country and mine, and it seems to me we ought not to play with it in a small, petty sense.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. JONES. I do so for the purpose of saying just a word or two. Inasmuch as directly and indirectly some criticism has been leveled against the committee, I want to say that the committee has considered this question. The bill, as originally drafted, provided for a 10-year program. All the change that the committee made for the next two years was to reduce the authorization for those two years by $1,000,000 each; that is, to reduce the appropriation to $3,000,000 for 1928 and to $3,000,000 for 1929. It leaves the authorization for the ensuing number of years, whatever the number is, open for action when the time comes.

At any rate, the bill came before us with the authorization of 10 years. I do not believe that any committee, however wise it may be, can tell how much we shall need for conservation, or this element or phase of conservation, 10 years from now.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. In a moment. The committee saw fit for the year 1928 and for the year 1929 to authorize $2,000,000 and then left the problem open for determination when the issue should arise. Otherwise here would be an authorization for appropriations 10 years from now, at which time we might want an entirely different program. We might need a greater appropriation or we might need a less appropriation. The Committee on Agriculture will perform its duty when we face that proposition.

Mr. DAVEY. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that you can not grow trees in two years. It is a matter of a lifetime.

Mr. JONES. I know; and you can not grow trees with an authorization now to be effective 10 years from now. I think I am as much of a conservationist as anybody here; but this Congress has a duty, speaking of taxes, to the constituency of this country. It is a real duty. It is a duty not to go wild. The people of this country believe, and rightly believe, in Government economy, in the elimination of every unnecessary expense. We must have conservation not only of the forests but also of the funds of this country. The Clarke-McNary Act provided for the general program of conservation through the years. We are now determining the appropriation for carrying out that act. Inasmuch as appropriations must be made annually, what is the necessity of authorizations so far in advance? Why have authorizations now of money to be available 10 years from now?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I want to say, in response to what the gentleman has just stated, that I do not believe there is any sentiment anywhere in the country, except in the Bureau of the Budget and in the Committee on Agriculture, to curtail the program. What we want to do is to lay down a definite program and not go along in this haphazard way.

Mr. JONES. It is not a question of curtailment, but of authorizations from time to time of such funds as are advisable. Does not the gentleman think that Congress, when it has the condition before it eight years from now, will be better able than we now are to tell what the needs at that time may be?

Mr. WOODRUFF. No; I do not believe anything of the kind.

Mr. JONES. Well, then, I have no regard for the opinion of the man who entertains that idea.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman asked me another question, and I would like to answer it.

Mr. JONES. You did answer it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. No, I did not; but I can.

Mr. LAZARO. We passed a 10-year public building bill, did we not?

Mr. JONES. Yes; but I did not vote for it.

Mr. LAZARO. Does not the gentleman think it will take longer to grow trees than to erect public buildings?

Mr. JONES. Yes. But if we adopted this policy all the way along, all the other committees might as well adopt a 10-year program and then go home and turn it over to the Committee on Appropriations and let them run the Congress for 10 years following.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do not wish to take the floor in opposition to the committee, but I do wish to clear up what I think is an entire misconception of the situation. We are speaking here about wealth and about deficits as though the only wealth of the Nation and as though the only deficits with which the Nation could be confronted are those of money.

Twenty years ago Theodore Roosevelt said that the greatest internal problem then confronting the American Nation was the preservation of America's forests. It is an even greater problem to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. He was not the only man who said that.

Mr. LEAVITT. We can not work out a program on a two-year basis when we are handling the conservation problem, which extends forward into the ages. I want to be understood on that point. A two years' appropriation does not meet the conservation situation. It may meet the financial situation so far as the tax bill and the financial program with regard to money alone are concerned.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Or for a little information, perhaps. A number of years ago, while I was a Member of the House, early in my experience, the so-called Weeks conservation bill was passed. It passed with the understanding that we were going to spend $9,000,000, if I recall correctly, yet we have already spent $15,000,000. So we have not been stopping in our progress on this question. We did not agree then that we were going to proceed, but we have proceeded and it is fair to assume that, having entered upon this policy, we are going to continue it. But there is no reason why we should obligate years in advance and place mortgages on the receipts of the Government and on the taxpayers until we know just what the situation is.

Mr. DAVEY. Was the gentleman from Illinois for the public buildings bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; and I am proud to have voted for it, because it is one of the instrumentalities that is more needed in this country than anything else.

Mr. DAVEY. And that placed a mortgage on the future revenues of the country?

Mr. MADDEN. No; we did not place any mortgage on them. We have not placed a mortgage until we make the appropriations.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I am not yielding for anything except a discussion of this bill. The gentleman from Illinois has stated that because of the history of the past undoubtedly we are going forward with this forestry program. I have faith to believe that that is so.

I can not believe that the Congress of the United States could be so unwise as to follow any other policy than that. But the statement that we do not need to look ahead more than two years when we are speaking from a forestry standpoint is incorrect.

In the report of the committee itself there is this statement:

The difficulty in properly planning the purchase of lands under varying appropriations is affecting the efficiency and economy of the work of the department. It appears that a fiscal program is necessary if the department is to carry out effectively an acquisition program such as it is believed will accomplish the purposes intended by the Weeks Act and the Clarke-McNary Act.

Now, that goes to the meat of this situation. It is necessary in acquiring these great areas of cut-over lands and of forest lands that they be in areas of such size and under such conditions that they can be properly and economically administered. We have got to put into the hands of this commission an ability to look forward to a period not only of two years. Ten years is short enough. It should extend into the future even further than that, so that we can look to the solution of a problem which will otherwise confront us in the form of a deficit of resources, more menacing to this Nation and more dangerous to this Nation than any deficit which could come to the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I take the statement made by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee as a pledge that this is only a temporary situation and that this two-year limit does not express either the ideas of the Appropriations Committee or of the Committee on Agriculture. If it did this would be one of the most serious hours in the history of our country. If it were not the firmly fixed principle and purpose of this Congress to carry on this program to restore our devastated areas and again put to the use of our people the great resources of our mountains and forest lands, the preservation of the watersheds, and in that way to insure the future prosperity of our country, it would be most serious indeed.

I emphasize that I am against the retention of this amendment as a matter of principle. Because of the years that I spent as a forester, I shall vote against this amendment. I think the principle at stake is greater than the question of whether we shall have a deficit of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States next year. Let us look ahead 50 years or 100 years. Let us look into the future of our country as well as into what the situation might be next week or next year. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it true—I have been so informed—that the Bureau of the Budget last year indorsed the 10-year program?

Mr. LEAVITT. It did. I think the 10-year program is short enough. We may lose not only the $1,000,000 we are failing to provide for next year, but we are chancing the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars through the reductions in this bill. We are losing money rather than saving it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How does the gentleman calculate we are going to lose hundreds of millions of dollars? The gentleman made the statement that we are going to lose hundreds of millions of dollars, and I would like to know how he arrives at those figures.

Mr. LEAVITT. Under proper forestry practice the resources of a forest are eternal; they never run out; but if we let an area go unprotected for a period of years after it has been cut over, it may become burned over and eroded, though it was of such a character that it has raised a forest and could do so again. Thus we have destroyed permanently a resource of our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has again expired.

Mr. FORT and Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey, a member of the committee.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the committee amendment. When the bill first came before the committee, as a member of the committee I favored the original proposal in the bill as introduced, calling for a 10-year program.

I believe with the gentleman from Montana and the gentleman from Ohio that there are few subjects of greater interest, few subjects of ultimately greater value to the Nation than proper forest conservation. At the same time, I found we had already adopted the long-range policy to which they refer in the passage of the so-called Weeks Act and other like legislation. The purpose of the bill before the House is to authorize appropriations to continue this policy. The Weeks Act carried appropriations for five years. This bill grants appropriations for a further period.

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORT. Yes.

Mr. DAVEY. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the great weakness in the existing legislation is the lack of appropriations to carry it out.

Mr. FORT. I appreciate that. If the gentleman will permit, the situation is that the Government has entered upon a long-range policy of conservation, leaving it to successive Congresses to determine how much money shall be spent each year in the furtherance of that policy.

The appropriations which the gentlemen urge, therefore, are not necessary in order to establish this Nation definitely upon the policy of forest conservation. If I believed that a failure to adopt the bill in the form originally proposed would mean that there would be no further appropriations after 1928, I would vote with the gentlemen who oppose this amendment; but I regard this as a definite continuance of existing policy. Mr. Chairman, it should also be stated that this is not a two-year program; it is a three-year program. The appropriation for next year is already made. The committee amendment supplies appropriations for the two ensuing years. Therefore, if the bill be adopted with the committee amendment we are definitely giving the department for its guidance advice as to how much money it will have in the next three years.

In the second place, I am for the committee amendment because it is my sincere belief that its defeat will mean no appropriation at all, and since I believe that to be the fact, and since I believe that we should have appropriations, I am personally supporting the amendment as a believer in a continuous and long-term policy.

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. FORT. Yes.

Mr. DAVEY. The gentleman, I think, is aware that the Senate committee has approved the original program in full?

Mr. FORT. The Senate committee has, but this House has not and the Senate has not.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, because I believe in conservation, because I believe the department should have as long advance notice as we can possibly give it of how much money it will have available for its expenditure under this act, I am in favor of the committee amendment.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORT. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. The House, then, can be assured from what the gentleman says that it is the program of the Committee on Agriculture to carry on this work?

Mr. FORT. I can speak only for myself.

Mr. LEAVITT. And the program of two years is not the expression of any permanent policy, but is simply to meet the present situation.

Mr. FORT. That is my own view in supporting the amendment. I can not speak for the other members of the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, long before the gentlemen who are so solicitous about forest welfare came here the policy of preserving the forests was entered upon by the Congress, and it was not then believed we would need such vast amounts of money as it seems we need now. The program then called for $9,000,000 at the rate of $1,000,000 a year. The commission that was authorized to buy the land, I think it may fairly be said, has had some trouble spending the $1,000,000. It is about as much as they can well and systematically expend in a year; but we have gone beyond the $9,000,000.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. In just a moment I will.

We have gone beyond the $9,000,000, and we have already spent $15,000,000. I am in favor of reforestation, but I am also in favor of conservation of the resources of the men and the women of the country who earn the money to pay the bills.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is it not true that the original act that the gentleman refers to as being one spending $1,000,000 a year had to do with the buying of forests for the protection of stream heads only, and that the program has since been broadened?

Mr. MADDEN. It was to rebuild the forests.

Mr. LEAVITT. At the head of streams?

Mr. MADDEN. On the mountain sides.

Mr. LEAVITT. And a broader program has since been adopted.

Mr. MADDEN. And we have paid more money for the land per acre than I think we should have paid, although I assume they got it as cheap as they could.

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not wish to interfere with the gentleman's remarks, but I think it should be made clear that the first act, the Weeks Act, was restricted to the protection of stream heads, and we have now broadened the program.

Mr. MADDEN. I remember very well the Weeks Act, because I was the hurdle that had to be jumped before they could get the bill up for consideration, and therefore I went into it very carefully.

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Not now, please. I would like to make a consecutive statement of what I think on this subject. The gentleman will go back to buildings and things like that that have no place in this discussion.

I do not know how many thousand acres of land the Government has purchased under the Weeks Act, but I do know that the commission has done good work and they have done it at a great personal sacrifice on the part of the members of the commission. I do not suppose we could have picked a commission that would have been entitled to more confidence than the men who are on this commission, and I am perfectly willing to trust the membership of this commission anywhere, feeling that whatever they do will be done in the public interest, without any bias and without any danger along the lines of corruption.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Even to the extent of expending $40,000,000 over a period of 10 years?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; or any other sum. It would not make any difference what the sum was.

However, I would like to leave this thought with the membership of the House. You will recall that when the war closed the expenses of the Government for the year after the war were $18,500,000,000.

These expenses have been cut down until they are less than $4,000,000,000. By economies instituted we have conserved and preserved and protected the financial integrity of America. We have paid off five and one-half billion dollars of the public debt.

We have reduced the annual interest cost on the public debt as disclosed at the close of the war by $260,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that his time be extended. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVEY. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman just one question.

Mr. MADDEN. I refuse to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. We have reduced the tax on three different occasions on the income of the American people: In 1921 we reduced it by $800,000,000 a year. In 1924 by $450,000,000; this session of Congress we have reduced the taxes by over $300,000,000 more. Now, who knows what the income is going to be under the present tax rate? Nobody. There is not a man in the world who can tell. Why should we as trustees of the American people say in advance that we are going to put a new mortgage on the future of the revenues?

Suppose any man here had an estate that he wanted to leave to his son or his wife, and he made a will and put in the will a provision that the first year after he died there should be paid a thousand dollars apiece out of the income of the estate to 20 different people, and the next year $2,000 apiece to 20 different people. By doing that he would place a mortgage on the income of the estate that might make it impossible for those to whom he left the estate to have a dollar of income from the estate. What you are proposing to do when you place this mortgage on the future income of the country is that you have a fixed charge on the income that is derived from taxes, and it may amount to the total sum of what the income ought to be to run the Government. On top of that you are required to levy a tax for enough more to pay the running expenses of the Government. I want to say to you that such a policy is neither wise nor just nor fair to those who pay the bills to run this Government. While I am as much in favor of conservation and the preservation of the forests as anybody, I think there is a limit beyond which we ought not to place a mortgage on the future income of the Government and the taxing power on the backs of the American people.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman knows that this bill only authorizes the appropriation?

Mr. MADDEN. All bills of authorization impose a burden. There is where we make the mistake. We sometimes make an authorization and say it does not mean a charge against the Treasury. It does.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not a fact that the Appropriations Committee refuses sometimes to appropriate for matters authorized by the House?

Mr. MADDEN. It is; and they will refuse again. It is only because of their refusal that we have been able to pay $5,500,000,000 of the public debt since the war. Do not try to impose any new burdens on the taxpayers of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. ADKINS. Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal of discussion about this proposition and about the loyalty to conservation and all that sort of thing. I do not know of any sensible citizen of the country but who is in favor of the conservation of our national forests and our national resources and, in addition, keeping all our institutions running. Now, in order to do that the interest of the taxpayers of the country must first be kept in mind, and such appropriations made as will permit a reasonable program and still not be burdensome to the people.

Now, as to the Chief Forester, his assistant came before us and was questioned by the committee, and he made a very fair statement. I read from the hearings:

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the record should indicate clearly my status as a witness before this committee. The report from the Department of Agriculture which has just been read indicates that if the bill were amended so as to provide for an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1928, and $2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1929, that it would not be out of harmony with the financial policy of the Bureau of the Budget. What I have to say should, therefore, not be construed as an argument in favor of an appropriation of any amount or at any time excepting that it may be found to be in harmony with the financial policy of the executive department. That is necessarily the position which I must take before this committee, and a proper position.

Now, we naturally wanted to get all the information available on this matter. It was new to me, and a good many questions were asked about authorizations under the Weeks law and under this law, and I asked Mr. Sherman this question:

Mr. ADKINS. How much appropriation is authorized under this law you are operating under now? What is the extent of the operation?

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the law that we are operating under at the present time there is no limit upon the authorization, because, as the committee on reforestation stated, they believed that there appears to be ample legislative authority for any appropriations for this purpose that the Congress may deem wise from time to time. There is no limit under that, and under this bill they would be restricted and could not include any more than the amount stated in it.

Mr. KETCHAM. I understood you to remark a few moments ago with respect to the total amount purchased or to be purchased under the Weeks law that the total is $25,000,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

All these questions were gone into. I am not questioning the good faith of any of these gentlemen about conservation, and I am not trying to intimate that we should put any curb upon their enthusiasm; but having in mind the recommendations of the Budget, having in mind what is already being done, we did not think that conservation would be endangered if we appropriated $2,000,000 for these two years specified. I do not think the Congress will go out of business or that anybody is going to lose his faith in or enthusiasm for reforestation when this next appropriation that we authorize is gone. I believe that we ought to either stand by the recommendation of the committee or, as somebody says, we might not get any appropriation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUFF) there were—ayes, 62, noes 11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 271 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business for the remainder of to-day be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business be dispensed with for the remainder of the day. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, the Agricultural Committee will still have the call?

Mr. TILSON. Oh, yes; that committee has another day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10425) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, with Mr. HAWLEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for 22 minutes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had not intended to discuss, as I propose to do in the time allotted, the question of agricultural legislation, until we might have before us the report and recommendations of the Agricultural Committee.

Several factors have caused me to change my mind and account for my appearance now. The bill under discussion seems to have provided a field day for the discussion of almost every subject of interest to the Members and this country. Many people intensely interested in farm legislation, both here and elsewhere, have become somewhat alarmed as we have noticed the existence of certain conditions. We have regretted, for instance, that our friend from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and our friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] seem to be at such divergence as has been demonstrated during these discussions, for we have learned to recognize both of them as leaders of the best thought and of sound views on questions pertaining to agricultural legislation.

The country particularly interested has commenced to fear that the Agricultural Committee may spend all of its time in hearings, rather than in actually getting to the work of writing and reporting a bill. When I say this I do so in no spirit of criticism whatever, because I know they have a tremendous task ahead of them and I recognize fully the necessity of getting the viewpoints of the various people, interests, organizations, and sections concerned. But we do see the session gradually coming to an end, adjournment possibly in a few weeks, and there are some of us who earnestly feel that something worth while can and should be accomplished at this session.

While all of these reasons impelled me to speak at this time, my most immediate purpose is to try to clear away a little of the misunderstanding that seems to exist in many parts of the country, and particularly in the East, as disclosed in the metropolitan press and elsewhere, as to what the people from the West are actually looking for in the nature of agricultural legislation. Sometimes as I read the editorials appearing in such papers as the Washington Post, misrepresenting the views of the farmers, misrepresenting the legislation before us, so that no one could recognize it, my blood fairly boils. The writers of such articles seem to have no conception of what the legislation is.

It is only natural, perhaps, that Members ask me the specific question as to what my attitude is with reference to such legislation and what we hope to accomplish. I want to make it plain at the outset that I am thoroughly opposed to any so-called temporary emergency legislation, something that is proposed to take care of some temporary difficulty, some individual crop, or anything of that sort. I do not believe legislation of that kind is necessary or worth while, but would do agriculture more harm than good in the long run.

It is true that some of our southern friends in the ardor of free-trade speeches on the floor yesterday painted dark pictures as to conditions existing in my State. They deplored our unfortunate situation and suggested relief in going back to the rates of the Underwood tariff law. I could not believe that we would benefit by putting on the free list or lowering the tariff on wheat, flax, wool, butter, cream, sugar, or any other of our crops or livestock products, and I will say to those gentlemen who are worried about North Dakota because its people desire an effective tariff rate on the crops we produce, that while it is true that North Dakota in the agricultural depression this country suffered a few years ago probably went down as low as any State in the country, yet it is also true that there is not a State in all the Union that came back with the rebound or as quickly as North Dakota did. I say further to these men who seem to want to help us by the doubtful method of taking away the protection of the tariff on the crops that we produce, that there is not a State in the Union where any man may go with his family, rent or buy a farm at a fair price, make a living thereon, and obtain a reasonable degree of prosperity with as much certainty as he can in North Dakota. But I must not use up my time in simply eulogizing the splendid opportunities of my State.

If I am opposed to emergency legislation, so-called, I am just as strongly in favor of constructive, permanent farm legislation for the benefit of agriculture as a whole. Oh, some people have told me that we do not need legislation in the Wheat Belt because they say we are getting a good price for wheat now. I am not going to enter into any discussion as to what is and what is not a fair price for wheat. I do, however, want to say to you, as well as to those of my constituents who may entertain views of that kind, that we need all be concerned with future prices even of wheat. We have had rather unusual conditions for the past two years, due to a small world crop. I am convinced that if this year or next year should result in a large world production, together with a large domestic production of wheat, both winter and spring, we would again see world prices drop, so that if they are the controlling factor, the price to the American farmer would probably not exceed 75 cents. That would be a calamity almost as serious to others as to us in the main wheat-growing States.

The entire country is interested in maintaining the prosperity of the farmer. It must have a continuous supply of good food at fair prices, the more nearly stabilized the prices are the better it is for the consumer and the more content will be the laborers in industry. In fact, capital and labor invested or engaged in other industries can not prosper if the farm population, 45 per cent of the total, is unable to purchase their products. In suggesting constructive, permanent legislation I do so only upon the theory that Congress will recognize the agricultural problem as our friend from New Jersey [Mr. FORB] recognized it on the floor the other day as a national problem.

I demand no unusual favors. I aim to urge only legislation that will give to agriculture the same kind of advantages in a legislative way as other forms of industry obtain from time to time. If we as farmers or as representatives of farming communities are willing to stand upon that principle, asking for no special privileges, you as representatives of industrial sections should be as willing to grant us whatever comes within that category.

Now, there is not anyone who will deny that much of the legislation that Congress has passed from time to time has had stabilizing influences on some or other of the industries of this country. That was the very purpose of passing it. There is not anyone who will deny that the enactment of the Esch-Cummins law, for instance, stabilizes the return upon the railroads of this country, both for the benefit of the owners and the employees. There is not anyone who will deny that the passage of the immigration act, even if it was enacted primarily for another purpose, does stabilize and protect the income of the wage earners of this country, no matter in what industry they may be engaged. There is not anyone who will deny that the Federal reserve act has had a stabilizing influence on some forms of business. There is not anyone who will deny that the Webb-Pomerene Act, making it possible for the business interests of the country to combine, in spite of the Clayton and the Sherman antitrust laws, so far as the sale of their export surplus is concerned, that is in foreign trade, has had a most stabilizing influence over many lines of industry.

I have mentioned just a few outstanding special acts. What is the general means that has been used by this country, from the very beginning, to stabilize business? The most used means is, of course, the tariff. Its use has developed our industries by preventing ruinous competition from abroad, by making possible sales to American consumers at higher than world prices. The result is a society maintained somewhat artificially, but with an American standard of living higher than maintained anywhere else in all the world. In many sections of this country we have arrived at nearly the same point in our views on the tariff; at least it is the view of all political parties in my State, with only few individual exceptions. We have come to believe that the tariff should be fixed in such a way as to cover the difference between the cost of production in this country and the cost abroad, putting us on a competitive basis with the foreign producer, if you please, and yet not on such a basis as to deny to our producers a square deal or a slight advantage in such competition.

It is only natural to ask the question whether agriculture is not also protected in that way, and a frank answer should be given. I think every reasonable man will agree that as to many farm crops and products the tariff does give that sort of protection. It does give it, for instance, to the woolgrower, to the flax producer, to the grower of sugar, to the man who produces lemons, and many commodities of that sort where we produce less than sufficient to meet the needs of American consumption.

But when we come to crops or products of which this country produces an exportable surplus, I think we ought to just as fairly admit that as a general proposition the tariff will not give protection to the same extent or degree. We should remember this, that the tariff except as a pure revenue producer is not an end in itself. The use of the tariff is simply the means of insuring prosperity to the industries intended to be protected by it.

And so the next question that naturally comes to my mind is this: If it is true that the tariff is not operative upon these export surplus crops in the sense of being reflected in the price paid producers, can not some arrangement be made, can not some sort of machinery be set up that will make that tariff just as operative on export surplus crops as on other crops, at least in so far as the amount of the crop or product that is used in domestic consumption is concerned? No one ought to say that the demand for that sort of machinery is unreasonable, because generally speaking practically all the people employed in this country, with the exception of farmers engaged in the raising of crops of which we have an exportable surplus, do with reference to their income enjoy the benefits of a protective tariff.

I admit that it is not an easy matter to set up machinery of that sort, but having in mind the facts which were so plainly brought out by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT] the other day, that the saving of agriculture for the future is a national problem, we as the Representatives of the people ought to look at it in a broad way and diligently try to determine whether it is not possible to do so.

Gentlemen, that is the idea, based, as I believe, upon a just principle which has been sold to us in the Northwest. Let me call it the idea of "finishing the job with reference to the tariff," so that it may become fully operative upon surplus crops. It is the principle that I would like to sell to the Representatives in Congress, particularly from the eastern sections of the country, for they are not only the ones whose votes we need, but in the long run they are going to be fully as much interested in the proposition as we are. It may well be that the very existence of the protective-tariff principle will depend ultimately upon the solution thereof.

Now, various plans have been suggested. One proposal, not necessarily contemplating legislation, is through cooperative organizations. Theoretically that is possible, if it can be accomplished. Let me illustrate what I mean. Take the case of wheat, simply as an illustration. If one man, if one corporation, or one cooperative association owned 800,000,000 bushels of wheat, all the wheat produced in this country during any given season, and if he knew, or the management of the corporation or association knew, that 600,000,000 bushels of that wheat would be used by the people of this country and knew that 200,000,000 bushels of it could not be used in this country, and he also saw written on the statute books or enacted through executive machinery under authority of law a provision in substance that this country had found that there is a difference in the cost of producing wheat here and abroad of 42 cents per bushel, and had therefore declared as a national policy that no foreign wheat could be imported and sold in the United States without first leaving 42 cents per bushel at the customhouse, how would that individual or cooperative association or corporation handle the marketing of that crop?

Is not the answer plain? Would they not simply say, "Here, there are 200,000,000 bushels that we will have to sell at the world's price because that amount of the crop is not needed and can not be sold in the United States. We will therefore either segregate it, hold it from the market or sell it in export for the best price we can obtain. But as to the 600,000,000 bushels which the people of this country need, we are entitled to the American price; we are entitled to the benefit of the amount which the Congress of the United States has said will equalize the difference in the cost of producing wheat in the United States and abroad. We are therefore going to charge the American consumer the world price plus the tariff and possibly also plus the cost of transporting foreign wheat into this country." It would be a business proposition to do that and it would not be unfair or unreasonable for, as I have already suggested, the very people to whom it would be sold are the ones who are otherwise protected in their business by a tariff based upon the same principle.

But I fear a producers' organization of that sort can not be effected. You can talk about cooperative marketing, but, as I have said before on the floor of the House, organizing the people who grow walnuts or prunes or raisins in California is one thing, and effectively organizing all of the farmers in this country who produce wheat or pork or beef or cotton or corn, is an entirely different proposition. Recognizing these facts, many of the people of the West and the Northwest have given earnest consideration to the question as to whether we can not set up some legislative machinery that would make it possible to market crops of that sort in the same way as an individual or a corporation or a cooperative would be able to market them if they actually did have control of the entire crop.

Many plans have been suggested. I would like to detail them all here this afternoon, but that is, of course, plainly out of the question in view of the short time I have at my disposal. Suffice it to say that they all contemplate obtaining an American price for that portion consumed in the United States, regardless of the world price. By "American price" I simply mean the world price plus the tariff.

We had two years ago the original McNary-Haugen bill, which was not based exactly upon this principle, although I think the results of it would have amounted to the same thing.

It set up a more or less arbitrary price-fixing sort of a proposition, a ratio-price guide intended to be more or less temporary, to meet an emergency existing at the time. In that discussion, however, the thought of making the tariff effective was considered, and continued study was given, with the result that a year later the Committee on Agriculture reported what, in my judgment, is the best agricultural bill that has ever been reported by the committee. The bill was one which for identification I will call the rewritten McNary-Haugen bill. It was favorably reported by the committee, but it was not reached for consideration on the floor of the House prior to adjournment last March. Let me quote to you the declaration of policy set out in that bill and thereby give you the policy which I think should be enacted by this Congress. Section 1 provides:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to make more effective the operation of the tariff upon agricultural commodities, so that such commodities will be placed upon an equality under the tariff laws with other commodities, and to eliminate as far as possible the effect of world prices upon the prices of the entire domestic production of agricultural commodities by providing for the disposition of the domestic surplus of such commodities.

I would like to take the time to define the "domestic surplus" as I construe it, but lack of time prevents me from doing so. But, as I suggested, this is the principle which has been sold to our people. It contemplates crops of which we have an export surplus. It wants to place such crops on an equality under the tariff laws with other commodities. Bills are pending in this Congress, which while they do not lay down that very same declaration of policy have, at least, that idea in mind. That includes the so-called Dickinson bill and it includes the bill which has been proposed by the committee from the Corn Belt region, the committee selected at the Des Moines conference, which has appeared before the Agricultural Committee.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCER] the other day very severely criticized the bill submitted by the Corn Belt committee, but I want to ask you men to recall that speech and ask you whether you noticed that the provision he criticized, and the only one, as I recall it, was section 19 of the bill, found on page 17, that section which deals with corn as an emergency proposition and which eliminates corn from any equalization fee. Of course, the gentleman from Kansas, able advocate as he is, desiring to condemn the bill effectively, at that particular time picked out the weakest provision in the bill—in my judgment an indefensible provision.

But that is no argument against the other provisions of the bill which are intended to assure certain named crops and products of which we have usually a surplus the same protection of the tariff that other crops have. Generally speaking, this bill provides for a Federal farm board, which is given the special power to declare an operation period when deemed advisable by producers or cooperatives in four basic crops, or any of them, and provision is made for a revolving fund of $250,000,000 for its use as needed. The rewritten McNary-Haugen bill provided for an export corporation in which the stock of $50,000,000 would be owned by the Government. The intent of the proponents of the Dickinson bill and the Corn Belt committee bill is that cooperatives and similar agencies will be used during the operation period, while the rewritten McNary-Haugen bill contemplated actual business operations by the export corporation if deemed necessary to maintain the domestic price at a figure equal to the world price plus the tariff thereon. I am not concerning myself with the provision of the bill which Mr. TINCER criticized.

Mr. TINCER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; gladly.

Mr. TINCER. I want to state to the gentleman that since I made that speech the cotton people have come in; they have reprinted the bill and they want to take cotton away from the equalization fee. However, I want to correct one statement made by the gentleman. The gentleman stated that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and myself were apart on farm legislation. There never was a session of Congress when we were closer together than we are now. If the gentleman will talk to the gentleman from Iowa he will find that is only newspaper talk.

Mr. BURTNESS. I have only repeated statements I have seen in the press, and I want to say to the gentleman I am very glad to have that assurance.

Mr. TINCER. The gentleman can consult the gentleman from Iowa, and I am sure he will confirm my statement.

Mr. BURTNESS. If we can get the Kansas delegation and the Iowa delegation together on these propositions, I am sure we can expect more speedy and favorable results.

Mr. TINCER. Do not take your Northwest radical newspapers as authority. I suggest that the gentleman talk to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] when he wants to find out whether we are together or not.

Mr. BURTNESSE. I feel I must proceed. I accept the gentleman's statement. However, I can not agree with the somewhat slurring remarks made by the gentleman the other day about the activities of men like Frank Murphy, Mr. Peek, Mr. Hirth, or Mr. Thompson, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation. True, some of them may have made unfortunate statements before the Agricultural Committee in the enthusiasm of presenting their viewpoints. They have, however, done splendid work now for several years in educating the public to the importance of these questions. They may have been forced to insert provisions into their bill which are indefensible, due to a pressure from the corn areas, where conditions seem most acute just now. But on the whole their views seem sound to me. They have lived these issues and may at times seem extreme. We as Members of Congress can accept what is good in them and reject what is unsound. As I see it, they have rendered a valuable service.

I have already quoted the declaration of policy laid down in the rewritten McNary-Haugen bill. The declaration of policy included in the Corn Belt committee bill is considerably broader, more general, and not so exact, although the last clause thereof as well as the arguments of the proponents of the bill plainly indicate that one of its main purposes is to reflect the amount of the tariff in the price paid to the producer on export surplus crops. Let me quote section 1 to you:

SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress, in order to promote the general welfare of the United States, to promote the orderly marketing of agricultural commodities; to enable producers of agricultural commodities to stabilize their markets against undue and excessive fluctuations and minimize speculation and waste in marketing; to encourage the organization of producers of agricultural commodities into cooperative associations; and to protect domestic markets against world prices by providing for the control and disposition of the surpluses of agricultural commodities.

Another plan that has been proposed, having in mind the same principle I have indorsed, is what we can refer to very briefly as the export-bounty plan. Considerable publicity has been given to a well-thought-out export-bounty proposal known as the Noyes plan. I will include that in my extension of remarks, so that Members may have it before them in the RECORD.

There is a bill before the committee known as the Adkins bill, which is really an export bounty bill. It has also the same general fundamental principle in mind, namely, to make the tariff operative upon these crops of which we have exportable surpluses to the same extent it is operative elsewhere. I think there is one feature in the Adkins bill which probably would not appeal to the membership of this House as a whole, for its intent is to provide for the loss upon the export surplus out of the Federal Treasury. That is really what it amounts to, although it is only taken indirectly out of the funds of the United States Treasury by diminishing the amount coming in by way of the customhouse. In other words, the loss would be limited, in so far as any expense on the Treasury is concerned, to the amount that would be collected by way of import duties.

An export bounty without loss to the Treasury payable out of an equalization fee deserves serious consideration by the committee. It has the merit that no governmental agency need enter into the business of purchasing or marketing crops. If we could be assured that present purchasing and marketing agencies would so rely upon the export bounty as to assure its reflection into the price paid the farmer it would be the simplest plan, requiring the least machinery. An export bounty has at times been used by other nations. In America it was first suggested by Alexander Hamilton, who was intensely interested in building up every possible industry in our young Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BURTNESSE. None of these plans, the Dickinson plan, the rewritten McNary-Haugen bill, the Noyes plan, the general provisions of the Corn Belt committee bill, contemplate any raid upon the Treasury of the United States at all but provide this system of an equalization fee so that the amount that may be required to meet the loss on the exports sold at world prices may be paid by the producers of that particular crop within the country.

To illustrate, that might mean a tax of 10 cents per bushel on wheat in order to insure 40 cents more to the producer, or a net gain of 30 cents. The larger the surplus, the larger the tax. An explanation of the Noyes plan I will insert in the RECORD will make this fee plain to all of you. To those who urge that some crops like corn or cotton should be exempted from an equalization fee I want to say frankly that I can not in principle defend any proposal which would single out one crop or one product to secure this protection at the expense of the rest of us. It seems to me that we must all be treated alike. It is plain that a majority of Congress will never vote to pay such losses out of the Public Treasury.

I know that some say that we ought not to raise an exportable surplus of any crop. I want to ask them this question: Since when did it become a crime to produce in this country more than our people need? All you men here, at least those on the Republican side, have in years gone by taken the stump and boasted of the balance of trade in favor of the United States. Do you realize that when you have done that you have boasted of this very exportable surplus that you find in agricultural crops? That is what has made up our surplus, and as was so well brought out by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT] the other day, if you eliminate the surplus of agricultural crops, you will find that the country would have a tremendous balance of trade against it instead of a balance of trade in its favor.

From 1910 to 1914, inclusive, and from 1920 to 1924, inclusive, we had an average annual favorable trade balance of $870,000,000. During those years our average annual exports of the five major groups of agricultural products were $1,870,000,000. Eliminate such agricultural products from the picture and we would have been confronted with an annual balance of trade against us of $1,000,000,000 per year. Surely, this is a national problem.

To such who still say we should raise no exportable surplus where we contemplate selling the surplus for less than we charge the domestic consumer, let me ask: What is the result to the consumer? The result to the ultimate consumer, the man who would buy these crops in this country upon an American price is identical with what the result would be if there was no exportable surplus at all. There would simply be added to the world price the amount of the tariff, a tariff fixed upon the basis of the difference in the cost of production. This would be the price if there were no export surplus.

In closing let me suggest that if we are to remain a well rounded, many-sided Nation, fully developed as to all resources, to such an extent that we can remain practically independent of the outside world, each class must be willing to give to all others the same opportunities which it seeks for itself. If American standards are to be permanently maintained above the level of European standards or Asiatic standards or world standards in any particular, they must be available to all Americans and not only to some selected classes thereof.

For these fundamental and far-reaching reasons I believe the Congress should enact such legislation as will "finish the job" with reference to the tariff and make it operative upon export surplus crops. If that is done, you will find the agricultural sections of the country pretty well satisfied. I was pleased to hear this afternoon that the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture are about completed, and that it is their intention to get busy next week and write a bill or formulate the best of the various ideas presented to them into a measure and report it to the House. I trust it may come from the committee with practically a unanimous report and that we will all feel justified in supporting it. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend my remarks I submit herewith, so that the Members and the public may have the matter before them in convenient form, additional information about the three legislative propositions which to-day seem to be receiving the most consideration, namely, the rewritten McNary-Haugen bill, the measure proposed by the Corn Belt committee, and the export-bounty plan.

The following are the provisions of the rewritten McNary-Haugen bill setting out the special powers of the export corporation proposed to be established by that measure, the guide as to facts which must be found to exist before it would have power to determine upon an operation period for any crop product, and general provisions as to the manner of operation:

SPECIAL POWERS

SEC. 232. (a) The corporation shall utilize so far as practicable existing facilities and agencies, including associations of producers.

(b) The corporation shall cooperate with associations of producers of agricultural commodities so that such associations may assist by promoting orderly and efficient production, distribution, and marketing of agricultural commodities, and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this act.

(c) The corporation shall assist associations of producers at their request, on such terms as may be agreed upon, in establishing foreign markets for agricultural commodities.

(d) The corporation is authorized—

(1) To lease and operate storage warehouses for basic agricultural commodities (or food products thereof) purchased by the corporation, facilities for transportation (otherwise than as a common carrier) in connection with the storage of such commodities or products, and facilities for processing such commodities or products;

(2) To make contracts for the processing of such commodities or products;

(3) To make advances under terms prescribed by it directly to any person if the notes or other evidences of indebtedness representing such advances are secured by warehouse receipts and/or shipping documents covering such commodities, and/or mortgages thereof.

OPERATIONS OF THE CORPORATION

SEC. 233. (a) The corporation shall keep advised by investigations, from time to time, made upon its own initiative or upon petition of any bona fide farm or cooperative commodity organization or any bona fide association of producers, of the domestic and world prices of basic agricultural commodities and the existence of an exportable surplus of any such commodity.

(b) Whenever the corporation finds (1) that there is or may be during the ensuing year a surplus above domestic requirements of any basic agricultural commodity; (2) that the domestic price of such commodity is materially lower than the world price plus the amount of the tariff duty thereon; and (3) that the existence of such surplus renders or will render inoperative in whole or in part the tariff upon such commodity, the corporation shall determine upon an operation period and prepare for its operations in respect of such agricultural commodity.

(c) The corporation, from time to time during such operation period, shall purchase, or contract for the purchase, at the prevailing market price, and hold, export, or contract for the export of, such basic agricultural commodity, or any class or grade thereof, or any food product thereof (the domestic price of which is affected by the world price and affects the domestic price of such agricultural commodity, in amounts necessary to make the tariff upon such agricultural commodity operative.

(d) The corporation may sell, or contract for the sale of, agricultural commodities (or any food product thereof) purchased by it—

(1) In the foreign or domestic market at such times as it deems advisable, and at the highest prices obtainable.

(2) In the domestic market at such times as the corporation deems advisable, and at the highest prices obtainable, for export or for processing for export, under such regulations as the corporation may prescribe (including in the discretion of the corporation, the giving of a bond, in a penal sum of not more than one and one-half times the value of the commodity, conditioned upon the compliance with such regulations and the terms of such sale).

The following are the provisions of the bill proposed by the Corn Belt committee setting out the special powers given to the farm board proposed to be established by that measure and also the provisions indicating how the board will handle and dispose of the surplus of any crop when an operation period is established. It is to be noted that this bill does not seem to require the definite findings of fact before an operation period can be established which are required by the terms of the rewritten McNary-Haugen bill. The measure proposed by the committee contemplates much more the use of the facilities of cooperative associations and seems also intended to give to such associations practically a controlling voice as to the action that is to be taken by the board:

SPECIAL POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 7. (a) The board shall meet at the call of the chairman at least weekly, and at such other times as the Secretary of Agriculture or the chairman deems advisable.

(b) The board is authorized—

(1) To obtain, from any available sources, information in respect of crop prospects, supply, demand, current receipts, exports, imports, markets, transportation costs and facilities, and prices of agricultural commodities, and economic, legal, and financial information in respect of the organization, progress, and business methods of cooperative associations in the United States and foreign countries.

(2) To disseminate any such information, or analyses or summaries thereof, from time to time, among cooperative associations and farm organizations in the United States.

(3) To advise cooperative associations, farm organizations, and producers in the adjustment of production in order to secure the maximum benefits under this act.

CONTROL AND DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS

SEC. 8. (a) The board shall keep advised by investigations, from time to time, made upon its own initiative or upon petition of any cooperative association or farm organization, of the domestic and world prices and the existence or the probability of the existence of a surplus of any agricultural commodity or any food product thereof.

(b) The board shall furnish, upon request, to any cooperative association or farm organization, or to any producer of any agricultural commodity, or to any person owning or controlling any of such commodity, its recommendations upon the disposition of such commodity, or any surplus thereof, and upon the available methods of financing. Whenever the board is of opinion that the provisions of this act applicable to a basic agricultural commodity (as defined in subdivision (c) of this section) should be made applicable to any other agricultural commodity, it shall submit its report thereon to Congress.

(c) Whenever the board finds (1) that there is or may be during the ensuing year a surplus above domestic requirements of cotton, wheat, cattle, or swine (hereinafter referred to as "basic agricultural commodity"), or any food product of wheat, cattle, or swine; and (2) that a substantial number of the cooperative associations or other organizations representing the producers of such basic agricultural commodity are in favor thereof, the board shall determine upon and declare an operation period and prepare for its operations in respect of such basic agricultural commodity.

(d) During such operation period the board shall assist in removing or withholding from the domestic market the surplus above domestic requirements of such basic agricultural commodity or food product by entering into agreements with cooperative associations engaged in handling such basic agricultural commodity, or with a corporation or association created by one or more of such cooperative associations, or with persons engaged in processing such basic agricultural commodity, for the payment, out of the equalization fund hereinafter established, of losses, and the payment into the equalization fund of profits, arising out of the purchase, storage, sale, or other disposition, and/or contracts for the purchase, storage, sale, or other disposition (after such agreement has been entered into and in accordance with the terms and conditions thereof) of such basic agricultural commodity or food product, except that—

(1) If the board is of the opinion that there is no such cooperative association capable of carrying out any such agreement, the board, prior to the expiration of two years from the enactment of this act, shall enter into such agreements with other agencies; and

(2) Such agreement shall provide, among other things, that no payment of losses shall be made unless the purchase or contract for the purchase is made at a price which in the opinion of the board is not in excess of a fair and reasonable price, and that no sale or contract for sale shall be made in respect of which a loss would be sustained unless such sale or contract is authorized by the board.

(e) If the board is of the opinion that there are two or more cooperative associations capable of carrying out any such agreements the board, in entering into such agreements, shall not discriminate unreasonably against any such association and in favor of any other such association.

The export bounty plan, coupled with an equalization fee to pay the cost thereof, has been so well and thoroughly explained by Mr. C. Reinold Noyes, a prominent business man of St. Paul, Minn., when he presented what has become generally known as the Noyes plan, that I feel justified to include his presentation in my extension. It deserves serious study and is as follows:

The purpose of this memorandum is to present a definite and workable plan by which the tariff can be made effective upon the four major food products of the country. I assume that the reader is among those who have arrived at the following conclusions:

1. That the major cause of agricultural depression has been that the price level of the four great food products has been below the general price level of industrial commodities and services.

2. That the principal reason therefor is that the tariff is effective in raising the price of a large portion of industrial production and of many minor agricultural products, but that it has little or no effect on the prices of wheat, corn, hogs, and cattle.

3. That the only methods by which existing import duties could be made to raise the internal price level on these four commodities are, either—

(a) To reduce production to the point where it is less than domestic consumption, thus necessitating imports, or

(b) To segregate the exportable surpluses so that the supply available for domestic consumption is less than the amount required, thus bringing about the condition described under (a).

4. That it is undesirable, in the public interest, to reduce production of the four major food products both because of the immediate disastrous effect upon that large portion of the agricultural population engaged in such large-scale farming, and because of the evidence that in a comparatively short time growth of population will require all, and more than all, that we can produce.

5. That the alternative of segregation of the surpluses is, therefore, the desirable method.

6. That the principal, if not the only, action required of the Federal Government in carrying out the pledges made to the farmers by the present administration, is to adopt a workable plan for making the protective tariff effective upon these four commodities by aiding and abetting the segregation of the surpluses.

I am not arguing the above points, but am assuming that the reader agrees to them. If not, then what follows is not addressed to him.

The desiderata for any plan to accomplish the proposed results are:

- (a) That it should not introduce any radically new principle into Government fiscal policy or establish objectionable precedents.
- (b) That it should not put the Government into business.
- (c) That it should not require any new governmental agency or body for carrying it out.
- (d) That it should cost the Government little or nothing.
- (e) That it should be positive and certain in its operation to secure the desired results.
- (f) That its effect on the market should not be to disturb the present private agencies conducting the business of production, distribution, manufacture, or export of the commodities concerned.
- (g) That it should not have the tendency to increase the surplus production of these commodities or interfere with the present trend to diversified and intensive agriculture.
- (h) That it should not do for agriculture any more than is now being done for industry.

With these considerations in mind, the simplest and surest plan seems to be the combination of a tariff on imports, a bounty on exports, and an excise tax on production.

To take wheat, for example:

Tariff on imports: The tariff on wheat is 42 cents per bushel and on wheat flour, $1.04 per 100 pounds. This could remain as it is.

Bounty on exports: There should be incorporated in the tariff law, in the form of an amendment, a bounty, let us say, of 40 cents per bushel on domestic wheat and of $1 per 100 pounds on flour made from domestic wheat, to be paid to the exporter, whoever he might be, at the time of delivery on shipboard or at the border, for export from the United States. This bounty would be paid by the same agencies which collect the tariff on imports, and through the same machinery.

Excise tax on production: There should be incorporated in the revenue law an additional excise tax similar to those now in effect on automobiles, etc., which would require all producers of wheat to pay a tax on each bushel produced sufficient to cover the cost to the Government of the bounty paid on exports of wheat or wheat flour. If, for instance, 25 per cent of the total wheat crop were exported, either as wheat or as flour, it would require an excise tax of about 10 cents per bushel on the whole crop to cover the 40 cents per bushel bounty on the portion exported. The excise tax could be collected efficiently and economically, as follows:

At the time of delivery to first receiver (elevator or carrier) the farmer would be required to furnish tax receipts in duplicate covering the number of bushels delivered. These receipts he would purchase from the local post office. One copy of the receipt would be retained by the farmer, and the other would remain in the hands of the elevator or carrier as long as they retained the wheat. It would be required that all common carriers accept no shipments of wheat unless such duplicate receipts were attached to the papers therefor. At all terminal markets an agent of the Internal Revenue Department would collect all such receipts and check them before releasing the wheat for sale or storage.

With the check of original delivery of tax receipts to the Post Office Department and the double check at terminal markets the Treasury would insure that all wheat actually sold was taxed and all tax funds were received.

The effect of such a combination of measures would be as follows:

Private exporters, knowing that they could collect 40 cents per bushel from the Federal Government when they exported, would quickly bid the price of wheat in terminal markets to 40 over the world price. In fact sellers would not offer wheat much below the world price plus 40 cents, knowing that the whole export surplus would be taken at the usual small margin under that combined figure.

Millers and other traders in wheat for domestic use would recognize that if more wheat were bid in by exporters than the actual excess available there would be a shortage. Imports would be necessary, and the price would then advance to the world price plus the tariff of 42 cents. They would therefore try to bid in their needs at just above 40 cents and below 42 cents. The natural higgling of the market, the operation of the law of supply and demand, would then result in fluctuations over a range of, say, 39 cents to 43 cents above the world price. And all the fluctuations in the world market would be immediately effective in our terminal markets just as now. The fluctuations would be those of the world market plus 39 to 43 cents differential.

So far as the exporter was concerned, he would buy at a price higher than the world market by the amount of the bounty he would receive on exporting. These two transactions would balance and he would sell, exactly as now, at the world market.

So far as the domestic consumer was concerned, he would buy at a price just under or just over the world price plus the tariff, which is exactly what he is doing on most other protected commodities.

So far as the farmer was concerned, he would receive the new protected price for his whole product. But he would pay back to the Government all the gain on that portion which went for export. The amount of the excise tax would balance the export bounty. Therefore he would receive for his share of the exported surplus the same price he gets now. And on his share of the portion consumed at home he would receive the higher protected price.

In the milling and grain trades such a plan would cause no material disturbance. When they were accustomed to the new factor business would proceed as usual. Actual transactions in cash wheat vary from the quoted price on future options by a premium, or a discount, according to the estimated milling value. The actual merchandising is independent of the option markets. This process of selective buying would go on exactly as now. Both at seaboard for export or at all terminal markets for milling the cash buyer would choose his wheat. But if he were an exporter he could afford to pay 40 cents per bushel more than he now pays, for he would receive from the United States customs 40 cents bounty when he shipped. The price would then be a compound of the option price, plus the premium, plus the bounty, instead of only the option price plus the premium as now.

With the farmer two questions arise: Would he understand the plan and accept the excise tax? I believe he was so well educated in this matter at the time of the McNary-Haugen bill agitation that he would recognize the identity of this plan and pay the tax without grumbling. The McNary-Haugen plan of an equalization fee to pay the losses of the export corporation was identical with this. In the second place, would he increase acreage on account of the increased price? I believe that, in so far as he understood and accepted the plan and the tax, he would perceive that all additional production would only bring him in the world price. This would be clear to him, because the bounty would increase in aggregate amount just as fast as the exportable surplus increased, and the excise tax would increase in aggregate amount just as fast as the bounty increased. Moreover, any large increase in production and, therefore, in export would tend, other things being equal, to reduce the world price and thereby to pull down as well the domestic price, which would be based on it.

There are two types of wheat produced in this country, one for bread and another (durum) for macaroni or semolina flour. Since the proportion of each exported has no relation to the other, bread wheat and durum should be treated as two separate classes, so far as the establishment of excise tax was concerned. Raisers of one should not have to pay any part of the bounty on export of the other. The rate of tariff and of bounty would be the same for both.

In establishing the excise tax for each season, the Secretary of the Treasury, or some other official or board, would need to estimate the probable export surplus of bread wheat and of durum and the amount of the bounty likely to be paid on each. He would use the latest crop report of the Department of Agriculture in his estimate of the total crop of each and would then spread separately the total bounty over the total crop of each grain. Excise-tax rates would not need to be set until May 1 when the latest information would be available. It would not be possible or necessary for the adjustment of rates to be exact. Surpluses or deficits in the tax and bounty for each grain could be carried forward and corrected in succeeding years.

Without attempting to present exact figures, the following table is appended merely to illustrate the workings of the plan and its effect on prices.

	Bread wheat	Durum
Crop.....million bushels	773	68
Export wheat and flour.....do	158	22
Amount of bounty.....million dollars	63.2	8.6
Excise tax per bushel.....dollars	.08	.15
Assumed price for export.....do	1.30	1.10
Plus effective bounty if domestic surplus.....do	.30	.30
Less excise tax.....do	.08	.15
Net price to American producers.....do	1.61	1.34

The net gain to the farmer would range from about 25 cents per bushel to about 30 cents.

For purposes of presentation this plan is applied to wheat only. It would be equally applicable to corn, hogs, and cattle. In the case of these commodities it would be necessary that the commodities themselves and all parts of them turned into partly or wholly manufactured products should receive the necessary protection from the tariff itself. Export bounties would follow the same lines, and would be set at a figure slightly below the rate of the tariff. Finally the excise tax would be assessed against the original commodity which entered eventually, in whole or part, raw or manufactured, into foreign commerce.

Let us now check this plan with the requirements enumerated above.

(a) It introduces no new principle. This plan is the plan of the old English corn laws, from which we derived our original ideas of tariff. That was a combination of duties on import with bounties on export.

(b) The Government would have no dealing in the commodities themselves.

(c) The plan would be administered by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. No new agency would be required.

(d) The cost of the bounty would be paid by the excise tax. The cost of administration would be relatively small.

(e) It would be positive and certain in its effect.

(f) It would leave the business in the hands of the present interests without disturbance and would merely work through them.

(g) It would provide no real stimulus to increased production and would probably be well enough understood so as actually to have little effect of any kind on production.

(h) It would only raise the domestic price level on these products in the same way and to the same extent that all protected commodities are affected.

The Agricultural Committee is primarily responsible for analyzing the various proposals and recommending to us such legislation as it feels will best accomplish the results intended to be attained by each of the foregoing plans. If the committee becomes convinced that they are all dangerous we are entitled to a report to that effect giving the reasons therefor. I recognize the difficulties of their task. I am hopeful of good results to agriculture, and incidentally to every other industry, from the extended study given these questions at this session of Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to call the committee's attention to a report that appears in this evening's Washington Times. It affects something like 388,000 Federal civil employees throughout the country. It is headed, "Pension law in chaos," and reads as follows:

Civil-service retirement legislation is in almost complete chaos as the result of the attitude of President Coolidge in favoring further modifications in the program.

The White House has rejected the new Lehlbach bill, leaving the House Civil Service Committee with the alternative of dropping the legislation altogether, or of renouncing its own carefully formed judgment on the issue and drafting a new measure.

The Senate Civil Service Committee meets Saturday to act upon a new bill, but it seems doubtful whether it will be able to reach any decision without coming into sharp conflict with the views of the President. There is little sentiment on the committee in favor of further modifications of the measure, such as President Coolidge is insisting upon, it is said.

If the Senate committee ignores the presidential wishes on the issue, civil-service retirement will die a natural death, so far as the present session is concerned, on the Senate Calendar.

PRESENT STATUS

The administration leaders will decline to permit its consideration. A similar state of affairs exists in the House.

It is probable that both Representative LEHLBACH and Senator STANFIELD will confer with President Coolidge in the near future in an effort to reach an agreement. It is only by such an agreement that the legislation has any prospect of passage.

Now, gentlemen, I emphasize the fact that we have been waiting for over two years for some sort of humanizing of the retirement system, and we have waited in vain. We have a very able chairman of our Civil Service Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. I am very glad he is in the House at the present time. I asked him to be present while I addressed my remarks to the committee. He has very ably and very sincerely done his work as chairman of the committee. He has been tireless in his efforts to bring some sort of humanity and justice into this legislation, but all his efforts, as well as the efforts of the members of the committee—and I happen to be a member of the committee—have been balked.

The history of the legislation is replete with obstacles. First, we find that Senator SMOOR objected to its provisions, objected most strenuously, and then we had Herbert D. Brown, who is the chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, who took pot shots at the various bills that came out of the committee.

And then for months we waited for the actuaries' report. We were told that we could do nothing until the actuaries got through figuring. We were kept waiting, cooling our heels, as it were, until the actuaries made their report. They made their report. Then we had an attack from another quarter. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Work, made an unjustifiable attack on the bill and said that the Government ought not to contribute one cent to the pension fund. I might say that I know of no pension fund where the employer does not contribute his share.

Now we have the President, or the presidential spokesman, yesterday reported to have said that the administration objects to this bill unless it is amended materially in the sense that the annuities must be lowered from $1,200 maximum and the age limit must be increased. Thus the administration has plunged the sword clear to the hilt into the body of the bill. Et tu, Brute. The whole bill will go by the board. There will be no legislation at this session, because the question of annuities and age is the very nub of the proposition. If we strike a lower annuity and a higher age limit than are in the reported bill we so weaken it as to render it next to valueless. The responsibility lies somewhere, and it lies with the administration. I say that beyond peradventure of doubt there would be no opposition on the Democratic side of the Chamber to the bill as reported by the committee, and there would be little opposition or objection on the other side of the House. I quote the remarks made by the chairman [Mr. LEHLBACH] where he said:

The Government is committed to the policy of retirement. Whatever the cost may be, it must be met. The evidence demonstrates that the existing plan is inadequate to secure both to the employees and to the Government the full measure of anticipated benefits. Hence the Government is not receiving full value for its money. By enacting into law the provisions of this bill the present deficiencies will substantially be corrected and the additional expenditure will make productive the total cost. This is true economy.

This question must be met. Postponement will merely result in more widespread and intense insistence upon a reformation of the system. Nothing is ever settled until it is settled right. The wise course is to settle the retirement problem now and thereupon insist that it stay settled.

I am sure that is the sentiment of almost the whole House. It is the unanimous sentiment of our committee.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman says that there would be little opposition from that side [Democratic] of the House; does he mean to say that he expresses the sentiment of the minority leader?

Mr. CELLER. That is my own observation. I have not consulted with any leader.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman is not speaking for the leader of the minority?

Mr. CELLER. No.

Mr. TINCHER. With this Government subsidy in the bill, the civil-service employees would get a larger pension than do the disabled Civil War veterans that have to have an attendant.

Mr. CELLER. Two wrongs do not make a right. If Civil War veterans are not receiving just pensions, let us give them proper and adequate subsidies. But surely wrongs to them can not be used as argument in support of wrongs to over 288,000 Federal civil employees. I want those employees to know that the responsibility for failure to amend the retirement law is at the door of the administration.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, having yielded to 45 gentlemen on this side of the House, and feeling that the bill has been fully discussed, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 12, line 18, after the figures "$2,300," insert the words "assistant clerk, $2,150."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order when he learns that the Committee on Accounts, without any legislation having been proposed by myself or any member of the Committee on Immigration, and with no member of the Committee on Immigration serving as a member of the Committee on Accounts, of its own motion has discovered and discussed in that committee the fact that the clerks of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization are badly overloaded with work, and will continue so for an indefinite period, including the vacation period.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I say to the gentleman that in all fairness to him and to the rest of the Members of the House there are probably seven or eight instances just the same as the instance that the gentleman suggests. There are, for instance, the Committee on Rules, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and others. I have told all of the Members that have come to me and talked about that situation that unless there is legislation providing for these increases or additional help, as chairman of this committee I would make the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly the committees of the House of Representatives should have the assistance that they must have to do the Government's business. This particular committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has, as the gentleman knows, been charged with very important legislation. What is done in that committee becomes at once the key to many other situations. That committee, I believe, receives more mail per day than any other two committees of the House. It receives more telephone calls. The telephones go all day long, and each appeal is of a personal nature, dealing with some individual. All the other Members of Congress are calling up; their clerks come in almost continuous procession for information, not only in regard to matters of legislation but in respect to the intent of the various immigration and naturalization laws and for advice on matters somewhat of an executive kind, until the office is actually beyond its capacity. That work continues just as extensively through the summer. More printed hearings, reports, and statements are sent out to every State in the Union than from any other committee. None of this is political, partisan, or personal. I am in that office with the committee clerk, a janitor, my own clerk, and my own stenographer, and my own work to do, with all of the force driven long hours per day, to the last degree, to handle the work of the committee. These clerks, from Mr. Snyder, the chief, down, are highly competent; they have had long experience; they are not too well paid. I submit the situation needs relief.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, and I say for the benefit of the other chairmen of the various committees who are interested that I shall make it on any similar amendment offered, because we are under instruction here to make appropriations only according to legislation, and I think, when we have involved here the personnel of the Capitol, we should adhere to instructions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not object to the use of a little more time by me.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I hope the gentleman from Washington will not take too much time. We know the condition of all of these committees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This is the opportunity for me to make an appeal and for a discussion of the situation. We are making rapid progress with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. I hope the gentleman will not do that. There are several other committees in the same situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There are more than 100 bills on the calendar of my committee, with proponents and opponents demanding hearings on nearly every one.

Mr. TILSON. But this is not the proper tribunal to carry out the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. However, we are considering the legislative appropriation bill, which deals with our own affairs—the appropriations in detail for House and Senate. What better vehicle; what better tribunal? What more opportune time?

Mr. TILSON. But this is not a legislative bill; it is an appropriation bill, and the gentleman realizes we ought not to attempt to legislate upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. DICKINSON] if there is any legislation on this bill?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Not that I know of.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think the method proposed on page 33 to change the vacation-pay adjustments of the Government Printing Office employees is legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That is the only questionable point in the bill. That was put in there in order to work out a difficult situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Very well; I shall be quite content to test that little joker out when it is reached.

Mr. SNELL. Will the floor leader suggest how we could get at this proposition of clerk-hire adjustment?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman knows the rules of the House as well as I do, and he knows what committees are authorized to consider these matters.

Mr. SNELL. I am honest in saying that I do not know how to get at it in order to raise the pay of a clerk of a committee. That was done by a special committee. Have we to create another special committee in order to do that?

Mr. TILSON. I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that even the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. SNELL] says that he does not know how to go about getting relief. Does anyone really contend that the House of Representatives shall not have the help it needs or the tools it needs—meaning law books, stationery, and equipment—the equivalent of what any one of us would have in his own office in his own district? Are we wise in unnecessarily denying ourselves?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] that several chairmen of committees in the House came before the subcommittee, and as I recall, it was stated that the gentleman's committee needed additional clerical force. I know that the gentleman's committee is overworked, but I do not think we ought to embark on a policy of adding clerks to all the committees, and we can not make fish of one and fowl of another.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman from Colorado will realize that once in a while it is done, and proper, necessary provision is made for the needs of certain committees in the shortest and quickest way. The gentleman's own committee will not be criticized, for the reason that the Members of the House of Representatives themselves find it necessary to call on our Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a hundred times a day or more for necessary information. The records show this. We sit there many hours a day holding hearings at request of Members and trying to keep up with our work.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes, certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman want another clerk?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes, badly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Has the gentleman appealed to his steering committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am appealing now to the Committee of the Whole House. I shall appeal at every proper place. I do not criticize the Appropriation Committee at all. Its members are all hard-worked, but their work lets up occasionally. I say in all seriousness that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has reached a position of great importance, and it will continue to be important for years to come. Its different members should not be asked to serve on two or three other committees each.

If it is necessary to do it by a special rule, this House should provide the Immigration Committee with an assistant clerk, not a political clerk at all, not a personal clerk to the chairman, but a year-in-and-year-out assistant clerk to assist in the technical affairs of the committee, with a view to his remaining there permanently, whether this House have a Republican or Democratic majority. That would be only fair to Congress and to the Government. We should put in such an assistant clerk. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am very much impressed with the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and I seldom express myself on a subject of this kind. There are half a dozen committees in the House here, including the one on which I have the honor to be a member, the Committee on Ways and Means, that need more help. I have no fault to find with our procedure. The point of order is properly made and properly sustained; but when we are in a condition as difficult and almost impossible as the chairman of the Committee on Rules intimated he was in, to get action of this kind, why can not some method be provided by which this matter can be taken up? I do not know that the Subcommittee on Appropriations can properly take it up further, but after they have reached a conclusion as to what committees need in the way of expert help, I think—

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Permit me to say that we have not gone into that, because we were criticized for attempting legislation of this kind, and for that reason we said we would stand and make appropriations according to the authorizations now in the law, and other means would have to be adopted whereby additional legislation can be secured in case additional clerical help was required by committees.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand that the Committee on Accounts has jurisdiction of things of this sort.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is it not a fact that all you have to do is to get a resolution from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Committee on Accounts has been debating this thing of its own motion, not at my request. A year ago I did ask the Committee on Accounts for a statistician, who would also act as assistant clerk, to be employed by the committee. That request, I will say, was not granted, on the ground that other committees also needed additional clerks, and there was not time allowed for the full consideration of the subject. I am speaking for all of the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I suggest that the gentleman let the matter go to the Committee on Accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING

To provide the Public Printer with a working capital for the following purposes for the execution of printing, binding, lithographing, mapping, engraving, and other authorized work of the Government Printing Office for the various branches of the Government: For salaries, compensation, or wages of all necessary officers and employees additional to those herein appropriated for, including employees necessary to handle waste paper and condemned material for sale; to enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of law granting holidays and Executive orders granting holidays and half holidays with pay to employees; to enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of law granting 30 days' annual leave to employees with pay, said pay to be at the rate for their regular positions at the time leave is granted; rents, fuel, gas, heat, electric current, gas and electric fixtures; bicycles, motor-propelled vehicles for the carriage of printing and printing supplies, and the maintenance, repair, and operation of the same, to be used only for official purposes, including purchase, exchange, operation, repair, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use of the officers of the Government Printing Office when in writing ordered by the Public Printer (not exceeding $4,000); freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service; furniture, typewriters, and carpets; traveling expenses; stationery, postage, and ad-

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the words on page 33 in lines 15 and 16, the language being:

Said pay to be at the rate for their regular positions at the time leave is granted.

The point of order is that this is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa concedes the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. No part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used for the maintenance or care of private vehicles.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: Page 39, line 4, after the word "vehicles," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add: "and that hereafter the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives and the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, respectively, shall make and issue regulations specifying the classes of articles which may be purchased by or through the stationery rooms of the House and Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAWLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10425) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

METHODS OF APPOINTMENT

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the Record on the different methods of reapportionment and to include therein a report upon the apportionment of representatives made by the advisory committee to the Director of the Census under the census of 1920.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I inquire the length of that report?

Mr. GIBSON. Well, they are short typewritten pages, and there are 20 of them.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. A report of that kind will not be generally read, and I do not think it ought to go in the RECORD.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for this suggestion?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, we understand that it is the program for to-morrow to attempt consideration of an apportionment bill. This is not the report of the committee?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And we really have had no report from the committee during this Congress, and this may be the only data we can have. Of course, we could go back to the old reports of the former Congress; but it occurred to me, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, when the gentleman from Vermont spoke to me about it a while ago, that perhaps it might be of some value to the Members of the House.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If that is the opinion of the minority leader I shall be very glad to withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, each reapportionment must rest upon some sound mathematical basis. The problem is how to distribute any given total number of Representatives among the several States in proportion to their populations "as nearly as may be."

The proposal to reapportion the Representatives under the census of 1920 was before the House in the first session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, when the proposition was fully debated and recommitment to the Census Committee. At that time an extended and careful study of the question was made and various mathematical formulas for the apportionment examined.

The system used for the apportionment under the 1910 census was devised by Prof. W. F. Willcox, of Cornell University, and is commonly referred to as the "method of major fractions." This method does not have the general approval of the mathematicians of the country, because the "major fraction" as therein used is a major fraction not of the true quota but of an artificial quota, scaled up from the true quota by means of a sliding rate or divisor, and does not apportion the number of Representatives among the States in proportion to their populations "as nearly as may be."

Prof. Edward V. Huntington, of Harvard University, devised another method and presented it to the Census Committee of the Sixty-seventh Congress. This is commonly known as the method of equal proportions, and is a method by which the unavoidable inequalities between the several States can not be further reduced, so that in practical operation the total number of Representatives is distributed among the several States in proportion to their populations "as nearly as may be" and solves the problem as nearly as possible.

When the matter of reapportionment was before the Sixty-seventh Congress the Senate Committee on the Census requested an examination of the proposed methods of reapportionment. An advisory committee to the Director of the Census made the examination and a report to the chairman of the committee, wherein the two methods herein referred to were discussed at length.

It is understood that the method used in the pending bills is that of "major fractions." It will be observed that this committee in their report stated that the "method of equal proportions" is preferred to that of "major fractions."

The Census Bureau is of the opinion that that method is the more scientific, and should be employed in any plan of reapportionment.

The report of the advisory committee referred to is as follows:

THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO THE DIRECTOR OF THE CENSUS REPORT UPON THE APPOINTMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES
The Hon. HOWARD SUTHERLAND,
Chairman of the Committee on the Census,
United States Senate.

SIR: In accordance with the request of the Senate Committee on the Census, transmitted by your letter of February 18, 1921, our committee has examined the proposed methods of apportioning representatives among the several States. We have had before us documents and correspondence furnished by the Director of the Census, by Dr. J. A.

Hill, of the Bureau of the Census, and by Profs. W. F. Willcox and F. W. Owens, of Cornell University, and E. V. Huntington, of Harvard University. Professor Willcox is a member of our committee, but, because he devised one of the methods considered, he does not join in this report. Professors Huntington and Owens, upon our invitation, appeared before the committee and explained the methods they had devised. We have also sought the counsel of Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University. Our conclusions may be summarized as follows:

1. The "method of equal proportions" leads to an apportionment in which the ratios between the representation and the population of the several States are as nearly alike as is possible. It thus complies with the conditions imposed by a literal interpretation of the requirements of the Constitution.

2. The "method of major fractions" has back of it the weight of precedent. Logically, however, it can be supported only by holding that the Constitution requires, not that the ratios between the representation and the population of the several States shall be equal, as nearly as is possible, but that the representation accorded to individuals or to equal groups of individuals in the population (that is, their "shares" in their respective Representatives) shall be as nearly uniform as is possible, irrespective of their places of residence.

3. It is not clear that the special interpretation of the Constitution which alone is consistent with the use of the "method of major fractions" is to be preferred to other possible special interpretations which lead to other methods of apportionment. We conclude, therefore, that the "method of equal proportions," consistent as it is with the literal meaning of the words of the Constitution, is logically superior to the "method of major fractions."

In the sections which follow we explain the considerations which have led us to these conclusions.

I. THE ALTERNATIVE METHODS

The two methods of apportioning Representatives with respect to which the judgment of the committee is sought are, we understand, first, the "method of major fractions," devised by Prof. W. F. Willcox in 1910 and used in the apportionment of 1911 (cf. report of the House Committee on the Census, 1911; 62d Cong., 1st sess., H. Rept. No. 12, pp. 1-42), and, second, the "method of equal proportions," devised by Prof. E. V. Huntington in December, 1920, and brought to the attention of Congress through a letter to Chairman Slegel, of the House Committee on the Census (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 19, 1921, p. 1791). To the "method of major fractions" there may be joined a method devised by Prof. F. W. Owens in February, 1921, and named by him the "method of least errors." Professor Owens's method, it happens, although independently conceived and resting on somewhat different premises, leads to precisely the same apportionment as the "method of major fractions." It may be taken, therefore, as adding strength to the claims of that method. Moreover, Professor Huntington's "method of equal proportions" is virtually a modified form of the "method of alternate ratios," devised by Dr. J. A. Hill, of the Bureau of the Census, and recommended by Dr. E. Dana Durand, then Director of the Census, for adoption in 1911. (Report of the House Committee on the Census, 1911, pp. 48-108.) In discussing the "method of major fractions" we have taken into account, therefore, the suggestions of Professor Owens, as well as those of Professor Willcox, and similarly we have joined Doctor Hill's suggestions to those of Professor Huntington in our consideration of the "method of equal proportions."

II. FACTORS THAT INFLUENCE A CHOICE

Judged by purely technical criteria, the "method of equal proportions" is superior to the "method of major fractions." By "purely technical criteria" we do not mean matters of mathematical detail. Both methods are, in such respects, mathematically sound. The difference between them is one of logic rather than mathematics, of premises rather than of methods of deduction. Both methods are logically defensible. The choice between them is not a choice between the right and a wrong method. The question is a more difficult one: Which of the two defensible methods is the better?

We say that we base our judgment on "purely technical criteria" in order to make it clear that we have left out of account, as beyond our province and our competence, certain matters which Congress perhaps may deem important. In particular, we have given no weight either to precedent and tradition or to subtleties of interpretation, such as might be found in the language of the Constitution, or in the circumstances of its history, an indication that some particular significance or meaning should be attached to apportionment ratios.

If any weight is to be given to precedent, it will count for the method of major fractions. Professor Willcox, who devised the method used in the apportionment of 1910, has explained that his aim was "simply to provide a set of tables which would conform to the desire and purpose of Congress," as expressed in previous reports, debates, and votes upon apportionment. In the past Congress has, in fact, indicated its belief that if a State's population exceeds any exact multiple of the population of the average congressional district by a "major fraction," the major fraction gives the State a prima facie claim to another Representative. The method used in the apportion-ments of 1840 and 1910, and now called the "method of major fractions," satisfies the requirements a recognition of such claims makes as closely as is practicable.

What weight should be attached to precedent is, of course, for Congress to determine. While, on the one hand, it might be urged that if any other method is to displace the "method of major fractions," the other method must have a very considerable margin of superiority; it might possibly be maintained, on the other hand, that in view of the inherent complexities of the problem and the likelihood that all of its different aspects have not been presented to Congress in the past it would be wrong to consider the case as in any degree closed. At any rate, we venture to suggest there is one factor the importance of which has increased and is likely to increase. In the past the increased representation the more rapidly growing States have gained has seldom been at the direct expense of other States. With the interests of each State thus in a measure safeguarded, some of the mathematical niceties of exact apportionment might be disregarded. But once the size of the House of Representatives is definitely restricted the problem of apportionment takes on new importance. It is no longer merely a question of what States shall gain Representatives. It includes also the more awkward question of what States shall lose Representatives. It is possible that under such conditions Congress may hold that it is less important that the method of apportionment be based on precedent than that it should rest on the best possible logical and mathematical foundation so as to be immune, so far as may be, from successful criticism and attack.

III. THE CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENT

We do not understand that the constitutionality of either of the proposed methods is now in question, nor do we assume that the constitutionality of either of them is likely to be challenged. Both methods comply with the requirements of the Constitution in that each leads to an apportionment of Representatives "among the several States according to their respective numbers." The problem merely is, which method leads to a more nearly exact apportionment?

The words of the Constitution are: "Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed." (Fourteenth amendment, sec. 2.) As we have said, we do not conceive our task to be that of constitutional interpretation. Nevertheless, it is impossible to come to any conclusion respecting the relative merits of the competing methods of apportionment without careful consideration of their relation to the requirements of the Constitution. For this purpose we have taken the words of the Constitution at their face value. We have tried to avoid reading into them any implications not warranted by a rigidly literal interpretation.

For example, it has been held that these words imply that a group of individuals resident in any part of the United States is entitled to the same amount or share of representation in Congress as any other group of individuals of equal numbers resident in any other part of the United States. Or it might be held that it is implied that the population of the different congressional districts should be as nearly equal as possible. These two implications, seemingly somewhat alike, lead logically to two very different methods of apportionment. Congress might draw inferences like these from the stipulations of the Constitution. Our committee has not ventured to go that far. For a similar reason we have given no weight to the suggestion that the equal representation of the States in the Senate indicates that preference should be given to that method of apportioning Representatives in the House which is more favorable to the larger States. That is clearly a matter of congressional policy, outside the field of inquiry assigned to our committee.

Confining ourselves then to a literal reading of the constitutional clause, we find in it two guiding principles that have an important bearing upon the problem in hand.

First, Representatives are to be "apportioned among the several States." We have not thought it advisable for us to go beyond this clear stipulation by treating the problem as one of adjusting the equities of individual citizens, of groups of individuals, or of their Representatives. As we have suggested, the restatement of the problem in some such manner might point to a different solution from the one we favor. In its original form (Constitution, Art. I, sec. 2), the clause in question, covering as it did the apportionment of both Representatives and direct taxes, was born of an effort to adjust the conflicting interests of the different States. We have not assumed that its purpose and meaning have changed.

Second, Representatives are to be apportioned among the States according to their respective numbers. Here we have a plain stipulation that the allocation of Representatives among the States is to be determined on the basis of proportions or ratios. The ratio between the representation assigned any one State and the representation assigned any other State is to accord with the ratio between the population of the one and the population of the other. But there is no stipulation with respect to the precise way in which such proportions are to be expressed or stated.

IV. THE MEASUREMENT OF THE EQUALITY OF RATIOS

No method of apportionment, of course, can assign Representatives to the several States in exact proportion to their respective numbers. The problem then is, in Daniel Webster's phrase, to reach a result that shall be "as near as may be" to an exact apportionment. The principal difficulty occurs just at this point.

How is "nearness" to an exact apportionment to be measured? How is the difference between two States with respect to the relation between their representation and their numbers to be determined? These questions are included, in part at least, in a larger problem—how is the "nearness" of any two numbers to be determined?

The "nearness" of two numbers may be measured either absolutely or relatively. For example, which are nearer, the numbers 3 and 5 or the numbers 45 and 50? The absolute difference between 3 and 5 is only 2, while between 45 and 50 it is 5, so that by this test 3 and 5 are "nearer" than 45 and 50. But while 3 is 60 per cent of 5, 45 is 90 per cent of 50, so that relatively 45 and 50 are "nearer" than 3 and 5. Suppose that State A is given 20 Representatives, its exact quota being 20.6, while State B is given 2 Representatives, its exact quota being 2.4. Which State is nearer to its exact quota? Absolute nearness is closer in the case of State B, since 0.4 is smaller than 0.6, but relative nearness is closer in the case of State A, since State A has 97 per cent of its exact quota, while State B has only 83 per cent. Expressed in this manner, the measurement of "nearness" by absolute differences leads to the "method of major fractions," while its measurement in relative or percentage terms leads to the "method of equal proportions."

For the general problem of the measurement of the "nearness" of two numbers there is no single exclusive solution. The appropriate method must be determined by the nature of the concrete problem in hand. For example, temperatures of 5° and 10° above zero are "nearer" than are temperatures of 90° and 100°, but a firm with assets of $50,000 and liabilities of $100,000 is further from solvency than a firm with assets of $900,000 and liabilities of $1,000,000.

While the problem of the best method of measuring the "nearness" of numbers is thus, as a general problem, ambiguous, such is not the case with respect to the "nearness" of ratios or proportions. A ratio between numbers is not itself a quantity, yet there is no way of measuring the absolute difference between ratios, except by putting them into the form of fractions and treating them as numbers or quantities. In order that a ratio may be treated as a fractional quantity, certain assumptions must be made, which may not, in a particular case, be warranted. But ratios may properly be compared as ratios with respect to their relative "nearness." Thus to say that the ratio between 2 and 4 is 83½ per cent of the ratio between 3 and 5 is merely to say that the first ratio is related to the second ratio as the ratio between 83½ and 100 is related to the ratio between 100 and 100.

The problem in hand, or rather so much of that problem as we take to be within the field of our inquiry, is to determine which of the methods under review will give an apportionment of Representatives that will be, "as near as may be," in accordance with the populations of the several States. This is a matter of making ratios or proportions as nearly alike as possible. For the reasons we have outlined the likeness or nearness of ratios is best measured in relative terms. This is one ground on which technical superiority must be assigned to the "method of equal proportions."

V. DIFFERENT WAYS OF EXPRESSING RATIOS

When apportionment ratios are expressed as fractions further difficulties appear. Such fractions may take several forms. For example, their numerators may express the number of representatives to be assigned the several States and the denominators their populations. Or population may form the numerator and the number of representatives the denominator. Or, again, the representation of any two States may be compared by means of a pair of fractions. One fraction has for its numerator the population of one State and for its denominator the population of the other. The other fraction has for its numerator the number of representatives assigned the first State, and for its denominator the number of representatives assigned the other. (Denoting the number of representatives assigned to States A and B by a and b , and their respective populations by A and B , there are the following possible classes of fractions: (1) a/A , b/B , etc.; (2) A/a , B/b , etc.; (3) A/B , a/b , etc.; (4) B/A , b/a , etc.) Which among these different sets of fractions is to be selected?

If the "method of equal proportions" is used, the choice is a matter of indifference. Any or all of the possible forms of fractions will lead to the same apportionment. That is, the apportionment which will bring one set of fractions "as near as may be" to equality will also minimize the differences in the other sets of fractions. This is because when the "nearness" of ratios is measured on a relative scale, the results do not depend upon the particular form of the fractions by means of which the ratios are expressed.

When, however, the "nearness" of fractions is measured by their absolute differences so that the fractions are treated as quantities rather than as merely expressing ratios, the form of the fraction used in the comparison becomes a matter of importance. The measurement of "nearness" by means of absolute differences does not of itself lead to the "method of major fractions." That method requires the further assumption that the significant fractions are those in which the numerators denote representatives and the denominators population. Inverted, so that their numerators denote population, and with their "nearness" measured by their absolute differences, these fractions lead to a very different scheme of apportionment, which on mathematical (though not on historical) grounds has an equally valid claim to the name "method of major fractions." The "method of equal proportions," it is interesting to note, gives results that are intermediate between those given by these two ways of measuring "nearness" by absolute differences. It is somewhat more favorable to the small States than is the "method of major fractions," and somewhat more favorable to the large States than that method would be if it made use of the other form of fractions.

On purely mathematical grounds there is no reason to prefer one of these two forms of fractions to the other. The two are equally valid as expressions of apportionment ratios. It thus appears that unless other than mathematical reasons can be found for preferring one form of fraction, the "method of major fractions" encounters the formidable objection that it leads to results that are self-contradictory.

If preference is to be given to one form of fraction, it can only be because different meanings are attributed to the different forms. Now, so long as these fractions are construed to be merely the expression of ratios there can be no difference in their meanings. To state that the ratio of representatives to population is as 1 to 240,000 is to state that the ratio of population to representatives is as 240,000 to 1. A familiar example may make the matter clear. The speed of a railway train or of an airplane is stated in terms of miles per hour; the speed of a runner in terms of minutes per mile. The meaning is the same in both cases—the ratio between the two magnitudes; distance traversed and time elapsed. Science, it is true, has adopted the convention of expressing the time-distance ratio as a fraction in which distance is the numerator and time the denominator. But this is merely a matter of convenience. In inverted form the ratio, as a ratio, would have the same meaning.

To attach a distinctive meaning, therefore, to the different forms of fractions which express the apportionment ratios, they must be construed to be something more than mere ratios. This construction may be accomplished by using common denominators or by reducing the denominators to unity, so that the numerators become the quotients of the original numerators divided by the original denominators. To the numerators, taken by themselves, concrete meanings can be attributed. Thus, the number of representatives assigned to a State divided by a number representing its population gives a number which may be interpreted as the "average representation accorded to an individual in the State's population." Similarly, the quotient obtained by dividing the State's population by a number corresponding to the representatives assigned it may be construed as "the average size of a representative's constituency" or "the average size of a congressional district within the State."

So far as mathematical considerations are concerned, the processes by which one meaning or the other is imputed to apportionment ratios are wholly arbitrary. If the "method of major fractions" is to be supported, it must be by holding that what the Constitution requires is, after all, not that the ratios of representatives and population shall be equal "as near as may be" for the several States, or even that the average size of congressional districts shall be as equal as possible as among the several States, but that the differences in "the representation accorded an individual" shall be minimized. The absence of any clear reasons—save those of precedent—for emphasizing the "representation accorded an individual" rather than "the size of an average congressional district," or either of them rather than that simple proportioning of representatives according to population which the constitutional clause, taken at its face value, seems to require, establishes the second ground on which the "method of equal proportions" is to be preferred to the method of major fractions.

VI. THE USE OF SQUARES IN THE "METHOD OF LEAST ERRORS"

Professor Owens has shown that the apportionment which will make the sum of the squares of the errors—i. e., the differences between the actual share a citizen of a State has in his representative and the exact share to which he is "entitled"—a minimum will be the same apportionment as would be reached by "the method of major fractions." This result affords additional evidence that results which the "method of major fractions" gives are logical deductions from the premises of that method and possibly makes the logical premises of that method somewhat clearer. But this use of the method of least squares does not strengthen the claims of the "method of major fractions" as against the "method of equal proportions."

The "errors" whose squares Professor Owens seeks to minimize correspond to those "absolute differences" which are less appropriate measures of the "nearness" of apportionment ratios than are the relative differences utilized in the "method of equal proportions." Moreover, the method of least squares is applicable to any of the forms of fractions which may be used to express apportionment ratios, and thus leads to self-contradictory results. In short, as used by Professor Owens, it not only presupposes the validity of absolute differences as a measure of "nearness," but it also requires, as Professor Owens himself suggests, that only one of the possible types of fractional expression of the apportionment ratios shall be utilized.

VII. SUMMARY

1. It is clear that the Constitution requires that the allocation of Representatives among the several States shall be proportionate to the distribution of population. It is not equally clear that there is anything in the constitutional requirement which suggests that one of the forms in which such apportionment ratios or proportions may be expressed should be preferred to another.

2. The "method of major fractions" utilizes only one of several ways of expressing apportionment ratios. The "method of equal proportions" utilizes all of these ways without inconsistency. The latter method, therefore, has a broader basis.

3. There is no mathematical or logical ground for preferring the one form of expression of the apportionment ratio used in the method of major fractions to other forms of expression. These other forms lead, when similar processes of computation are employed, to different and therefore inconsistent results.

4. The method of major fractions logically implies preference for a special meaning which may be attached to one of the forms in which apportionment ratios may be expressed. To attach to ratios meanings which vary with the forms in which the ratios are expressed is to interpret them as something else than ratios.

5. In the "method of major fractions" the "nearness" of the ratios of Representatives and population for the several States is measured by absolute differences. The "method of equal proportions" utilizes relative differences. The relative scale is to be preferred.

Respectfully submitted.

THE ALL-AMERICAN WATERWAY

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein some correspondence from the Governor of the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record and include therein some correspondence from the Governor of the State of New York. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, the Chief of Engineers of the Army has recommended and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has reported favorably a provision in its bill, as follows:

For the further study of a deeper waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the Hudson River, across the State of New York; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend for this purpose, from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies, an amount not to exceed $100,000.

Upon this subject I desire to address the House, because it is essential to the commercial future of the United States that a ship canal be constructed from the Great Lakes to the sea and that the route shall be within American territory, across the State of New York.

The vast landlocked territory of the Middle West, now largely subject to high rail rates for the carrying of its products to the densely populated centers of the Atlantic seaboard, and thence to Europe, as well as Central and South America, should be enabled to load ocean vessels at Duluth, Chicago, and Detroit and to send them through Lake Superior, Lake Michigan, Lake Huron, and Lake Erie to the Niagara River at Tonawanda, and from there to Lockport, Oicott, along Lake Ontario to Oswego, and thence through the deepened barge canal, Mohawk River, and Hudson to Albany, New York City, and the sea.

The feasibility of the engineering features of such a canal, 200 feet wide and 25 feet in depth, have been recommended by the Board of Engineers of the United States Army, to cost about $500,000,000 for the Hudson to Oswego cut and approximately $100,000,000 for the Oicott-Tonawanda branch. In fact, seven such reports have been made, one of the most thorough of them being that of 1900. President Coolidge, in his last annual message to Congress, said:

For many years our country has been employed in plans and operations for the development of our intercoastal and inland waterways. This work along our coast is an important adjunct to our commerce. It will be carried on, together with the further opening of our harbors, as our resources permit. * * * Two other main fields are under consideration. One is the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence, in cluding the Erie Canal. This includes stabilizing the lake level, and is both a waterway and a power project. * * * No final determination can be made, apparently, except under treaty as to the participation of both countries.

In a recent statement to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, said:

The completion of the Panama Canal, together with the increased railway rates east and west to seaboard, have given the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard industries an advantage over midwest industries. * * * The result of this has been to shrink up what would otherwise have been a normal growth of midwest industry and commerce and drive it closer to the seaboard. Thus we find a long range of complaints from interior cities as to the loss of their distribution area. This movement has been of steadily increasing importance during the last five years. This again has reflex on the agricultural situation, because the ideal must be to build up industry in the midst of agriculture, thereby gaining diversification of employment, the immediate consumption of agricultural products without long transportation, and better distribution to the population of the Nation. * * * These waterways (from the Great Lakes to the sea) have a bearing not only on agriculture but they have a very material bearing upon the development of industry and upon the distribution of population. What I want to most particularly point out is that a considerable portion of the economic dislocation is due to the great economic shifts from the war. It imposes upon us a new situation and a new vision of its solution. Some alarm has been expressed that the development of these systems would damage our fine network of railways. I do not believe that is true. In normal growth we shall have 40,000,000 more population in a quarter of a century. In the last quarter of a century our railway traffic has grown from 114,000,000,000 ton-miles to 338,000,000,000 ton-miles—nearly trebled. At a much lower rate of increase we must within another quarter of a century provide facilities to handle at least double the tonnage we are handling to-day. Any study of the comparative capital cost of increasing the railway systems to serve this particular territory 25 years ahead with the cost of constructing these waterways will show that the waterways can be made from a third to a quarter less than the cost of making equivalent carrying capacity by rail. And obviously the waterways will in the end move certain classes of goods cheaper than the railroads. * * * It seems to me that if we were to make a survey of all the opportunities that lie before us of possible physical progress in our Nation, the development of our internal waterways would stand in the forefront.

The war and reconstruction necessarily required that projects of this kind should be held in abeyance. In the meantime, we must now realize the economic dislocations that have come from the war in their bearing on this problem and, incidentally, that we have recovered our economic strength to the highest degree ever known to our history. We might add as a corollary that the expenditure on works of this type is a reproductive expenditure which increases the wealth of our country many times their cost and even increases the area of tax distribution and becomes in the end an actual economy to the Government, even if we take a narrow point of view. So that these economic forces and the advance in engineering and transport science, with our recovered and increased economic strength, combine at this moment to project an entirely new vision of our waterway resources and their development.

It is obvious that in furtherance of this object there should be a deepening of the Illinois River so as to permit deeper draft vessels to travel from the Great Lakes to the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean. But that route is not direct to the Atlantic. It is therefore proposed that a canal be constructed from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic either by the New York State route or through the St. Lawrence River and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. To the latter there are many objections which are quite serious.

First. Hugh Cooper, one of the ablest engineers in the world, has testified that the cost would be between $500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000.

Second. The closed season for vessels because of ice would be from one month to six weeks longer than via New York.

Third. Such a canal would have to be built jointly with another and rival government.

Fourth. It would run through a foreign territory.

Fifth. The canal would of necessity be shut off to us in time of war between us and a country other than the British Empire, by reason of British neutrality.

Sixth. The route would be 1,600 miles farther from the Great Lakes to New York, and all points south, including South America.

Seventh. The northern lanes across the Atlantic would be more dangerous because of icebergs and fog.

Almost entirely under the leadership of Representative S. WALLACE DEMPSEY, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, it has, therefore, been proposed that the canal be constructed across the State of New York. The chief reasons for this are commercial and military. Such a route as I have described would provide all of the transportation remedies that Secretary Hoover has pointed out as necessary. Certainly it would reduce rates to the Middle West. And it would protect the country in time of war by an all-American waterway from the Great Lakes to the sea, so that our foodstuffs could reach the congested centers without molestation and unhampered by British neutrality. This is so important that it has been recommended by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the chairman of the Fleet Corporation.

In a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House the Secretary of War says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1926.

HON. S. WALLACE DEMPSEY,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DEMPSEY: Your letter dated March 2, 1926, requests a statement of my opinion as to the importance of the proposed all-American deeper waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the Hudson from the standpoint of national defense.

In general, inland waterways are of military value as a supplement to rail and highway transportation. War frequently makes increased demands on railroads even when these are not located in the theater of operations. Delay caused by congestion of transportation facilities may have a decisive military effect. The availability of waterways to relieve railroads at the time of their peak loads is a great military asset.

In the event of a great war the transportation of the agricultural products and raw material of the Middle West to the Atlantic seaboard and to the thickly populated industrial areas of the Eastern and New England States would impose a great burden on the railroads. The probable resulting congestion could be relieved by the further development of the waterways connecting the Great Lakes with the Hudson River.

From the military standpoint it is essential that waterways connecting the Great Lakes with the Atlantic seaboard shall be entirely within American territory. The proposed waterway, extending from Lake Erie via Tonawanda, the Erie Canal to Lockport, thence to Olcott on Lake Ontario, thence to Oswego, thence to the Hudson via the Oswego River and Mohawk River Valleys, would be desirable from the national defense standpoint.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

Secretary Wilbur says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 8, 1926.

MY DEAR MR. DEMPSEY: Your letter of March 2, 1926, is received, in which you request my opinion as to the importance of an all-American deeper waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the Hudson River.

I am of the opinion that the proposed all-American deeper waterway connecting the Hudson River with the Great Lakes would be a very important addition to the transportation system of the country and would be, therefore, an important asset to the national defense.

In time of war or emergency the railroads and motor transportation are generally taxed to the limit, and any additional water communication such as this proposed canal would greatly relieve such a situation and facilitate transportation of supplies to the seaboard and overseas.

It is understood that this canal is to have a depth of 25 feet and a width of 200 feet, which would enable ocean-going vessels to load at the big waters of supply on the Great Lakes and proceed directly to ports overseas without the delay and expense of transshipping the cargo. This would be a decided advantage in time of war in saving time of shipments, reducing cost of handling, and relieving congestion at seaboard terminals.

From a naval point of view, the advantage of this proposed canal consists almost entirely in the transportation of supplies, as it is not probable that it would be used for the passage of armed war vessels.

A waterway of this type to be an asset to the national defense must be entirely within the limits of the United States.

Very respectfully,

CURTIS D. WILBUR.

Chairman Crowley says:

FLEET CORPORATION,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1926.

HON. S. WALLACE DEMPSEY,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Your letter of the 2d instant, relative to the proposal to develop an "all-American route" by water between the Great Lakes and the Hudson River, has been received and read with great interest.

I understand the suggestion you have in view is deepening and otherwise improving the Erie Canal so as to make it usable by ocean-going vessels, thus making it possible for vessels operating in our ocean-going foreign trade to include Great Lakes ports in their routes.

Your reference to the matter as an "all-American route" has in view, of course, its contrast with the proposed improvement of the St. Lawrence River by the joint action of the United States and Canada, so as to make the Great Lakes accessible by ocean-going craft by that route.

As between the two routes it seems to me that the American people should be more interested in developing that one which is wholly within their own territory, and which, therefore, will be exclusively under their own control, in preference to the expenditure of millions of dollars on an improvement which will not only be very largely in foreign territory, but which will probably contribute more to the development of Canadian ports than ports of the United States.

I am sorry that I can not give you any estimates which would deserve serious consideration as to the probable tonnage which will move through the Erie Canal if extended and improved as proposed. I have no reluctance, however, in saying if the project is feasible from an engineering and financial point of view, the usefulness of such a waterway would be almost unlimited.

Very respectfully,

ELMER C. CROWLEY.

To understand the importance of the project, however, we must go back to the early colonial days when it was first thought of. It was in 1724 that Cadwallader Colden, surveyor general of the colony, declared the opportunity for inland navigation in New York without a parallel in any other part of the world. In 1776, the year of the Declaration of Independence, Joseph Carver, the explorer, said he saw nothing to prevent the great Northwest from being connected with the ocean by means of canals and the natural waterways of New York. At about the same time Gouverneur Morris expressed the opinion that—at no distant day the waters of the great inland seas will, by the aid of man, break through their barriers and mingle with those of the Hudson.

And when George Washington journeyed through the State in 1783 with George Clinton he saw the same vision. The legislature in 1784 saw something of it when it offered to one Christopher Colles the entire profits of navigation if he would improve the Hudson to Little Falls. He did not accept. In 1791 George Clinton secured the incorporation of a company to open navigation from the Hudson to Lake Ontario. Other canal companies were organized; one to build from the Hudson to Lake Champlain and another to connect the Oswego River with Cayuga and Seneca Lakes. But nothing came of them.

Finally, in 1805, the legislature authorized Simon DeWitt, the surveyor general of the State, to survey the several routes. He reported the feasibility of constructing a canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson. A commission of seven men estimated the cost at $5,000,000. But all who were interested in the project became discouraged with the exception of one man. That was DeWitt Clinton. He had been a member of the commission, had explored the route, and was convinced. When the War of 1812 came on and put a stop to his efforts he retired to his country place to work upon his figures. And after the war he continued his efforts and saw the Erie Canal completed at a cost of $7,000,000.

It is interesting to recall that in that day, as in this, an effort was made to secure the help of Congress in the building of this and other navigation projects. Representative John C. Calhoun made a statement in the House which applies to-day. He said:

What can add more to the wealth, strength, and prosperity of our country than cheapness of intercourse? It gives to the interior the advantages of the seaboard. It makes the country price, whether in the sale of raw products or in the purchase of the article to be consumed, come near to the price of the commercial town, and it benefits the seaboard by enlarging the sphere of demand. Were the pecuniary gains of the farmer or the merchant the only consideration it might well be doubted whether a system of good roads and canals should not be left to individual enterprise. But there are far higher motives. The strength and political prosperity of the Republic are concerned in it.

Timothy Pickens declared that the proposed canal across the State of New York would join distant States and unite remote parts of the Union in bonds so strong that nothing could ever break them. It was in this debate that the House first adopted the principle that Congress had the right to use revenue for internal improvements. It was also in this debate, in 1817, that the use of the canal for defense purposes was first proposed. Indeed, the entire purpose of the measure was declared to be—in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce among the several States, and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions necessary for the common defense.

To this, as now, there was opposition. The New England Members voted against it, 34 to 6, on the ground that it would assist the migration westward to Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and depopulate the New England States. The bill was passed by a majority of only two. In the Senate it had a majority of five. But President Madison vetoed it on constitutional grounds, and President Monroe declared soon after that he would oppose such a measure on the assumption that the National Government had not the right to appropriate money for internal improvements.

But the results obtained from the famous canal after its completion in 1825 went on and on to shame those in Congress and in the State who had decried it. Three thousand men had built it in eight years, and there it was before the eyes of its detractors, destined to transport freight east and west, to develop New York into the Empire State and, eventually, with the construction of the railroads which culminated in the New York Central, to cheapen rail rates and help to maintain the supremacy of the port and the State of New York. A century after its completion it was enlarged by the expenditure of $225,000,000 on the part of the State, into a barge canal. The effect upon rail rates continued.

It was largely because of the Erie Canal that the State of New York became so preeminent. It would be idle to say that this was entirely because of the canal. New York was already the leading city of the colonies at the time of the Revolution. It gave Alexander Hamilton to the young Republic. The Livingstons, the Schuylers, the Jays, and the Clintons were prominent before the canal was built. But there was never such a growth, either in the State itself or in the Great Lake country, as that which followed the gradually enhanced use of the waterway, which almost immediately made Buffalo a great city. It was this that helped to maintain that point and New York City as great transportation centers. It was this that kept New York in the path which made her the financial center of the world, with a population of more than 6,000,000 in her precincts and of double that number in her vicinity.

It is now proposed by a movement which has gained considerable headway in several of the States of the Middle West that they find relief from freight congestion by the construction of a ship canal through the St. Lawrence. The aim of those who seek to do this is entirely laudable. But at the hearings which were held before the Board of Engineers it was contended by the senior Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. LEXROTH, and others that New York, having no further use for her great canal, now desired to foist it upon the Nation; that in the construction of a ship canal across the State New York would be developed to the disadvantage of the remainder of the country; and that the State was purely selfish in her desire for such a canal. In fact, into the hearings there crept some of the jealousy of the great State of New York, some of the distrust of her, which has continued in some quarters from the time of the first Constitutional Convention until now. There was a disposition to urge a ship canal through a foreign territory rather than permit New York State to reap any advantage from it.

In refutation of the first charge against the State of New York, I quote a report of Col. Frederick Stuart Greene, superintendent of public works, to Gov. Alfred E. Smith. He says:

That the traffic carried on the barge canal has fallen short of expectations can not be denied. The canal has a theoretical annual capacity of 20,000,000 tons. In 1910, the first year after the canal was opened throughout its length, 1,238,844 tons were floated; last season 2,344,013 tons were carried. This increase has not been sufficient to prove the canal an economic success. * * * Why did the smaller, if slightly deeper, St. Lawrence canals carry 3,776,122 more tons in 1925 than did the barge canal? Why, in 1925, did 803 United States vessels pass through those canals and 2,028,510 tons of American products go to the port of Montreal? * * * The answer is that the St. Lawrence canals are not hampered by fixed bridges. The immovable bridges over our canal permit a clearance of only 15 feet. This limits the free board of hulls and the superstructure of all vessels. Our fixed bridges block boats with normally high stacks and any kind of masts. They limit the height of pilot houses and the captain's bridge to such an extent as to seriously interfere with the proper handling of large crafts.

Finally, and this is the vital point, they necessitate the building of a special type boat which can not be operated advantageously on any other body of water. * * * The Erie Canal succeeded in spite of ice and low bridges, but the investment in the mule-towed canal boat was so small and winter carrying charges so little in comparison with the business done that they could afford to remain idle during the closed periods; and the fixed bridges did not interfere with them at all. * * * The New York State Barge Canal is such an important transportation factor in this country, that, whether or not it is a failure, it should be continued. * * * That the Great Lakes at no distant date must be connected with the Atlantic by a ship canal is inevitable. * * * It is hard to understand why the United States should not leave the Canadian canal to be constructed by that country and devote its own resources to building the better American waterway from Lake Ontario to the Hudson River. * * * When the upper Hudson is deepened and a ship canal is built to Lake Ontario, Albany will become the American junction point for fresh and salt water freight. And judging from the history of Montreal, it is reasonable to assume that the port of Albany would not only keep pace with Montreal but would rapidly catch up with and surpass the Canadian port. * * * A ship canal from the Lakes to the Hudson is more than a desirable project. Unless this country is content to remain inert and see American freight shipped in ever increasing amounts through a foreign port to be carried on the seas in foreign vessels, an American ship canal is a necessity.

The second charge is that such a canal would be developed to the disadvantage of the remainder of the country, the inference being, I presume, that anything that would greatly redound to the benefit of New York would correspondingly depreciate other States. This is, of course, untrue. New York has been the natural gateway from our country to Europe. As it has grown in power and wealth, so has grown the Nation. One could not prosper without the other.

The third charge a corollary to the second, is that the State of New York, in urging an all-American canal across the State, is seeking only her own selfish advantage. This is the same as saying that when a man prospers and accomplishes he benefits the community, and that when a community does so it benefits the Nation. It is true that New York has prospered and accomplished more than any other State in the Union. This is due not only to her natural resources, her varied scenery, and her strategic commercial position, but to her people and their spirit as well. New York is the sixth State in agricultural production and is first in dairying and vegetable raising. The value of her manufactured output increased from $3,867,000,000 in 1919 to $8,960,000,000 in 1921. She collects one-third of the taxes of the entire country, and in both war and peace has contributed her full share—in fact, more than her full share—to the national welfare. The center of the world's wealth, she gives to all national causes with a lavish hand. And in all improvements voted by Congress for the general welfare she pays nearly a third. But it must also be said that New York has had no less an influence in the political, intellectual, and moral development of the entire Nation. Hamilton conspicuously contributed to the Constitution after Washington Heights, Oriskany, and Yorktown. For 30 years prior to 1860 Seward opposed slavery. The duty of organized wealth to the Nation was urged for a generation by Roosevelt. The principle that America should govern her dependencies in the Atlantic and the Pacific for the benefit of those dependencies and the method of protecting them from exploitation were largely contributed by Root. The basis for the regulation of local utilities by the State without that public operation which would endanger individual initiative was given by Hughes. Susan B. Anthony, who more than any other one person brought about woman suffrage, was a resident of Rochester. Yet New York claims no more than any other State of credit for what she has contributed to the Nation. Her people will resent, and rightly so, the imputation that they have been selfish in their contributions to the national prosperity. They have every reason to be proud of that record. They are proud of it. But it is as much the pride of the Nation as of the State, and none can deny that it has benefited the Nation quite as much as the State of New York.

These facts are cited to show that it is not the selfishness of New York which is seeking a canal through its territory. An all-American canal to the sea, as the shortest route from the Middle West to Europe and South America, could take no other course. That it would maintain the supremacy of the port of New York and the State of New York is beyond question. But it should be built in New York only because it is wholly American territory and because the St. Lawrence route would be 1,600 miles longer from the Middle West to the congested purchasing centers of the Atlantic seaboard and South American and Mediterranean ports. This greatest engineering project since the completion of the Panama Canal should be built as soon as possible. It should be built by the Nation. Congress should raise the money through a bond issue payable over a period sufficiently long to put the burden not only upon this generation but the following one as well.

It was urged by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that the St. Lawrence route should not give way to the all-American route because of sentiment. It was sentiment that won the Revolution. It was sentiment that fought the Civil War. It was sentiment that freed Cuba and the Philippines from Spanish tyranny. It was sentiment that caused America to spend thirty billions of the money of the people in the World War. It is the sentiment of the self-interest of a great people that makes for patriotism. And it is patriotism that makes for the solidarity and advancement of a people. Let us then cling to our sentiment for America first. Let us remember that New York is still the Empire State of our Union and that her advancement means to-day, as it always has meant, the advancement of the Nation. And let us bear in mind that we are a practical as well as a sentimental people, and that the time to give the Middle West a cheap and quick passage to the seaboard is now, so that not only New York but the United States will be the beneficiary for another century.

In this sentiment the 43 Members of the New York delegation in the House have been practically unanimous. Most of them were surprised to find that they were not joined by Governor Smith in their advocacy of the all-American route from Lake Erie by way of Tonawanda and Olcott. In his pronouncement upon the subject, submitted fully a year after the principal efforts had been made in behalf of the project in the Nation's Capital, where alone it could be secured, he mentioned only the route from Lake Ontario to the Hudson. And his representative, Colonel Greene, at the hearings before the Board of Engineers, stated positively that Governor Smith indorsed the route between those points. Colonel Greene, however, went further and said he did not indorse that branch which alone would make an all-American route possible. To cargo from the Hudson to Oswego and then on Ontario Lake to the Welland Canal and through British territory would be to belie the contention that an all-American canal would be an all-American defense. But the delegation, which voted for the deeper Hudson project a year before the governor's declaration, held and still holds to the sentiment of an American waterway to the sea through American territory with American enterprise and American money for the future benefit of America.

The letter of Governor Smith is as follows:

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, STATE OF NEW YORK,
Albany, March 15, 1926.

HON. ROBERT L. BACON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: For more than a century and a half this country has talked of connecting the Great Lakes with the Atlantic Ocean by a ship canal. One hundred years ago this desire was partially met by the construction of the old Erie Canal, and it is doubtful if any transportation project was ever a greater success. Up to 1883, the year tolls were abolished, the Erie Canal, together with its branches, chiefly the Oswego Canal, had repaid the State not only all it had cost for construction, operation, and maintenance, but it had turned in the handsome profit of $43,599,717 over and above these charges. What was of greater benefit, however, than mere dollars, the Erie Canal fostered the growth of that great industrial zone which, with its chain of cities and many factories, extends from Buffalo to Troy and on down the Hudson River to end at Greater New York. When the railroads appeared they followed this well-established trade route, so that as a traffic line to the west it was not only the first in point of time but it has remained the first in importance in this country.

As the population of our Middle and Western States increased lake commerce grew in proportion, and the agitation for a deep waterway between our inland seas and the ocean became more pronounced. Then without warning came the World War and with it the necessity for transporting hundreds of thousands of tons of supplies from our Middle and Western States to the Atlantic seaboard, and for the first time it was proven beyond dispute that our railroads were not adequate to meet such an emergency.

To relieve the overburdened railroads the Federal Government hastily designed and built barges to be used on the New York State Barge Canal; and though boat operators disagree as to whether or not these vessels were of the proper type, none deny that they did carry many tons of bulk freight and that they did serve to relieve rail congestion.

The war having clearly shown the necessity for a ship canal, both political parties heeded the warning and have given their promise to the American people that such a canal will be built.

A ship canal, however, is not needed solely to meet emergencies; our five Great Lakes make up the largest body of inland waters in the world; the States bordering them are large in area, population, and production. These Lake States with the more westerly ones, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, and Missouri, now produce an enormous tonnage of both agricultural and manufacturing products, and as the years go by this output of farm and factory will surely increase and the demand for the cheaper water transportation to the markets of the world will become more insistent.

In the discussion of a ship canal from Lakes to ocean I shall deal with the subject solely as a transportation proposition divorced from the question of hydroelectric development, which is an entirely different problem, one which should stand by itself and not be permitted to befog the question of transportation.

There exists three possible routes for such a canal: One from the east end of Lake Ontario through the St. Lawrence Valley to the Gulf of St. Lawrence and thence to the sea; a second route leaves the St. Lawrence River at Lake St. Francis, runs through Canadian territory to Lake Champlain, thence to the Hudson River and the sea. The third route leaves Lake Ontario at Oswego, passes through the Mohawk Valley to the Hudson and thence down the Hudson to the sea. It is this last, the so-called American route, that I believe should be built.

It is natural and proper that every American should wish the supremacy of American ports continued; to accomplish this a ship canal to the Lakes through American territory is a necessity.

The Canadian-St. Lawrence Canals in 1900 carried only 1,309,066 tons; in 1925 their business had increased to 6,206,988 tons. During the last eight years (1918-1925) the St. Lawrence Canals carried 14,575,180 tons of freight that originated in the United States. Every ton of this should have been carried on an American Canal to or through an American port.

The American Canal will not only provide the cheaper water rates desired by our Western States, but it will make Erie, Pa.; Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Superior, Duluth, and other Lake cities seaports, having the shortest water route to every Atlantic port and to West Indies, Central and South American markets.

I say these Lake cities will be seaports in spite of the contention so often heard that ocean ships will not go to nor navigate upon the Lakes. The large and ever-increasing tonnage handled at Montreal proves that so far as the success of a ship canal to the Lakes is concerned, it is not necessary for ocean steamers to enter the Lakes at all. What is necessary is to provide a junction point where fresh and salt water tonnage may be exchanged, a port where the lighter-built Lake steamers may meet and transfer cargo to the ocean vessel.

That the American route is practical from the engineering standpoint has been certified by the Army Engineers who recently reviewed the exhaustive report of the special board which surveyed and reported on this route in 1900. To my way of thinking, the advantages of the American route are so evident that only a few arguments are necessary to convince anyone not having some personal advantage to gain through the Canadian route that the American route is the one for this country at least to build.

The distance from the Lakes to the Hudson is only 166 miles. It has been argued that canal navigation is too slow to meet modern traffic requirements, but a rate of 5 miles an hour is admitted to be practical on the canal proposed. This means that the actual canal journey can be made in 33½ hours. The trip on the broad and deepened Hudson to Sandy Hook is 165 miles. Here steamers can run at full speed—let us say 10 miles an hour. The entire trip, then, from Lakes to ocean can be made in 50 hours.

The American route runs through territory seldom troubled by fogs and ends at New York Harbor, where the ocean is free from the menace of icebergs. Finally the success of any line of transportation depends upon the tonnage carried; and as the American Canal will serve a region that per square mile produces more potential freight than any other territory in the country, this canal should, and in all probability will, carry more freight than any other inland waterway.

To say that a ship canal to the Lakes would be an aid to our national defense in time of war is to state a fact as obvious as that rations are needed for troops. In recent letters to the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress both the Secretaries of War and of the Navy so declared themselves. It is of small moment that, following the visit of certain politicians to the White House, the wording of their first letters was somewhat modified; the fact remains that the Secretary of War stated:

"In the event of a great war the transportation of the agricultural products and raw material of the Middle West to the Atlantic seaboard and to the thickly populated industrial areas of the Eastern and New England States would impose a great burden on the railroads. The probable resulting congestion could be relieved by the further development of the waterways connecting the Great Lakes with the Hudson River."

And the Secretary of the Navy said:

"I am of the opinion that the proposed 'all-American deeper waterway,' connecting the Hudson River with the Great Lakes, would be a very important addition to the transportation system of the country and would be, therefore, an important asset to the national defense."

In my consideration of this subject, that phrase so convenient to the vacillating, "an open mind," has no place. I am convinced that a ship canal from Lakes to sea has become a necessity to the commercial needs of our country; that it will some day be built is inevitable; that the promise of both our major parties should be kept; that the time to fulfill that promise is now; that the route of the American canal, following the long-established line of traffic, is the best one to build, and that an American canal is the only one for which American capital should be spent.

Very truly yours,

ALFRED E. SMITH.

The governor's letter, though late, ably and clearly presents the case, but he fails to mention the very essential link between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. Therefore in acknowledging it I pointed out this omission:

MARCH 23, 1926.

HON. ALFRED E. SMITH,

Governor State of New York,
Executive Mansion, Albany, N. Y.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I acknowledge the receipt of your belated circular letter on the subject of the all-American waterway addressed to the New York congressional delegation. This letter arrived after the evidence had all been presented to the United States Army Board of Engineers and after the hearings had been closed, following upon a year-long fight made here in Washington under the able leadership of Representative S. WALLACE DEMPSEY, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, to whom the credit for this movement should be given.

I greatly regret that it seems to have entirely escaped your attention that the all-American waterway from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic, which we of the New York delegation in Congress are fighting for, is that from Lake Erie and not merely that from Oswego to the Hudson River.

In your letter to me you say:

"There exist three possible routes for such a canal; one from the east end of Lake Ontario through the St. Lawrence Valley to the Gulf of St. Lawrence and thence to the sea. A second route leaves the St. Lawrence River at St. Francis, runs through Canadian territory to Lake Champlain, thence to the Hudson River and the sea. The third route leaves Lake Ontario at Oswego, passes through the Mohawk to the Hudson, and thence down the Hudson to the sea. It is this last, the so-called American route, that I believe should be built."

We of the New York delegation contended before the Board of Engineers of the Army, having the project under consideration, that there should be no misunderstanding about our consistency in demanding what would be an all-American route. In fact, Mr. Dempsey went so far as to state that if the Lake Erie-Tonawanda-Lockport branch were not constructed we should be opposed to the entire canal because it would not be an all-American route. For us to have urged such a route and then to have accepted the Welland Canal, running through British territory, as a part of it would have been to stultify our contention that an all-American canal would protect us in time of war.

Colonel Greene, your representative at the hearing before the board, in harmony with your subsequent letter to me, opposed the Lake Erie branch. In giving his reasons, as stenographically reported, he said:

"First the commercial reason and then the war reason. Now, the diplomatic reasons, and God knows nobody ever accused me of being a diplomat. It seems to me that if we and Canada were in partnership with a canal, Canada taking care of the Welland and the United States this (meaning the Lake Erie branch), it might, in fact it should, form a closer bond of friendship between the two nations, but that does not mean if we were in partnership in a canal here and one running there on absolute Canadian territory, that that will form any closer bond. Don't make any mistake about that. I am for the all-American route, hook, line, and sinker, but I do not see at the present time any necessity of building the short piece up through Niagara County. I may be all wrong."

Yes, Governor, he was all wrong. Like yourself, he was for the all-American route and he was against it at the same time—unknowingly. I have no doubt, as in your case. After all, the important thing is for all New Yorkers to stand by the all-American route without regard to party.

With high regard, I remain,
Respectfully,

ROBERT L. BACON.

However, let me say that the people of New York are in practical unanimity in their desire for the building of an all-American canal. And I want to point out that the positive proof that it is not a New York question but a national problem lies in the fact that in the event of a war between ourselves and a country other than Great Britain it would be impossible to use the canal through British territory for the sending of food supplies and troops to our military forces because of British neutrality. On the other hand, through the all-American route we should be enabled to do so. Just 100 years ago, on June 19, 1826, Henry Clay, then Secretary of State, addressed a communication to Mr. Gallatin, our minister to England, in which he said of the St. Lawrence that—from the very nature of such a river it must, in respect to its navigable uses, be considered as common to all the nations who inhabit its banks, as a free gift flowing from the bounty of Heaven, intended for all whose lots are cast upon its borders.

His views were not accepted by the British Government at the time, but in the administration of President John Tyler, in 1842, there was concluded what is known as the Webster-Ashburton treaty, Article VII of which stipulated:

It is further agreed that the channels in the river St. Lawrence, on both sides of the Long Sault Islands and of Barnhart Island; the channels in the river Detroit, on both sides of the Island Bois Blanc, and between that island and both the American and Canadian shores; and all the several channels and passages between the various islands lying near the junction of the river St. Clair, with the lake of that name, shall be equally free and open to the ships, vessels, and boats of both parties.

But this stipulation had nothing to do with the St. Lawrence River beyond the boundary of the State of New York, nor did it have anything to do with questions of war. Likewise in Article IV of the reciprocity convention of 1854, afterwards terminated, the following language is used:

It is agreed that the citizens and inhabitants of the United States shall have the right to navigate the River St. Lawrence and the canals in Canada used as the means of communicating the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, with their vessels, boats, and crafts, as fully and freely as the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, subject only to the same tolls and other assessments as now are, or may hereafter be, exacted of Her Majesty's said subjects; it being understood, however, that the British Government retains the right of suspending this privilege on giving due notice thereof to the Government of the United States.

In 1871, during the administration of President Grant, in a treaty seeking an amicable settlement of all differences between the two countries, Article XXVI provided:

The navigation of the River St. Lawrence, ascending and descending, from the forty-fifth parallel of north latitude, where it ceases to form the boundary between the two countries, from, to, and into the sea, shall forever remain free and open for the purposes of commerce to the citizens of the United States, subject to any laws and regulations of Great Britain, or of the Dominion of Canada, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation.

In Article I of the treaty of 1909 between Great Britain and the United States, practically the same language is used, as follows:

The high contracting parties agree that the navigation of all navigable boundary waters shall forever continue free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants and to the ships, vessels, and boats of both countries equally, subject, however, to any laws and regulations of either country, within its own territory not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation, and applying equally and without discrimination to the inhabitants, ships, vessels, and boats of both countries.

Again I call attention to the fact that these stipulations provide only for times of peace and for the immediate boundary between the two countries in war, of course, neutrality would preclude the sending of our troops on vessels through the St. Lawrence. Furthermore, we should be unable to transport through it our supplies. Not even food could pass through. On this class of contraband I quote an opinion of Mr. Justice Story, rendered in 1816, as follows:

If destined for the ordinary use of life in the enemy's country, they are not, in general, contraband; but it is otherwise if destined for military use. Hence, if destined for the army or navy of the enemy, or for his ports of naval or military equipment, they are deemed contraband.

During a discussion between the United States and Great Britain as to the treatment of provisions in the Boer War, Lord Salisbury declared that—foodstuffs with a hostile destination can be considered contraband of war only if they are supplies for the enemy's forces. It is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used; it must be shown that this was in fact their destination at the time of the seizure.

The declaration of London of 1909 enumerated articles as absolute contraband, conditional contraband and those not to be declared contraband. Foodstuffs were placed in the class of conditional contraband. According to Article XXXIII, they were liable to seizure if shown to be destined for the use of the armed forces of a government department of the enemy state. It is clear, then, that in the event of a war between ourselves and a country other than Great Britain we could not use the canal and that therefore a canal built entirely within our own territory would be a military advantage. Nor could an agreement with Great Britain contravene international law. But there remains the question of a possible war with Great Britain. This contingency seems so remote as to be almost entirely negligible. However, it is of the highest importance in military defense to consider every possibility. On this point I wish to quote the learned work on international law by Charles Cheney Hyde. He says:

A number of States, such, for example, as those whose territories are traversed or separated by an international river, may profess concern as to conditions of navigation in time of conflict, and conclude an agreement designed to protect the stream and its establishments should war ensue. Upon its outbreak, if the contracting States are aligned as opposing belligerents, there is likely to be a sharp conflict of interest with respect to the proper uses of the river, and one so vital as to encourage disregard of the compact by that party which would suffer a relative strategic detriment should it observe the restraints imposed. The danger of contempt for the arrangement is shown to be proportional to the opportunity which it leaves open to any contracting belligerent party to utilize the stream for a military end. An agreement imposing a duty to protect merely the works and establishments pertaining to navigation offers a frail bond of restraint. Nor are provisions devised to localize hostilities by forbidding their commission in close proximity to or in the very path of belligerent operations likely to prove a real deterrent.

Indeed, such a contingency was foreseen as long ago as 1862, when, in a report from the House Committee on Military Affairs, Representative Francis P. Blair, its chairman, said:

To defend the northern frontier the United States should be able to place a strong fleet on the Lakes as soon as an opponent. We should have adequate means of transportation at command to be able to speedily concentrate on the St. Lawrence a force of acknowledged competency to take possession of the canal and of Montreal and hold them. The possession by the United States of the outlets of Lake Ontario and of Montreal and its communications would cut off all supplies from the Canadians, and leave them to an unsupported and hopeless conflict with all our forces. Such a conflict would be neither protracted nor dangerous.

He continues with the alternative:

Can the United States have a navigable channel from the ocean to the Lakes of an equal value with that possessed by Great Britain? Undoubtedly; and a better one. The Erie and Hudson Canal can readily be so enlarged as to allow of the passage of a vessel of 1,500 or even of 2,000 tons burden. When completed, a vessel could enter Lake Erie sooner from New York Harbor than from the mouth of the St. Lawrence and without the delay and danger arising from rapids, rocks, and ice. * * * A canal around Niagara Falls can be readily built of any desirable capacity. Neither of these channels would be within reach of British guns, whereas a right to plant American guns upon the banks of the St. Lawrence, the only British channel to the Lakes, belongs to the United States.

I go so far as to say that a joint participation by the United States in the building of a canal through Canada would be a source of misunderstanding between the two peoples. We have proof positive of this in the policy of the British Government in protesting against discrimination by the United States in favor of its own vessels in the payment of tolls through the Panama Canal. How much more logical, then, would be the appeal of the British Government that the United States revise its coastwise shipping laws in such a way as to enable British vessels to share in their advantages. In other words, only American vessels may now ply from American port to American port. Great Britain would seek to amend our laws so as to permit her vessels to ply from American Lake ports to American ocean ports on equal terms with our vessels. On the other hand, by the building of an all-American waterway across the State of New York, the advantages of our coastwise shipping laws to American shipping would be extended by many hundreds of miles in distance as well as vastly in volume. This boon to American shipping should not be denied because of overzealousness for a foreign waterway.

The United States, it seems to me, should keep within herself the means by which she has grown to greatness. Her people must realize that the time is coming when congestion of traffic will be much greater than now. And in relieving that congestion the American Congress should bear in mind the strictly American policy that has protected us in the past and alone will do so in the future. An all-American canal will, in the words of the Constitution, "provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare."

PLAN PROPOSING CONGRESSIONAL MACHINERY FOR THE SOLUTION OF THE AGRICULTURAL PROBLEM

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House Concurrent Resolution No. 20, introduced by me on yesterday and relating to farm relief.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on House Concurrent Resolution 20. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I have just introduced House Concurrent Resolution No. 20, providing for the creation of a congressional cooperative agriculture conference for the purpose of suggesting a permanent policy for agricultural relief and preparing and proposing legislation to carry such policy into effect.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

Concurrent resolution

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That for the best interests of all the people of the United States it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to promote the intelligent and orderly marketing of agricultural commodities in domestic and foreign markets; to encourage the organization of the producers of agricultural commodities into cooperative associations; to prevent speculation and waste in the marketing of agricultural commodities; and eliminate, as far as possible, the effect of world prices upon the prices of the entire domestic production of basic agricultural commodities by providing for the disposition of the domestic surplus of such basic agricultural commodities.

SEC. 2. The agricultural problem is one which affects directly every citizen as well as every group of our people, and affects directly or indirectly every interest and institution of the Republic. In seeking a solution and in providing relief for agriculture all our people, individually and in groups, and all our interests and institutions must be taken into consideration, to the end that no avoidable injury and no injustice may be done any citizen or group of citizens or any interest or institution or group of interests or institutions.

The taking away from any citizen or group of citizens, interest, or institutions, or group of such interests or institutions, of any special privilege or privileges now held by them shall not be construed to be an injury or injustice to those being divested of such special privileges. Nor shall the granting of special privileges to agriculture in harmony and commensurate with special privilege now enjoyed by other groups, classes, interests, and institutions be construed to be either an injury or an injustice to such groups, classes, interests, and institutions.

SEC. 3. To the end that the policy declared in section 1 hereof may be carried out in accordance with the principles set forth in section 2 a special joint subcommittee is hereby created, to consist of five members of the House Committee on Agriculture and five members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to be appointed by the respective chairmen of said committees.

SEC. 4. The special joint subcommittee is hereby authorized and directed to organize immediately, and when organized to prepare a list of recognized farm organizations and to extend formal invitation to such organizations requesting each such recognized farm organization to select and commission a delegate to meet with the special joint subcommittee, and upon call such delegates, selected as herein provided, shall assemble at such place as may be designated by such special joint subcommittee, and such delegates, when meeting with such special joint subcommittee, shall constitute a congressional cooperative agricultural conference.

SEC. 5. The said special joint subcommittee when joined by, and sitting with, the delegates selected as herein provided, and forming the congressional cooperative agricultural conference, is authorized and directed to continue to hold hearings within its discretion, to sit in Washington or any other convenient place, and report, during the first week of the second session of the Sixty-ninth Congress, by bill, its recommendations for the benefit of agriculture and agricultural interests. The said special joint subcommittee is hereby authorized to administer oaths, to send for persons and papers, to appoint the necessary clerks, accountants, experts, stenographers, and legal assistants, and the expenses attendant upon the work of said special joint subcommittee shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon voucher of its chairman: Provided, That the members of such special joint subcommittee shall receive no extra per diem for their services: And provided further, That the delegates selected and serving shall receive their actual and necessary expenses, including traveling and subsistence.

SEC. 6. All departments, agents, representatives, and employees of the Government shall be subject to call for the furnishing of assistance and information to such conference.

SEC. 7. The special joint subcommittee shall have the power to make rules and regulations to carry out the intent of this resolution.

The basis of this resolution and the reasons for its introduction are as follows:

Agriculture is in distress and needs relief.

Hearings have and are now being held, but the prospects for reaching a satisfactory solution and agreeing upon a bill at this session are practically hopeless.

Farmers and their friends have not and do not give promise of coming to an agreement in time for favorable action of the Congress at this session.

The Agriculture Committees of the House and of the Senate, in the absence of an agreement among the farmers and their friends, will be unable to agree upon a bill to report at this time.

Although extensive hearings have been held, it is doubtful if any bill prepared and recommended by the committee would have the unanimous support of the farmers, their organizations, and friends.

With the information at hand it is doubtful if a satisfactory bill can be prepared; or if such a bill were suggested, it is doubtful if anyone now working on the problem would be able to recognize its merits and at the same time be able to convince the friends of agriculture and the Congress that such a bill would bring about the relief hoped for.

If the foregoing statements and conclusions are correct, or approximately correct, it must be apparent that no satisfactory farm relief legislation can possibly be enacted at this session.

The farmers of the country—some 40,000,000 of them—are looking to the Congress for aid. They are, in the main, unorganized. They are not able to get together and to solve the problem of their approaching bankruptcy; hence the duty and the responsibility is upon their Representatives to continue this work until a solution is found and relief is granted.

To the end that the hearings already had and the work already done may not be lost, my resolution, if agreed to, will bring about the following results:

1. It will provide efficient congressional machinery and set same in immediate and continuous action, in an effort to solve the agricultural problem.

2. It will provide a special joint subcommittee of Congress to continue the work now well under way.

3. It will provide an effective means of organizing the farmers and stimulating those already organized by giving them direct representation and contact with the Congress in working out a solution of their problem.

4. The plan proposed would interest all farmers, would educate all farmers, would give hope to all the farmers, and in the end would be participated in by farmers generally, so that when a bill is finally prepared, agreed to, and introduced in Congress, the organized farmers of the country, supported by those unorganized, would be behind such proposed bill, and with such an organization sponsoring the legislation the bill would be speedily enacted into law.

5. The plan provides for the cooperation of every possible agricultural interest with the Congress in the task assigned. The delegates, or representatives, will not be appointed by the President, nor by the Secretary of Agriculture, but will be selected and commissioned by the farmers' organizations themselves.

6. The plan commits the Congress to the solution of the agricultural problem. It organizes and starts governmental machinery in working out agricultural relief. It places the Government behind this movement. It provides that the Government shall bear the expenses of the delegates in attending the congressional cooperative agricultural conference.

7. The plan further provides that, in addition to securing the best talent selected by the farmers themselves, the Government will provide the best expert advice, clerical assistance, and legal help that the country affords.

8. It would be my suggestion and recommendation that the conference secure the services, if possible, of Mr. Donald Richburg, an attorney at Chicago, to assist the committee and the conference in working out a solution to this problem. Mr. Richburg, if employed, would bring to the conference a reputation of having solved the railway labor problem, and his knowledge of law, his knowledge of finance, of transportation, of industry, and of labor, and their relation to each other, and the relation of each to agriculture, would be invaluable to the committee in assisting in the work at hand.

9. The most important point in the plan proposed, in my opinion, is the opportunity of getting the bill, when agreed upon, before the farmers and the people of the country. Each special delegate, representing a farm organization, on returning to his organization, would be able to thoroughly explain the bill to his membership, and through all the delegates practically all the farmers in the country would be advised of the plan and the merits of the proposed legislation.

With a firm resolve to succeed, with the most capable minds set to the task, with the resources of the Government behind the movement, agriculture as an honorable, respectable, and prosperous occupation can and will be saved.

GRAZING IN NATIONAL FORESTS AND ON PUBLIC DOMAIN

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a very able and instructive article on the problem of grazing in the national forests and on the public domain, by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD]. The article appeared in the National Spectator, in the issue of April 10, 1926.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The article is as follows:

THE RIGHTS OF THE SHEPHERDS—DEFINITE STATUS FOR PUBLIC-LAND GRAZING VITAL TO PROSPERITY OF WEST

By Hon. ROBERT N. STANFIELD, United States Senator from Oregon

GRASS

"Next in importance to the divine profusion of water, light, and air, these three physical facts which render existence possible, may be reckoned the universal beneficence of grass. Lying in the sunshine among the buttercups and dandelions of May, scarcely higher in intelligence than those minute tenants of that mimic wilderness, our earliest recollections are of grass, and when the fitful fever is ended and the foolish wrangle of the market and the forum is closed, grass heals over the scar which our descent into the bosom of the earth has made, and the carpet of the infant becomes the blanket of the dead.

"Banished from the thoroughfares and fields, it bides its time to return, and when the vigilance is relaxed or the dynasty has perished, it silently resumes the throne from which it has been expelled but which it never abdicates. It bears no blazonry of bloom to charm the senses with fragrance or splendor, but its homely hue is more enchanting than the lily or the rose. It yields no fruit in earth or air, yet should its harvest fall for a single year famine would depopulate the world."—(These were the words of John J. Ingalls.)

The grazing industry is as old as man. The calling of the flock-masters is ancient and honorable. The industry began in America with the establishment of our first Colonies. Domestic animals were imported in the sixteenth century and were permitted to range adjacent to the settlements and as far into the woods as they could and yet be protected from depredation and predatory animals.

The range livestock industry contributed materially to the development and prosperity of the Colonies and was carried on most extensively in parts of Pennsylvania, Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia.

The cowboy of the colonial range is said to have been as adept with horse and lariat as the modern "buckaroo" of the 10-quart hat and hairy "chaps."

In the Eastern States the livestock industry made continuous growth but was gradually relegated to the fields as settlement extended, and the range industry was continually crowded westward and came into existence as we know it to-day in the Missouri River country. From this section it continually retreated westward to the 11 Western States, where it will doubtless be perpetuated.

Domestic livestock was brought by early settlers to the extreme southwestern portion of our country about the time of the establishment of the Atlantic coast colonies, and the range flocks expanded from that section to mingle with those migrating from the East.

The public has consumed many stories concerning the character and habits of the men engaged in this great industry. These stories, in the main, represent no more of fact than the so-called "western" of the modern movie, but they have made a lasting impression upon the mind of the "consumer." These stories have pictured the western man as reckless and ruthless, and this characterization has come to be applied especially to men engaged in the livestock industry.

No other branch of agriculture requires more constant or intelligent application than the raising of livestock. The production of a marketable animal can only be accomplished through painstaking effort and care, and is, in fact, as prosaic as any kindred pursuit.

The public domain of the United States, as the "public lands" have always been known, was acquired by the Government by treaty, conquest, cession by States, and by purchase. The actual public domain originally embraced 1,818,464,522 acres. This vast dominion extended from the headwaters of the Ohio River to the Pacific Ocean and was used for grazing, without regulation or interference, throughout the first hundred years of our national existence. During this period land settlement was encouraged and private acquisition stimulated by the enactment of laws calculated to make private ownership attractive. Sale prices were reduced from time to time and donation and homestead claims provided in the effort to pass title to the individual and to the tax rolls of the States.

Under this stimulus the area of the public domain was reduced by leaps and bounds and its boundary line driven westward with the Indian, and the range industry into and beyond the Rocky Mountains. To-day we have 180,000,000 acres left in the unreserved and unoccupied public domain and approximately 157,000,000 acres within the forest reserves. Most of this remaining area lies within the boundaries of 11 Western States.

The cost of the public domain of the United States, through purchase and cession, was $88,157,389.98. The reserved areas and resources of the national forests, mostly within the 11 States of the far West, have recently been appraised at more than $1,000,000,000, a sum several times greater than the original purchase price of the entire public domain, and payments made to the American Indians under treaties and annuities provided for peaceable surrender of their occupancy title of lands to the Government.

Upon about 90,000,000 acres of the national-forest area the grazing of livestock is an important industry. This industry also utilizes a large portion of the remaining unreserved public domain, and it is the question of the use of these remaining public lands, reserved and unreserved, that confronts the people of the far West to-day. Grazing upon this area is one of the principal industries of the remaining 11 "public-land" States.

The annual revenue to these States from the range livestock industry is estimated at not less than $250,000,000. Upon this revenue associated industries are so dependent that an impairment of the investment values or a reduction in its cash return is immediately reflected in every line of business activity. The money derived from the sale of livestock and livestock products goes into every local channel. To the doctor, the merchant, the lawyer, and the publisher, and to the maintenance of State and local government. The destruction of this industry would so impair the economic structure of these States that other industries would follow in its wake.

Theodore Roosevelt, under authority of Congress, withdrew vast areas in the mountainous regions of the West for the preservation of the forests and protection of the source of water supply. This action was in the national interest, and its result will be lasting and beneficial to the East and West alike. It has often been alleged that the creation of the national forests and the program for the conservation of our natural resources met with violent opposition from the people of the West.

Such reports have been highly colored, and are without foundation in fact. There was no opposition to true conservation, and there is none to-day. The West believes in conservation, constructive conservation—conservation with use, conservation without waste. Many thinking men of the West were alarmed by the possibilities of a complete change in the national land policy under which the country had grown strong, great, and prosperous. They believed that the policy which had so wisely been applied to the lands and the natural resources of the East should be continued. They were not opposed to conservation, but did oppose the exploitation of the natural resources of any State for the benefit of the Nation at large. Western men oppose a policy that regards and administers the public lands as the asset of the Federal Government to the detriment of the States wherein they lie. No such policy was ever applied to lands in other than the remaining 11 "public-lands" States.

Forage is an inexhaustible and valuable resource. Grazing lands of the forest areas in the western part of the United States produce a greater abundance of grazing and other forage plants to-day than they did at the time the earliest settlers entered the territory. The area known as the "Union Pacific lease," a strip of grazing land 40 miles in width, extending across the greater part of the State of Wyoming, controlled and administered exclusively by stockmen and grazed by sheep for almost half a century, produced more pasture in the summer of 1925 than ever before. Grazing areas in the Old World which have been in continuous use for 2,000 years have not decreased in their carrying capacity of livestock.

Grazing, the first and oldest of our agricultural pursuits, has never been recognized by the Congress of the United States. Our courts have said that the stockman occupied the public domain and forest area merely by sufferance. The stockman now asks that there be a recognition, definition, and protection of the right to graze written into law. He believes that the grazing resources of the national forests and other public lands have a definite place among other resources of the West and should be regulated in the same sane, sensible, and dispassionate manner as every other resource, keeping always in mind the primary purposes for which the national forests were created.

This problem concerns not only the people of the West but, to a material degree, the public welfare of the entire country. There is an actual necessity for a careful analysis of the question, to the end that justice may be done this great industry and that the result shall be for the best interests of the country at large.

The people of the West engaged in the production of horses, cattle, and sheep upon the public domain have at times had misunderstandings. These they have amicably settled among themselves and have jointly and through their national organizations recommended to Congress the enactment of a law which would in substance recognize the grazing use upon the forests and unreserved public domain and insure to them the benefits of careful husbandry of the ranges upon a fee basis that would not impair the investment value in their privately owned and dependent real estate, which is to-day assessed for the maintenance of State and local governments at a value arrived at by the absorption, to a large degree, of the value of the range use.

They also ask that some cooperative agency or board be established to hear and decide questions appealed from any administrative officer or supervisor, subject to the final review of the Secretaries of Agriculture or the Interior.

The livestock interests substantially establish the claim that some legal right and definite tenure must be provided to furnish sufficient stabilization to permit the profitable continuation of the range industry.

To provide the necessary relief for this great industry and to insure the continuation of the use and uses heretofore permitted, the Senate Public Lands Committee directed the preparation of the draft of a bill designed to procure the enactment into law of the basic principles underlying the grazing use of Government lands as determined by 20 years of actual experience and regulation upon the forest reserves, together with provisions for local control of the unreserved areas by the present residents and users of these lands.

This draft met with violent opposition, for the most part, from people who had not even read a copy of the proposed law—well-meaning people, possessed of neither a knowledge of the subject nor a practical conception of the great forest areas and their resources.

Secretaries Jardine and Work and Chief Forester William B. Greeley analyzed the provisions of the proposed bill and gave constructive criticism, also making recommendations concerning the proposed legislation. These men have always recognized the necessity of providing a definite legal status for the range use. Contrary to published reports, they have always regarded the successful continuation of this industry as an economic necessity, and to that end we have labored together and redrafted this bill to adequately protect the resources for which the forests were primarily created, and at the same time lend to this great arm of agriculture sufficient stabilization to assure the successful continuation thereof.

This bill carries out the promise of Forester Greeley to the livestock industry, and, at the same time, safeguards, to a degree that should satisfy the most ardent, theoretical conservationist, every other resource of the withdrawn areas by subordinating grazing to the development of the mineral resources, the protection, development, and utilization of the forests, the protection, development, and utilization of the water resources, to the use of these lands for farming, either with or without irrigation, and to the protection, development, and utilization of such other resources as may, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, be of greater benefit to the public.

The application of the provisions of the redraft to the unreserved lands provides for the creation of grazing districts only upon the election of the majority of the grazing users of the area involved, and makes special recognition of the use right in the resident and owner of the dependent properties lying within the areas affected.

Secretary Jardine has always regarded the question as one involving national economics and, in commenting upon the redrafted bill, said: "The enactment of this bill is recommended by the Chief of the Forest Service, and in that recommendation I concur. I am confident that it fully safeguards the principles of conservation in reaffirming the primary purposes of the national forest with respect to timber production and watershed protection and making the use of their forage resources subordinate to these and to other more important uses."

"At the same time I believe that this bill will promote stability in the livestock industry of the West and in the agriculture dependent upon it. Such stability should be afforded to the extent that it will not impair the primary resources of the national forests. Its beneficial effects will, in my judgment, not be limited to the Western States but will extend broadly to the agricultural interests of other sections, and specifically to portions of the Middle West where livestock from the western ranges is extensively fattened for market."

Secretary Work, in transmitting his approval of the bill as redrafted, said: "In my opinion it is a constructive measure which will result in definite and positive benefit to the livestock industry. At the same time it will tend to stop overgrazing and destruction of forage on the public lands, protect and improve these resources, permitting their use under proper regulation by both the small and large livestock grower."

"Under its terms the laws relating to the development of the mineral and water resources, and practically all of the other public land laws, except those which deal with land primarily grazing in character, are continued in full force and effect."

With the removal of the human element from the question of grazing, this use of public lands has assumed its proper place among the users of our natural resources, and the problem may no longer be referred to as a personal controversy. The wild and unjust rumors concerning this question have been answered, and all undue alarm and fears caused thereby have been allayed by the action of the Departments of Agriculture and of the Interior.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee of the Senate Public Lands Committee, of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] is chairman, I have studied this question carefully and gave a large part of my time to the hearings before our subcommittee in the public-land States in the West last summer and in Washington this winter, at which we have had representatives of practically all of the livestock men of these public-land States before us. The hearings are interesting and voluminous. The result of this work is the amended Stanfield grazing bill (S. 2584), which has the approval of the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture, the United States Forest Service, the American National Livestock Association, and the National Wool Growers' Association.

In this connection I also ask to have printed in the Record a letter from Mr. A. F. Potter to Mr. F. R. Marshall, secretary of the National Wool Growers' Association, regarding the question of grazing legislation, as expressed in the amended Stanfield grazing bill (S. 2584) reported to the Senate favorably by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys on March 31, 1926.

Mr. Potter was formerly associate forester of the United States Forest Service prior to the act of 1905, under which the administration of the forests was transferred to the Department of Agriculture and the regulation of livestock grazing inaugurated. He was employed by the department to study grazing matters for some years prior to 1905, and after that date was in complete charge of grazing on the national forests. He reported to and consulted with the bureau officials, who relied entirely on his judgment and supported his activities regarding grazing. He remained with the Forest Service until 1920 and for 10 years before the expiration of his tenure of office was associate forester, thereby ranking next to the Chief Forester. He has always been considered by stockmen of the country to have understood the proper and desirable methods of regulating grazing with fairness to the stock interests, and also with regard to the conservation of the other resources of the forests and with fidelity to the administration. His representations to the House Agricultural Committee in 1920 were largely responsible for the prevention of action by the House of Representatives to compel a large increase in grazing fees to the livestockmen using the national forests for grazing. In view of his experience as a practical livestockman before his employment in the Forest Service, and also in consideration of his experience as an administrator, his judgment as to legislation respecting grazing is reliable and valuable at this time when this question is creating such a great amount of study and discussion throughout the country, and especially as this grazing legislation will soon be acted on by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter is as follows:

Mr. F. R. MARSHALL,
Secretary National Wool Growers' Association,
Los Angeles, Calif., March 30, 1926.
Salt Lake City, Utah.

DEAR MR. MARSHALL: Your office has sent me a copy of Secretary Jardine's letter to Senator STANFIELD, accompanied by a draft of the bill which has been prepared by the counsel for the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and the Chief of the Forest Service and other representatives of the Department of Agriculture.

It would be putting it mildly to say that I am very much pleased with this new bill. It eliminates all of the features of Senator STANFIELD'S bill (S. 2584) which were objectionable to me and includes in the same form of bill all of the provisions needed to stabilize grazing upon the national forests under a policy defined by law.

It recognizes use of the land for grazing as one of the purposes of the national forests and thus settles forever the question of whether or not treeless land apparently chiefly valuable for grazing may be legally included or held within the national forests, and also places upon the Department of Agriculture the obligation to allow the use of the national forests for grazing, so far as this is consistent with their other primary purposes.

It places the grazing permits on a contract basis, extending over a period of years and requires that the conditions under which the use of the land is allowed, and under which the number or kind of stock grazed upon it may be changed, shall be inserted in the contract.

As I understand it, this means that all questions of changes in range allotments, numbers of animals grazed, period of year during which they may be grazed, conditions under which the permit may be renewed, etc., become stipulations of the contract. This puts the permits on a business basis and gives them stability.

With reference to the grazing fees, I think section 10 of the bill defines very plainly that the fee shall be a fair and reasonable one and safeguards the stockmen against grazing ever being put on a strictly commercial basis or the permits being sold to the highest bidder. This is the policy I tried so hard to establish, and which I believe will be best for everybody in the long run.

All of the other features of the bill are excellent. If this is the result of the work done by Mr. O'Donel, Mr. Hagenbarth, and yourself, to bring about a compromise between the different factions, and it is approved by the Senate committee, I will say that you are all entitled not only to medals but to the everlasting gratitude of every stockman using the national-forest ranges.

Very truly yours,

A. F. POTTER.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OPINION ON COASTWISE LAWS

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Attorney General has recently written a very important opinion dealing with the coastwise laws. I have here data and letters with reference to this decision which I think it would be well to have in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that the matter may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the United States Daily, April 8, 1926]

SHIPOWNERS PROTEST RULING OF MR. SARGENT—CHALLENGE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OPINION IN FAVOR OF BRITISH SHIPS RELOADING OIL AT NEW ORLEANS—COUNSEL REQUESTS SHIPPING BOARD ACT—COMMISSIONER OF NAVIGATION'S DECISION HOLDING PRACTICE VIOLATES MERCHANT MARINE LAW IS OVERRULED

SHIPPING—OIL—LAWYERS—FOREIGN TRADE

The American Steamship Owners' Association has protested to the Shipping Board against adoption of the opinion of the Attorney General to the effect that ships flying the British flag can, under existing law, transport gasoline from Pacific American ports to New Orleans, reload the gasoline, and transport it to British ports. The protest was contained in a letter addressed to T. V. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board, by Edwin H. Duff, attorney for the association, and given out by Mr. O'Connor.

LARGE INTEREST INVOLVED

Mr. Duff, in his letter, requested that in view of the large interest the board has in coastwise shipping and because of its duties under the merchant marine act of 1920, the board instruct its legal department to confer with the Attorney General regarding the opinion which he recently delivered to the Secretary of Commerce defining the application of the coastwise shipping laws.

COMMISSIONER OVERRULED

In this opinion, which grew out of an application by the Anglo-American Petroleum Co., the Attorney General overruled the decision of D. B. Carson, Commissioner of Navigation of the Department of Commerce, who held that such transportation would be a violation of section 27 of the merchant marine act of 1920. In his opinion the Attorney General applied the rule of ultimate destination.

Mr. Duff expresses the view that the Attorney General arrived at his conclusions without all the facts being before him and asks that the board, through its legal department, furnish him with these facts.

Mr. Duff's letter in full text follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5, 1926.

There is inclosed for your information a copy of an opinion recently made public by the Attorney General in the matter of the transportation of oil in British tankers from California to New Orleans, there to be discharged to undergo a process of mixing with the mid-continent oil, and subsequently to be carried in British tankers to a port in England.

The effect of this decision upon coastwise shipping of the United States is so far-reaching that the American Steamship Owners' Association is impelled to call same to your attention in the hope that in carrying out the mandate of Congress with regard to preserving the welfare of American shipping, and in view of the Shipping Board's large pecuniary interest in coastwise shipping, due to loans for the construction of and unpaid deferred payments on tonnage being operated therein, the board may see its way clear to confer with the Department of Justice in regard to this very important subject.

REMEDIAL LEGISLATION SUGGESTED

Manifestly if the Attorney General holds to the views set forth in this opinion, immediate legislation to correct alleged defects in the law must be sought, as it is certain neither the Shipping Board nor the Attorney General desire to do or permit to be done anything that would result in such great injury to the vested interests of American shipping as would result from the decision referred to.

In our opinion the conclusion must have been reached without the full facts being before the Attorney General, and we believe that upon a reconsideration in the light of the facts set forth herein the Attorney General will be willing to review the law upon which his recent opinion is based.

The Attorney General states: "It must be borne in mind that the evident purpose of section 27 is to secure to American vessels the coastwise trade of the United States and to prohibit the use of foreign vessels in such trade," and yet in dealing with the instant case the Attorney General's decision does not take proper cognizance of that purpose, which has been a national policy of the United States since their federation.

The real intent and extent of that intent may be taken from the report of the Senate Committee on Commerce (S. Rept. 573, 66th Cong., 2d sess.), which provides in part as follows:

"Such policy obtained from the foundation of our Government until very recent years, and under that policy we became possessed of a tonnage in vessels greater than the combined coastwise fleets of the leading maritime nations of the world. . . ."

"Except for the American-built seagoing tonnage developed under that policy, we would have been in a sorry plight at the time of our entrance into the World War. However, influences adverse to the interests of the United States have accomplished relaxation of statutory requirements and of interpretation of statutes contrary to the intent of Congress in their enactment, resulting in many encroachments upon the theretofore purely American occupation of our coastwise trades . . ."

Among such adverse decisions we can find none that have such far-reaching effects as that of the Attorney General in the Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Co. case. It is not only adverse to the national policy of coastwise protection but seems to violate, disregard, and misinterpret the express language of section 27 of the merchant marine act of 1920, which section was designed to further protect the coastwise trade against encroachment by foreign vessels.

STATUTE DECLARED CLEAR

The relevant language of the statute is clear and needs no interpretation:

"No merchandise shall be transported by water between points in the United States in any other vessel than a vessel built in and documented under the laws of the United States."

Uninterrupted transportation between two points is an easily demonstrable fact. If merchandise is laden at San Francisco and discharged at New Orleans without the movement having in anywise been interrupted, transportation is established as between those points, and those points being within the United States and the vessel being a foreign vessel, a violation of section 27 has occurred.

When the transportation is interrupted the question raised is not as to the fact of transportation, which is at all times demonstrable, but as to whether transportation between a given point of origin and an intermediate port and from that intermediate port to a given point of destination may also be regarded as transportation between the points of origin and destination. In other words, whether the two movements also may be considered as one.

GREAT LAKES GRAIN CASES CITED

For example, take the Great Lakes grain cases. The Attorney General says:

"The bulk grain is being transported from Chicago to Georgian Bay, Canada, and thence . . . to New England points . . ."

He speaks of grain being transported from Chicago to Georgian Bay and thence to New England. Grain is, therefore, admittedly transported from Chicago to Georgian Bay and from Georgian Bay to New England points. The question presented was, did such transportation also come within "transportation between points in the United States" referred to in section 27?

Applying the rule of intended continuity of movement to such a case was proper; unless there was such continuity there was not a "transportation between points in the United States" but only two separate and distinct transportations. There can be no doubt, however, that merchandise was transported between Chicago and Georgian Bay and between Georgian Bay and points in New England.

The Attorney General states:

"Section 27 of the merchant marine act relates only to domestic commerce and transportation thereof between ports of the United States."

We can not agree with this contention, and we rely upon the plain, unequivocal language of the statute. The transportation prohibited is not that incident only to domestic commerce. The section says "no merchandise," and by that unmodified language, it is obvious Congress meant "no merchandise," and by that unmodified regardless of its ultimate destination, and regardless as to how it might be classed according to the accepted rules for determining the nature of the commerce.

Congress made no exception from this provision that such inhibited transportation might be performed by foreign vessels if the commerce was strictly foreign, and therefore no such exception from the general rule is warranted, nor has the administrative policy of the Bureau of Navigation permitted such exceptions since the first restrictive coastwise laws were placed upon the statute books by the founders of our Government. Established interpretations of laws in their administration should not be lightly disturbed unless they are clearly in violation of law or in derogation of rights acquired thereunder.

LIMITATION PUT ON SHIPPING

Congress has not sought to restrict commerce between the States or between points in the United States, but the language and purpose of section 27 and similar legislation regulates and restricts transportation, an incident of commerce, to American vessels. The nature of the commerce—foreign or domestic—is therefore unimportant. The transportation is that which is controlled. If the transportation comes within the class prohibited by Congress, forfeiture of the merchandise carried will and must result, regardless of what the nature of the commerce may be.

While "commerce" and "transportation" are often loosely used interchangeably, the terms are not coextensive, synonymous, or productive of the same effect. "Commerce" comprehends transportation as an incident thereof, but "transportation" in the vernacular means "to carry," "to convey," "to carry from one place or station to another."

We disagree that—

"To hold that the indicated transportation will be in violation of section 27 necessarily requires a determination that the transportation from California is complete upon arrival at New Orleans."

Congress did not prescribe that the transportation must be completed as ultimately intended. If the nature of the commerce, interstate or foreign, was the determining factor, the statement would be correct; but if Congress had intended that the inhibition should be limited to the transportation of merchandise ultimately destined to a port or places within the United States, it would and should have used language indicative of that intention. "No merchandise" certainly can not comprehend that limitation.

It is here proper that we should also point out that the section does not even say transportation from a point in the United States to another point in the United States. Had this language been used in the absence of a clearly expressed intention on the part of Congress, it might possibly be successfully contended that the ultimate destination of the merchandise in question was a material factor. This language is not used, however, and the unimportance of the ultimate destination is illustrated further by the use of the words "between points in the United States."

OPINION CHALLENGED

It is true "the act indicates no purpose to regulate foreign commerce." It does indicate, however, a clear, concise, and unequivocal intention to regulate certain transportation which may or may not be an incident of foreign commerce, and to arrive at the results obtained by the Attorney General that purpose must be disregarded.

In its general application the interpretation suggested by the Attorney General would remove from the protection of our coastwise laws that transportation which forms a large percentage of our coastwise trade, namely, the carriage of merchandise from one point in the United States to another point in the United States to be transhipped, either with or without being processed, changed, etc., to a foreign country. If the ultimate destination of the merchandise as determined by the continuity of the transportation is to be, as the Attorney General suggests, the determining factor as to whether there is a violation of our coastwise laws, a large percentage of traffic which has heretofore been enjoyed by American vessels exclusively will be opened to foreign vessels for the first time, and notwithstanding the intent Congress recently expressed in the merchant marine act that coastwise trades should be "absolutely" restricted to American vessels. But there is no authority for applying such a rule to determine whether a particular transportation violates our coastwise laws.

EDWIN H. DUFF.

The letter of the Attorney General, entitled "Transportation of Gasoline in Foreign Vessels from California to New Orleans and then to England," follows in full text:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
February 4, 1926.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 4, 1926, stating that the Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, proposes to purchase California gasoline for shipment to and distribution in England. It is stated that before gasoline can be used in England it must be mixed with mid-continent gasoline. The company proposes to transport the gasoline from California to New Orleans, where the California gasoline will be landed, mixed with mid-continent gasoline, and the mixture will then be transported to England, the original destination. The entire transportation will be in British flag vessels owned by the company.

The exact purpose of the company is stated by it as follows:

"It is the corporation's purpose to transport the gasoline from California to its intended destination in England by its own British flag vessels and in the course of such transportation to mix the gasoline at New Orleans as already described, which mixing will, of course, necessitate landing and reloading at New Orleans, continuing the transportation of the gasoline—as so mixed—to the intended destination in England in the same vessels, owned by the corporation, that began the transportation from California."

It is contended by the commissioner of navigation that the proposed transportation from California to New Orleans in a foreign vessel will constitute a violation of section 27 of the merchant marine act of 1920. My opinion, therefore, is requested whether or not the indicated transportation will be in violation of the merchant marine act.

Section 27 of the merchant marine act of 1920, c. 250, 41 Stat. 999, reads, in part, as follows:

"That no merchandise shall be transported by water, or by land and water, on penalty of forfeiture thereof, between points in the United States, including Districts, Territories, and possessions thereof embraced within the coastwise laws, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation, in any other vessel than a vessel built in and documented under the laws of the United States and owned by persons who are citizens of the United States, or vessels to which the privilege of engaging in the coastwise trade is extended by sections 18 or 22 of this act: . . ."

It must be borne in mind that the evident purpose of section 27 is to secure to American vessels the coasting trade of the United States and to prohibit the use of foreign vessels in such trade.

From the statement of facts presented it is apparent that the destination of the California gasoline from the time it is taken aboard the British vessel at a California port to the time it reaches its final destination is a foreign port. Section 27 of the merchant marine act relates only to domestic commerce and transportation thereof between ports of the United States. The act indicates no purpose to regulate foreign commerce. To hold that the indicated transportation will be in violation of section 27 necessarily requires a determination that the transportation from California is complete upon arrival at New Orleans. This view can not be accepted, as the destination of the California gasoline is at all times a foreign port, and the continuity of the transportation to the ultimate destination is merely temporarily interrupted at New Orleans for the purpose of mixing the gasoline with a like product of higher grade. The product, however, remains the same, and the identical gasoline taken aboard at the California port is to be transported to and consumed in a foreign country.

So long as the ultimate destination of the American product is a foreign port, and the product is eventually transported to its ultimate destination, the mere fact that the continuity of the transportation is interrupted by stoppage at an intermediate American port does not constitute a violation of section 27. The Supreme Court in the Bermuda (8 Wall. 514, 533) said:

"It makes no difference whether the destination to the rebel port was ulterior or direct; nor could the question of destination be affected by transshipment at Nassau if transshipment was intended, for that could not break the continuity of transportation of the cargo."

A transportation from one point to another remains continuous so long as intent remains unchanged, no matter what stoppages or transshipments intervene.

Referring to the decision in the Bermuda case, the Attorney General in 32 Op. 350, 352, said:

"Clearly whether successive voyages are connected by a common plan is a question of fact to be determined from the circumstances of each individual case. Applying the test laid down by the Supreme Court to the circumstances of the present case, it is apparent that the facts fall short of the showing that the continuity of the voyage has been broken."

That the ultimate destination is dependent on the intent of the shipper and not on the contract of shipment was decided by the Supreme Court in B. & O. Railroad Co. v. Settle et al. (260 U. S. 166, 171).

The rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the Bermuda case was applied by the Attorney General to the transportation of American grain in foreign vessels from an American port to a Canadian port and thence to an American port (34 Op. 355). In that opinion the Attorney General said:

"It can be determined only from the facts presented in each case whether there existed such an intent to transship the grain to an American port or place as would constitute a continuous transportation and result in violation of section 27 of the merchant marine act; or whether, in the absence of such intent, the continuity of the transportation was broken upon arrival at the foreign port and the grain entered into the commerce of the foreign country and lost its identity as an American product."

From the facts presented it appears that, although the transportation will be interrupted at New Orleans, the continuity thereof will not be broken, as the intent remains throughout that the identical American product is to be transported to a foreign destination. The continuity of the transportation, although interrupted at New Orleans, remains unbroken and unchanged until the product reaches its final destination.

I have the honor to advise you, therefore, that in my opinion the transportation outlined in the statement of facts presented will not constitute a violation of section 27 of the merchant marine act.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. SARGENT.

To the SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

Representative SCOTT, of Michigan (Republican), chairman of the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, announced on April 7 that he would introduce a bill designed to prevent such transshipment if the ruling of the Attorney General is permitted to stand. He made public the following letter on the subject, which he said he had addressed to the Attorney General:

"JOHN G. SARGENT,

"Attorney General of the United States,

"Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR ATTORNEY GENERAL: On April 1, 1926, you rendered an opinion to the Department of Commerce in the case of the Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, involving the right of that company to transport oil, in a British ship, from one port in the United States to another port in the United States for the purpose of process, providing the destination of such cargo was to a foreign port.

"I consider this opinion fraught with serious possibilities and would very much appreciate your furnishing me the data upon which this opinion was based, because if you are correct in your interpretation of the law it would seem imperative that section 27 of the merchant marine act be amended to cover the purpose for which it was obviously intended. Under your interpretation foreign ships could, and would, engage in the coastwise trade, not only in ocean transportation but in transportation on the Great Lakes, providing the cargo was susceptible to alteration or refinement and its actual or prospective destination was a foreign port."

Explaining his position in the matter, Mr. SCOTT made the following statement on April 7:

"The Attorney General rendered this opinion to the Department of Justice on April 1. I picked it up in a Baltimore newspaper on April 2. I called up the Department of Commerce, which advised me that such an opinion was rendered. The opinion was given at the instance of the Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Co., a British corporation. It involved the interpretation of section 27 of the merchant marine act, which reserves to the coastwise trade the transportation of all commodities between ports in the United States.

"In that particular case the British company bought a cargo of oil from Los Angeles and reloaded it for shipment to a British port. The Attorney General held that the entire transportation was one of transporting a commodity to a foreign port and the delay at New Orleans was merely incidental to the transportation.

"I consider the opinion is very vital. I requested the Attorney General to furnish me the data on which he founded such an opinion. I also have taken up the matter with the Shipping Board in order that another branch of the Government may ask for an opinion which will allow the Attorney General to reverse his previous opinion if he considers it erroneous. But if he adheres to that former ruling I shall introduce a bill to amend the section referred to—and it is a very clear expression of law—so that it will accomplish the purpose for which it is obviously intended."

ADDRESS OF SENATOR BRUCE MADE ON ARMISTICE DAY

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] upon the occasion of the dedication of the memorial entrance of the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, Md., on armistice day 1925.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF THE HON. WILLIAM CARELL BRUCE ON ARMISTICE DAY, 1925, AT THE DEDICATION OF THE MEMORIAL ENTRANCE OF THE FIFTH REGIMENT ARMORY, AT BALTIMORE, MD.

Some of you will remember that, during the World War, Lloyd-George, the English statesman, once recalled the fact that the United States had never been engaged in a war which it had not brought to a successful issue. Always, in the end, no matter how long deferred, the God of Hosts had given us the victory.

First, there was our arduous and protracted struggle for national independence with the mother country of whose world-wide power Daniel Webster was later to say, in his grand manner, that it kept company with the hours, and circled the globe with one continuous strain of the martial airs of England. In that struggle Providence brought France—let it never be forgotten—as an ally to our side; and with her aid we secured the national freedom which has been the inspiration of our marvelous growth as a people.

Then followed the War of 1812 with England, in which we suffered not a few reverses, but none that were not, on the whole, redeemed by the national prestige that we acquired at sea, and the decisive, crushing triumph won by Andrew Jackson at New Orleans. The battle monument on Calvert Street is a singularly beautiful testimonial to the stern resolution with which the British attack upon Baltimore, in that war, was repelled.

Then followed our war with Mexico, in which the combatants were too unevenly matched to render our success a matter of any real doubt. That war, however, did prove an admirable school of training for some of the most famous generals of our Civil War.

Then followed our Civil War itself, which resulted in the defeat of the South by the National Government, but at the same time in such an increased measure of national unity, strength, and prosperity for our whole country that this defeat can truly be said to have been, in its ultimate consequences, not more a victory for the North than for the South.

Then followed the Spanish-American War in which the extraordinary efficiency of our Navy was again demonstrated, but in which our ambitious Army officers complained that, on land, there was not enough war to go round.

And then followed the World War, in which those fair, gallant youths, 116 in number, whose names we are commemorating this morning, laid upon the altar of their country the precious offering of their bright, joyous, hopeful lives.

Recently there has been a disposition in some quarters to refer our entrance into the World War to merely selfish motives. I speak deliberately when I say that such an idea can be rejected with scorn. All human motives, individual or national, are mixed; all are more or less an amalgam of selfish and unselfish elements; though, thanks to the benign hand which shapes our being, the unselfish are, on the whole, predominant. In entering the World War, we were, of course, influenced, to no small extent, by the loss of life and property inflicted upon us by the ruthless submarine warfare of Germany. So inordinate was the military ambition, and so menacing was the military power of that country, too, that we were also influenced by the apprehension that they might finally invade even our own shores. As they were brought home to us by one startling revelation after another, we almost felt, as our forefathers did when it seemed as if Napoleon was bent upon nothing less than the conquest of the whole world, and was according our country no privilege except, as John Randolph of Roanoke, said at the time, the poor privilege accorded to Ulysses by the monster, Polyphemus, of being the last to be devoured. This was the material side of our participation in the World War; but, as is true of most of our wars, it had its spiritual side, too.

The truly determining motives that led us into the World War were those which Woodrow Wilson, our war President, expressed with such felicity—that is, our faith in human civilization, our generous love of human liberty, our belief that the liberal institutions, so indispensable to human welfare and happiness, which we and the other great civilized lands of the earth had acquired at such a costly expenditure of blood and treasure, were so direfully imperiled by the merciless and unscrupulous spirit of the German military caste that the world must again be made safe for democracy.

Those were the sentiments that gave to our part in the World War its real character and its profoundest meaning; these were the sentiments that our brave soldiers bore across the seas as their keenest incentives to valor and self-devotion; these were the sentiments for which the 116 members of the Fifth Regiment, to whom we are paying our tribute to-day, bled or sickened, and died. That such sentiments should have prevailed in the World War is enough in itself to make that war one of the noblest ever waged for the highest interests of humanity. But how immeasurably are its importance and dignity enhanced by the exalted aims which have followed it! Our allies have not been willing to reap simply the immediate fruits of their dearly bought victory, but have established, and are maintaining, a concert, which embraces almost every civilized country in the world, for the purpose of keeping war permanently in check. If they can have their way, nevermore shall Caesar's or Kaiser's spirit cry, "Havoc! and let slip the dogs of war."

Already, at one alarming crisis or another, this concert has made itself decisively felt, and, while it may be impracticable to bring international warfare entirely to an end, I, for one, believe that by international cooperation its frequency and its atrocity may be reduced within narrower limits. If they are reduced, even though our country shall never have entered the present League of Nations, history will declare that no one individual exerted a greater influence in bringing that state of things about than the American President, Woodrow Wilson; and no one army than the American Army, of which the soldiers, whose names are inscribed on the memorial that we are dedicating to-day, were a part.

In all ages the soldier has occupied a place in the service of his people that no other member of society can possibly occupy. Other individuals may be called upon to make sacrifices for the welfare of the Commonwealth—sacrifices of time, of convenience, of labor, of comfort, and of wealth; the police officer may occasionally even be called upon to discharge his duty at the expense of his life, but, in time of war, the soldier is required to bear his life in his hands from day to day, and to surrender it at any moment that it may be demanded of him. Of him is expected not the ordinary fidelity of civil life, but the fidelity that, like that of religious martyrdom, is faithful even unto death.

"Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die."

All fear of peril, all desire for safety, all thought of self, must perish

"When the sweet clarion's breath
Stirs the soldier's scorn of death."

In the hour of national danger upon him depend the peace, the security, the liberties, nay, at times, the very lives of the community of which he is the armed defender. To him the helplessness of infancy, of womanhood, and of age; every noncombatant, whatever his years or sex, who has property to be seized or a person to be violated or destroyed; every hearthside, every public edifice or religious temple, looks for protection, and, if he can not protect them, protection there is none to be obtained from any earthly source.

All honor, therefore, to all of our American soldiers who crossed the submarine-infested Atlantic and endured, uncomplainingly, the hardships and tragic sufferings of the World War, and enabled our allies, with the aid of their fresh, young manhood and impetuous courage, to bring peace once more to a reeling and distracted world.

Among these soldiers, we can not forget, were thousands of young men from the streets, the green fields, and the wooded hills of the State of Maryland; but especially, this day, is our homage due to the soldiers from this city whose deaths in the service of their country have brought us together. They were inhabitants not only of Maryland but of Baltimore. They were bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. At one time or another they had all been members of the Fifth Regiment, that ancient regiment which, organized a few months after the American Declaration of Independence, has won an honorable name for itself in the military history of the United States, and is still, to-day, one of the things of which we, as citizens of no mean city, are justly proud.

It was in Baltimore that each of them left behind him father or mother, sister or brother, wife or sweetheart, in obedience to the call of that mightier mother of us all, our country. There was not a man of them, it is safe to say, that was not cherished in at least one fond heart in Baltimore. Living, they were our very own; dead, in the line of duty, they are doubly ours. So long as one brick of this city shall remain standing upon another their memory will be treasured by us as the memory of the defenders of 1814 is treasured.

What are the lessons to be derived from their lives? First of all, of course, the old, old lesson, old as the Pass of Thermopylae, old as the Plains of Marathon, that the claim of our motherland in the hour of national peril to our lives is superior to our own, and that now, as in the time of the Roman poet, it is a sweet and honorable thing to die for one's country. The next is that the unity of aim and spirit, which was such a striking feature of our national character in the World War, should also accompany that character in time of peace. All the mean, ignoble impulses of human bigotry and prejudice died out at that supreme crisis. No distinction was made then between any of the sects and races in our midst so far as the obligations of patriotism were concerned. Why should any proscriptive impulses be tolerated now? Surely, if it is proper that all the elements of our varied population should feel more closely drawn toward each other by a sense of common danger, it is but proper that they should not tritism were concerned. Why should any such proscriptive impulses be tolerated when that danger has passed; for even the fierce beasts of the forest forget their mutual animosities when involved in a common peril. Nothing did the World War evidence more completely than the essential unity, the substantial solidarity of all the diverse elements of which our American population is made up, and their common attachment to the free institutions under which they have all thriven, and presented the most conspicuous example of general prosperity and happiness that the world has ever seen. There could be no better proof of this than the practical unanimity with which the principle of universal military conscription was approved by our people. Indeed, there were no braver or more patriotic soldiers in our Army than young Americans of German extraction itself.

Another lesson to be derived from the lives of those youths is that we must, each in his several provinces of influence, see to it that in the highest sense of all they did not die in vain. Most, if not all of them, doubtless cherished in their hearts the belief that, to use a well-worn phrase, they were engaged in a war to end war, and that such a fearful, world-wide, and diabolically destructive war as the World War could not fail to enlist the conscience, the heart, and the intellect of the whole civilized universe in the sacred task of preventing the repetition of a catastrophe so offensive to God, so ruinous to human civilization, so dishonoring to human nature itself. That belief should be a perpetual exhortation to us to insist that this country should persistently employ its great influence, too, for the purpose of preserving, as nearly as human passions and infirmities will permit, the peace of the world.

As I stand here this morning, all the first sensations aroused in me by the armistice which brought the World War to a close, seem to be renewed. I happened, on the day that it was concluded, to be walking down Charles Street when the tongue of every bell and the throat of every steam whistle in Baltimore brought to me unexpectedly the announcement that the great, cruel, bloody war, which had extinguished so many millions of human lives, crippled so many millions of human bodies, and heaped up such enormous debts, was at last over. More than once before that day I had shed tears of grief. What mortal eyes have not? Never before, however, had I shed any tears of joy; nor have I ever since; but I confess that on that day tears of rapturous delight welled up from the deepest fountains of my nature and filled my eyes and overflowed my cheeks. The military aristocracy which had proved the fellest curse to mankind that had ever descended upon it since the death of Napoleon had been laid low, and largely, if not decisively, by the intervention of our own country. Human freedom could breathe easily again. Human civilization could once more pursue its appointed course in obedience to the "divine, far-off event to which the whole creation moves." The ship of our national destiny had once more come exultantly into port. Soon all of our brave, free-born soldiers, except those who had sunk into the blood-stained soil of France, would be returning to our shores wreathed with the garlands of victory. God, seated in His mighty pavilion of majesty and mercy, still ruled the world. Cold as a stone, faithless to the voice of that great day and to the memory of the dead, whom we are honoring at this hour, shall we be if we shall ever forget the obligation that our country owes to itself and to the world to do all that lofty and sagacious statesmanship can do to prevent the recurrence of such a war.

COLORADO RIVER BRIDGE AT LEE FERRY, ARIZONA

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the Record an open letter to the editor of the New York Times from Frederick S. Dellenbaugh with reference to the bridge over the Colorado River at Lee Ferry, which has been a matter of considerable interest. The writer of this letter accompanied Major Powell on his second trip down the Colorado River and has written several books about the river, and, as is well known, has personal knowledge of the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter is as follows:

COLORADO RIVER BRIDGE

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I wonder if many people know that in these progressive United States of ours there is a river which has no bridge across it for vehicles in a distance as the river runs of some 600 miles owing to the parsimony and short-sightedness of Congress and of the States of Utah and Arizona, in which this stretch of river lies.

And now our great Senate is waking up! The Senators are perfectly willing to build a bridge over the Colorado River at Lee Ferry—where it should have been built 25 years ago—provided that the poor Navajo Indians who live near by and who will be benefited by the proposed bridge about as much as they would be by one over the Hudson—provided the poor Navajos pay $100,000 of the cost. This is about half the estimated cost.

Two sovereign States and the great United States demand that the Navajo Indians shall pay one-half the cost of a bridge which the Government should have constructed at least a quarter of a century ago! If this absurdity can be matched anywhere in the world outside of Tibet, the writer would be glad to be informed.

I know they will argue that the Colorado runs through a desolate region and deep canyons. This is true, but it is all the more reason why this entirely feasible bridge should have been built long ago—to aid in uniting two huge areas now so very difficult to reach, one from the other. Coming down from Salt Lake one reaches a pocket; coming up from the south the same is true; and the only way out of these pockets north and south is by a little more or less precarious ferry at the head of a rapid.

FREDERICK S. DELLENBAUGH.

NEW YORK, March 9, 1926.

COMPILATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION (S. DOC. NO. 93)

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed as a public document a compilation of the proposed amendments to the Constitution from December 4, 1889, to March 27, 1926, prepared by the librarian of the research department. There have already been printed the proposed amendments up to December 4, 1889, and the amendments have now been brought down to March 27, 1926. This compilation is so often requested by Members of the Senate that I think it would be appropriate to have it made a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator state that we have not had a print of the proposed amendments to the Constitution since 1889?

Mr. DILL. Yes. This is a compilation of the dates and subjects of the proposed amendments. There has already been printed by the Government a similar compilation down to December 4, 1889, but I am informed by the legislative reference bureau that no print by the Government has been made since.

Mr. SMOOT. I may be mistaken, but I think there was one down to 1906. I have no objection to the printing of it, however, because I think it ought to be printed for the use not only of the Senate and Members of the House but others interested in it as well.

Mr. DILL. I make that statement on the authority of Mr. Meyer, who is the director of the legislative reference bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. I may be mistaken, but I think there was one prepared, anyway.

Mr. DILL. It was prepared, but never printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Casper, Wyo., remonstrating against any modification of the prohibition enforcement act, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Whereas it has been urged upon the past and present administrations, time and again, that the Congress of the United States shall make a full and complete investigation into the economic, industrial, and social conditions existing in the island: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee of the Senate and the House be directed to investigate the political, industrial, economic, and social conditions in Porto Rico and report their findings and recommendations to the Senate and House as speedily as practicable. SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of Senators to a speech which was made by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST], and which has now been published in the RECORD. I regret that the leading speech in favor of the majority report, which was made by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], has not yet been published. As it was delivered several days ago, and one's memory is liable to be at fault, the references to it which I should like to make I shall not attempt to make for fear I might misquote him.

The speech of the senior Senator from Kentucky, however, has been published, and on page 6950 of the RECORD I find that he said, in reply to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]:

Nothing is clearer than that the Committee on Privileges and Elections is its own judge, and it does not have to follow the law of Iowa, and has not done so, and has not attempted to do so.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a very extraordinary position to take. I realize that I am probably in the minority in so believing. It may seem strange that I should so believe. The Senator from Kentucky holds that my views as to what was intended by the Constitution are at fault. As he is a very much older and a more experienced lawyer than most of us—and, indeed, I am not a lawyer at all—perhaps it is presumptuous in me to attempt to dispute his views. I realize that the position in regard to State rights which I am about to take may sound strange in the ears of some of the Senators who sit in this body at the present time. Were I speaking for myself alone, I should immediately desist and say no more; but, Mr. President, I feel that I am speaking for my State, which has always maintained most earnestly and sincerely—perhaps more so than any other State in the Union, with one exception—the doctrine of State rights.

If I may be permitted to do so for a moment, I wish to call the attention of the Senators to the fact that when the sixteenth amendment changing the constitutional law with regard to the equality of taxation was, through a joint resolution passed by Congress, submitted to the States and ratified by them, Connecticut was one of the three States which refused to ratify that amendment to the Constitution. The others were Rhode Island and Utah.

When the eighteenth amendment, which added to the Federal Government an entirely new power, giving Congress the right to make sumptuary laws, was ratified by 46 of the 48 States, Connecticut was one of two, the other being Rhode Island, which refused to ratify that amendment, not because we are more fond of the product of the grapes which appear on the seal of Connecticut than are the people of any other State, but because we believed that the amendment proposed to take away from the sovereign State of Connecticut certain rights which had been reserved to her.

When the twentieth amendment, so called—the child labor amendment—was by a joint resolution passed by a very large majority of the Senate and House of Representatives and submitted to the States for ratification, the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut by an extraordinary vote decided that the State of Connecticut wished to retain control over its own children. In the Senate of Connecticut the motion to ratify the twentieth amendment was defeated by a vote of 33 to 1 and in the lower house by the most extraordinary vote of 231 to 7, both houses, by a proportion of 33 to 1, differing from the opinion of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States on that most important measure.

I merely offer this, Mr. President, as an explanation for my presumption in taking the attitude that State rights must be preserved if this Government is to continue to be a successful, popular Government. That attitude has not been unknown on this side of the Senate Chamber. At the time of the contested-election case of James Harlan, of Iowa, a very distinguished Senator, William H. Seward, of New York, who was at that time generally recognized to be the leader of the Republican Party in the United States, and who was soon afterwards a candidate for nomination for the Presidency, made a very remarkable speech, in which he upheld the rights of the States, as follows:

The Constitution of the United States gives supreme right to Congress to prescribe in what manner the legislature of a State shall perform that act independently of all State constitutions.

The Congress of the United States has practically waived this right and devolved that duty on the Legislature of Iowa, as it was authorized to do by the Constitution of the United States.

The manner prescribed by the Legislature of Iowa does not conflict with any article of the Constitution of the United States. It would not be at all affected by any conflict with the constitution of Iowa, inasmuch as no control over the subject whatever resides in the people of Iowa, by whom the constitution was made.

Mr. President, this transaction is a judicial one. I have approached it, I trust, free from partiality or prejudice. The question is an important one. The decision may be drawn into a precedent to affect hereafter the rights of 60 States, and the safety, welfare, and union of this confederate Republic hundreds of years hence, when this people shall number, not as now by tens but by hundreds of millions.

Mr. President, it seems to me quite an extraordinary coincidence that in the very case now before us we have a similar issue raised with regard to the right of a Senator from Iowa. But to continue with the remarks of Senator Seward for a moment.

I therefore confine my judgment to this case as it stands on the facts. I do not prejudge other cases which shall present other facts nor lay down principles for other and extreme cases. I can foresee possible abuses to come from a misapplication of the principles I have adopted. But abuses will attach themselves to all principles as barnacles will to the smoothest and strongest bottoms.

Our decision is not likely to affect 60 States as Mr. Seward thought, but it does affect the rights of 48 States and more than 100,000,000 people.

Mr. President, if Senators will bear with me for a few moments, I should like to quote a few words from the Constitution of the United States which, in my very humble opinion and in the opinion of those in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, should govern in cases of this kind, rather than the extraordinary opinion expressed by the chairman of the committee as representing the views of the great majority of the committee.

Article I, section 4, of the Constitution provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It is interesting, Mr. President, to go back to the journal of the Constitutional Convention when that section of the Constitution was under consideration. I have in my hand the journal as kept by James Madison and as edited by Scott, and I find that when this section was taken up the representatives from South Carolina, very naturally, objected to that portion of it which gave to the Congress the "right to make or alter such regulations."

Mr. Pinckney and Mr. Rutledge moved to strike out that portion of the section.

The States, they contended, could and must be relied on in such cases.

The answer to that was made by James Madison, who put down in his journal the argument he used, giving his reasons why Congress—not, mind you, the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, and not the Senate, but Congress—should have power to alter or amend the State election laws. He states that without that provision the words would be of too great latitude, and he said that—

It was impossible to foresee all the abuses that might be made of the discretionary power.

There is no evidence before us, Mr. President, that the State of Iowa has abused its power in this particular. Neither is there any evidence before us that the Congress of the United States is asked to enact into law any change or emendation of the law of Iowa.

Madison went on to say:

Whenever the State legislatures had a favorite measure to carry, they would take care so to mold their regulations as to favor the candidates they wished to succeed.

Therefore he was in favor of the clause. But there is no evidence before us that the State Legislature of Iowa has in any way attempted to favor any candidate. The laws which they have made governing elections in Iowa have been considered just and honorable; there is no question raised here as to that.

Madison goes on to say:

What danger could there be in giving a controlling power to the National Legislature?

And so it was done. He concludes the entry in his journal by saying:

This was meant to give the National Legislature a power not only to alter the provisions of the States, but to make regulations in case the States should fail or refuse altogether.

It seems to me perfectly clear, Mr. President, that it was the intent of the framers of the Constitution to give to the National Legislature, as stated in the Constitution, at any time by law—and the word "law" is written in the section with capital letters—by law to make or amend such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators. The reason for the exception as to the places of choosing Senators was because they did not desire to give the National Legislature the right to change the location of the State capitals.

The contention has been made by the chairman of the committee that the Senate has a perfect right to disregard the law of Iowa or to amend that law so far as they might see fit in order to follow the intent of the voters. This plea as to the intent of the voters is a specious plea. It certainly sounds reasonable. When one first hears it one is inclined to say, "Certainly, we ought to decide this case according to the intent of the voters." If we could only get the voters of the State to write letters here, as so many thousands of them do, and say, "My dear Mr. Senator, I desired to vote for So-and-so," we would then know the intent of the voters. If we could only find that all their ballots had written on them the words, "I desire to vote for Steck," then we should know that they desired to vote for Steck and we would count those ballots; but, Mr. President, how many States in this Union permit any marks of that kind to be placed on a ballot? All ballots must be cast in accordance with the laws of the State. These laws are designed to protect the voters in expressing their intent, and if a voter should write on a ballot the words, "I desire to vote for Daniel F. Steck," that would in practically every State in the Union disqualify that ballot and cause it to be rejected. Yet, according to the committee, that would express the voter's idea so frankly and so fully that there could be no question about his intent, and such ballots ought to be counted. The committee have told us that they counted such ballots for Brookhart. If the voter, in his enthusiasm for Senator Brookhart, wrote on the ballot the name "Brookhart" once or twice or three times, it did not matter how many times or how he spelled the name or whether he conformed to the law of Iowa at all; so long as he indicated his desire to vote for Senator Brookhart the ballots must be counted. The committee did the same thing for Mr. Steck. In other words, Mr. President, the committee has very frankly stated its position in the words of the chairman—

Nothing is clearer than that the Committee on Privileges and Elections is its own judge, and it does not have to follow the law of Iowa and has not done so and has not attempted to do so.

He goes on to say in another part of his speech that he is following a precedent that has long been the custom, and that in looking at the matter from the point of view of intent there is nothing strange about their overriding the law of Iowa.

Mr. President, I have examined this volume, which is the latest printed compilation of Senate election cases. It begins from the beginning and comes down to about 1913. There are some 73 cases considered in the volume which are in relation to the contested right of Senators elected to their seats. I do not find anywhere an instance, except that from Iowa, which has been quoted, where the views of the majority, in their efforts to decide a case, had to be based on something other than the law of the State. I do not find here any precedent for overruling the law.

These cases—as I say, there were some 73 of them—

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator kindly permit me to finish this? These cases show the nature of the questions involved in these contests where the Senate was called upon to discharge its duty under section 5 of Article I of the Constitution, which gives it the right to judge of the election of Senators. I assume that the use of the word "judge" there applies practically to the right to judge and to sit as a court, to judge and see whether the qualifications of the Senator are in accordance with law, whether he has been elected in accordance with law, or whether the voters who elected him had the right to vote for him. In no case do I find that there was any question as to the intent of the voters being made known, or the assertion of any right to override the law of the State.

The questions which have arisen in these 73 cases are such questions as the eligibility of the electors under the laws of the State. The question of bribery and corruption has frequently come up. The question of the personal qualifications of the individual as not conforming to the Constitution or the laws of the United States has come up, and it has been alleged that his qualifications did not entitle him to be a Senator. These matters had to be decided by the Senate, sitting as a judge. The individual's right to vote for himself when he was a member of the State legislature has come up and has been decided by the Senate; whether the legislature which elected him was legally in session. Of course, at the time of the Civil War there were a great many cases that came before the Senate as to whether the legislatures of the Southern States sending Senators here had been properly or legally constituted. All such cases were properly judged by the Senate in accordance with law, but not by overriding the law.

Other questions that have come up are whether the Senator was of sound mind; whether he had been naturalized long enough before his election to qualify; whether the act making him a Senator was in accordance with the law of the State, or whether he was qualified for his election under the State law as well as the national law; whether or not under the statute of Pennsylvania, as in the case of Senator Cameron, the State law had been carried out, or whether the election was procured by corruption or unlawful means; whether the legislature was legally constituted, and so on.

Mr. President, not to tire Senators with a recitation of the facts, examination of the 73 cases shows that it has practically always been the effort of the Senate to judge and see whether the law has been carried out; and it seems to me an amazing contention on the part of the committee that they have a right to disregard the law of Iowa, to overrule it and try to go behind it, and to count the ballots, no matter how illegal they may be.

We have here before us a certificate signed by the Governor of the State of Iowa, countersigned by the secretary of state, a certificate of election of Smith W. Brookhart. There has been nothing brought here to show that there is anything irregular about this certificate; has there, Mr. President? There is no contention but that the governor who signed it is the proper Governor of the State of Iowa, and that the secretary of state who countersigned it is the proper secretary of state. There is no question of fraud, bribery, or corruption. In reply to questions it has been stated that there is no question of intimidation at the polls. It was a fair election. It was carried out in accordance with the laws of the State of Iowa. The officials of the State of Iowa have certified to that fact, and there is nothing here to show that they were wrong.

It is unfortunate, Mr. President, that, owing to circumstances over which he has no control, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has very properly taken the position that he can not participate in this discussion. In fact, the sovereign State of Iowa has no representative on the floor at the present time; and therefore there is no one here to say on behalf of the rights of that State, that the committee, in taking its extraordinary stand, should be overridden, and that that stand is an improper one to take.

I do not desire to take up any more time, Mr. President, except to say this:

In view of the fact that the committee, by its representatives on the floor, by its chairman, and by the Senator who first presented the majority report, has shown a distinct determination on its part to overrule and disregard the laws of the State of Iowa, the committee has not acted properly. Accordingly, Mr. President, I move that the resolution be recommitted.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I do not desire to speak more than 15 minutes on this matter. I feel timid in speaking even so long, because of the familiarity which I lack and which my colleagues have about all of the details of this case; but I want to go on record quite squarely and give my reasons for the vote which I expect to cast.

I think Senators will concede that it is not likely that I am going to vote in favor of Mr. Brookhart because of any political allegiance to him or any enthusiasm for the doctrine which he has advanced, or any belief in his support of the policies of my party. It may be recalled that it was I who introduced in the Republican conference the resolution which prevented Mr. La Follette, Mr. Brookhart, Mr. FRAZIER, and Mr. Ladd from being listed as Republicans in the make-up of the Senate committees. I believe still that that was the wise and proper and deserved action for the Republican conference to take; and in what I am doing in this case I do not mean, even by implication, to seem to retract in any way the action that I took at that time.

But, Mr. President, this is not a political matter. We are sitting in this case as judges, just as surely as the members of the Supreme Court of the United States sit in their chamber across the hall as judges, and we are sworn to decide according to the justice and the right of the case, and not according to our preference for the political beliefs of the contending parties, and not according to the outcome of this contest on the line-up of the Senate or its organization at the opening of the next Congress.

With those matters we have nothing whatsoever to do, any more than the Supreme Court of the United States would have a right to weigh such considerations if Mr. Steck were suing Mr. Brookhart on a promissory note and the case reached the Supreme Court of the United States. We are just as far foreclosed from allowing ourselves to consider the political effect of this case as is the Chief Justice of the United States in such a supposititious lawsuit as that that I have mentioned.

The very Constitution which gives us the power to hold this inquiry reminds us that that is our duty. In Article I, section 5, we find it stated that—

Each House shall be the judge of the elections * * * of its own Members.

"Judge," if you please. That means that the matter shall be determined by us as judges, judicially determined, with that fine quality that men of our race have always shown in excluding from consideration all that touched them personally when they sat judicially to determine a controversy.

As I said before, I am not familiar with all the intimate detail of this case; but sometimes there is an advantage in not seeing each blade of grass in the field. We get a better idea of the lay of the land if our eyes do not pick out for us every blade of grass that grows upon it.

It seems to me that this case must be decided upon two questions—and two alone. The first one is these 1,344 ballots in which the voter put his cross in the party circle at the head of the column and then marked some or all of the names in that column but not the name of Mr. Brookhart; and the committee has exhausted itself in its effort to find out what was the more or less undisclosed intention of the voter who marked his ballot in that fashion.

Mr. President, again I say we must go back to the Constitution to see what our duty is. In section 4 of Article I we find it clearly stated that—

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof—

"The * * * manner of holding elections for Senators * * * shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof."

That means, of course, that the legislature shall determine whether the election shall be secret or open on the hustings. The legislature shall determine whether the vote shall be indicated by some mechanical device, like an election machine, or whether it shall be indicated upon a paper ballot such as we call the Australian ballot; and the legislature, still acting under that grant of power in the Federal Constitution, shall prescribe the manner by which the voter may indicate his will upon this paper that we call the ballot; whether it may be done by marking crosses upon a printed sheet, or whether it may be done by writing a letter to the election officials upon a blank sheet, or in any other method that the legislature may see fit to adopt; and the charter of their authority in passing whatever law they pass is found right there in section 4 of Article I of the Constitution.

It is true that that language is followed by the statement that—

Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

But nobody pretends that Congress has by law attempted to alter the regulations made by the Legislature of Iowa as to the manner of choosing Senators; and so it seems to me that in this search for the intention of the voter we must look for the intention as expressed according to the law of Iowa.

It is a common presumption, binding on us as on every other court, that every man knows the law; and yet, if I correctly interpret the majority opinion of the committee in this case, their presumption is exactly the opposite—that nobody in Iowa knows the law. Section 811 of the Iowa Code, which was in effect on the day of that election, expressly provides, as if some prophet wrote it, that a ballot marked in this fashion shall be counted as a vote for the straight ticket at the head of which the cross occurs in the party circle, where the voter, in addition to the party cross, marks some but not all of the candidates in the party column. That was the law at the moment this election was held. It went into effect a very short time before. The presumption is, and it is binding on us as on all other courts, that every voter in Iowa knew that law, and knew the details of that law, and knew that a ballot thus marked, according to that law, was an expression of his intention to vote for every candidate on the ticket.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if there were any directions or instructions sent out to the inspectors or managers of election to the contrary to the effect, for instance, that where the cross was placed opposite the name the vote was intended for that name, but where it was omitted from some other name, the voter did not intend to vote for that man?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know. I have heard it stated that there were not; but whether there were or not, when the legislature passed that law, section 811, every man, woman, and child in Iowa was conclusively presumed to know what was in it, and we will go far afield if we drop that presumption! It is the settled doctrine of every court in Christendom that in every case the citizen is presumed to know the law.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. May I inquire how long before the election that law became operative?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Nine or ten days, I believe.

Mr. GLASS. Permit me to ask the Senator another question. Suppose a law had been passed by the Legislature of Iowa and approved by the governor and had become effective the day before election. Would there be an absolute presumption that all the people of Iowa would know what the law provided?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It would be a compulsory presumption, even if it were passed 10 minutes before that election began.

Mr. GLASS. But would that presumption fairly indicate what the intention of the voter was, proceeding under a law of which he actually had no knowledge?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am not at all sure that it would not. Presumably the law was debated before it was passed. Presumably some of the people who voted in that election knew what was in the law. Certainly the man who wrote that section of the law knew what was in it, and how do we know that the man who was the author of section 811 was not one of those who cast just such a ballot as that? Yet your committee conclusively presumes that every such voter was ignorant of the law.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Supreme Court of the State of Iowa, previous to the enactment of the law, had held just exactly as the law passed in October provided.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that juncture?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Reading from the Iowa report, page 464, the case of Spurrier against McLennan, the court said:

Section 1120 of the code is in part as follows:

"(1) When a circle is marked, the ballot shall be counted for all the names upon the ticket beneath the circle. The making of a cross in the square of another ticket than the one marked in the circle shall not affect the validity of the ballot, except as to the office for which the person opposite whose name such mark was made is a candidate."

In other words, under the law of Iowa—and it was the law, so announced by the supreme court, on election day—if the voter made a mark in the circle opposite the word "Republican," he intended to vote, I suppose, the straight Republican ticket. If that same voter went down the line and put crosses in the squares opposite the individual names of some on the Republican ticket, the Supreme Court of Iowa says that is a straight Republican vote. If the voter had put a cross in the circle opposite the word "Republican," and had then gone over and put a cross in the square opposite the name of a Democrat, that vote would have counted for the straight Republican ticket, except for the Democrat who was indicated by the cross in the square opposite his name. The Supreme Court of Iowa handed down that decision in 1902, and that was the law on the day of this vote.

Mr. BORAH. From what case was the Senator reading?

Mr. ASHURST. From the case of Spurrier v. McLennan, 115 Iowa, pages 464, et sequitur.

Mr. WILLIS. What was the date of that decision?

Mr. ASHURST. Nineteen hundred and two.

Mr. WILLIS. So, if the Senator will permit me, before paragraph 3 of section 811 was enacted, that was the principle of the Iowa law?

Mr. ASHURST. It was announced by the supreme court of the State to be the law.

Mr. WILLIS. This statute that has been quoted brings in no new principle at all.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will permit me, I ask that as an exhibit there be included in the RECORD to-morrow morning a copy of this Iowa decision, not in the Senator's speech, but as an exhibit to it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Very well; as the Senator does not propose to put it in the middle of my attempted speech.

Mr. ASHURST. No; the Senator's remarks are strong enough without this decision, but some wayfarers may be in doubt as to the law of Iowa, and I want them to read the RECORD in the morning. If I may have permission to include this opinion in the RECORD as an exhibit to the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I will be happy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. [See exhibit to speech of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to call the Senator's attention to the law, in answer to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will not the Senator insert the law later?

Mr. STEPHENS. I just want to call the Senator's attention to this, so that he may know what the law was. He asked about how long this law had been in effect.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I answered that it had been in effect about 10 days. Was not that approximately correct?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is correct; but I simply wanted the Senator to understand that there was no substantial change in the law. I will not take the time now, if the Senator wants to proceed, to read a line or two from the statute that was changed by the statute to which the Senator has referred. I just want to say that in the card of instructions the very first sentence is:

If the voter desires to vote a straight ticket, he can do so by marking a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket.

I shall not take further time of the Senator to read the statute.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, my colleagues have educated me to understand that this not only was the law at the time of the election, but that it had been the law, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, for decades before the election. Whether it was or was not, it was the law that governed the election which was held.

Mr. ASHURST. I regret to interrupt the Senator, but I ought to say, in a case of this kind, that I have not examined to ascertain whether that decision was ever disapproved. We were served in the majority report with a decision that had been disapproved three times by the Supreme Court of Iowa. I want to say to the Senate in good faith that I have not examined to see whether that decision was overruled.

Mr. STEPHENS. It has not been.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Whether the law was passed 10 days or 10 minutes or 10 years before the election does not seem to me to be decisive of the matter. I interpret the language of section 4 of Article I of the Federal Constitution to make it compulsory upon us to look for the intent of the voter expressed according to the manner prescribed by the Iowa Legislature. We do that, and we find that section 811 provides in particular detail for such a ballot as this, and provides that it shall be a vote for every candidate.

Mr. President, in a very large number of the districts in Iowa in which this election was held the vote was cast by voting machines. Many of the votes which were cast in that way must have been cast in this fashion [indicating ballot on chart]. The levers must have been pulled by many voters in those districts just as the paper ballots were marked in these districts, and those machines registered a vote for Senator Brookhart every time the levers were set like that in those machine districts. What are we to do if the position of the majority of the committee is right? Are we to go back and dissect those machines and try to find the intent of the voter who pulled the levers in that fashion; or are we to assume that the percentage of such votes on the machines was the same percentage as of the paper ballots? How are we ever going to find out the intent of the voters of Iowa as long as under the Iowa law those machines were set to register a vote for Senator Brookhart every time the levers were pulled in that way? It seems to me that we are compelled to the conclusion that the manner in which that election was directed to be held by the Iowa law is the only manner in which the voters' intent can be expressed.

Let us suppose that the voter substituted for his printed ballot a sheet of plain paper on which he wrote "I prefer Brookhart to Steck," or vice versa. Nobody could doubt his intent, but nobody claims that that would be counted as a ballot for Steck or for Brookhart, as the case might be. In conceding that, we concede that the manner of voting prescribed by the Iowa Legislature is compulsory.

Why, then, should we deviate from that sound ruling, which is forced on us by the language of the Constitution, and in one particular for which the statute expressly provides; that, despite the Constitution and the clear will of the Iowa Legislature, we will disregard them and look for the secret intent of the voter?

Even if we did disregard the Federal Constitution and the Iowa law and try to figure out for ourselves by some species of induction what the voter thought, I am not satisfied that the voter might not have marked these separate names first, and then reflected an instant and have said to himself, "Well, after all, he is a Republican nominee; I will vote a straight ticket," and go back and put that cross at the top of the column as the last thing he does before he leaves the booth. I am not satisfied but that some voters might have done that, and I am not satisfied but that there were some of those 1,344 who actually knew the terms of clause 3 of section 811. I think the committee does violence not only to the law but to the sound sense of the situation when it says definitely and finally that every one of those men tried to cut Brookhart.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Pennsylvania is talking about a matter that is giving me the most concern; namely, those 1,344 ballots. We have a sample of those ballots before us. The voter made a cross mark at the head of the Republican ticket, which indicated his intention. But he goes further than that, and he puts a cross opposite the names of one or two others, and skips the name of Senator Brookhart, and comes down and votes for the Republican candidate for governor and the Republican candidate for lieutenant governor. The question that disturbs me, and which I want to have the Senator answer, is this: In voting for the other Republican candidates on the ticket, and leaving the square in front of the name of Senator Brookhart blank, does the Senator believe the voter thus skipping the name of Senator Brookhart intended to vote for Brookhart, or does he think that the voter intended not to vote for anybody?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think that many of them intended to vote for Senator Brookhart. I think probably many of them did not. What they actually did was to vote twice for the other candidates and once for Brookhart.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, the Supreme Court decision I have just read says that exactly, that the votes can not be counted twice, of course, but in effect they really voted twice for one candidate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator to take the ballot which is before us, that printed ballot, with a cross in the circle opposite the name "Republican" and a cross in various squares, but no cross opposite Brookhart's name. If that had been a machine vote, and approximately 124,000 of that kind of votes had been cast, would they all have been cast on the machines for Brookhart?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Absolutely; and if the State of Iowa had had machines in every election precinct, it is my understanding that Mr. Brookhart's tally would have been 1,344 more than it was, because the machines would have registered everyone of those votes for Brookhart.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. Directing the Senator's attention to his argument relative to the machine vote, do I understand the Senator to contend that the machine would be set as the voters would mark their ballots?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes. The machine would be set in accordance with section 811 of the code.

Mr. GOFF. To descend to a physical explanation, does not the Senator understand that in going into one of those machines there are only two methods of voting. One is to vote a straight ticket and one is to unlock the machine for every ticket and then descend to the particular ticket on which the voter desires to register his vote, and that under such circumstances a voter even intending to vote as the Senator has so illustrated, could only unlock the machine and then vote for the candidates on the ticket under the party column.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not mean to launch into any discussion of the interlock in a voting machine. What I mean to say is that if the voter who marked that ballot that way had gone in to face the machine and had pulled every lever where he marked a cross on the paper ballot—pulled it as far as it would go—it would have resulted in a vote for Brookhart. He might not have been able to move the lever, but if he had pulled each lever where he marked a cross on the paper ballot, Brookhart would have scored the vote.

Mr. GOFF. Then the Senator means that if a voter could have photographed, so to speak, on the machine physically the intention which he indicated upon the marked ballot, then those machine votes must have been counted as the Senator now contends the paper ballots should be counted.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Absolutely. I do not think we need to make a long statement of it. I say that the lever that is equivalent to the cross at the head of the column could not be moved without voting for Brookhart on the machine.

Mr. DILL and Mr. GEORGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield first to the Senator from Washington, who, I think, rose first.

Mr. DILL. Do I understand that in Iowa these 1,344 votes were counted for Brookhart by the election officials there?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Presumably they were. I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want any confusion about the matter, and I presume the Senator is not confusing in argument, but some of the Senators might not quite understand it. There is no contention being made that any of the machine votes should have been counted for Senator Brookhart that were not so counted? That is not the Senator's position?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not at all.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is simply illustrating?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am illustrating what would have been the result if every precinct had had the machines.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, the Senator will concede, as I understand it, that those 1,344 votes are in fact paper-ballot votes?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly. I think the Senator may not have heard what I said in the beginning.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not understand it. Let me explain this to the Senator, because I think he ought to know it. The machine ballots run horizontally, and not vertically. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes. The party column runs horizontally, and not vertically.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. The machine ballot itself sent out at this election—and I am stating this because it is a fact—had printed on it specific instructions as to how to vote, and it specifically said:

If you wish to vote for the full party ticket, you shall make the cross in the party circle only. If you wish to vote for a portion of the party ticket, but not all of them, you shall make a cross in the circle to designate your party affiliations and then proceed to make a cross in the square opposite each name for whom you wish to vote.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Even if that were so, certainly the author of section 811 knew that those instructions were wrong.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not arguing the point. I am calling attention to it as a fact, because I did not want any confusion about it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the Senator said that the instructions that went out were to the effect that if a voter wanted to vote the party ticket, the only way to vote it was to put a cross in the circle at the top?

Mr. GEORGE. That had reference only to the machine votes.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, I understand now.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think as far as the 1,344 votes go, I have made my position clear. After careful study I think we are absolutely compelled by the language of the Constitution to follow the Iowa law in ascertaining the intent of voters.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. Before leaving the point I want to ask the Senator a question. Conceding that the instructions just alluded to by the Senator from Georgia were invalid, nevertheless would not those instructions tend to indicate under the instruction what was the intent of the voter?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Undoubtedly it would tend to obscure the voter in his understanding of the law, but it would not abolish the presumption that he knew the law, the presumption that controls us.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he is of the opinion, in the event the intention of the voter as indicated on his ballot manifestly conflicts with the statute, that the statute should control instead of the intention of the voter?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do, as long as we are going to give any effect to the language of the Federal Constitution.

I beg Senators to let me finish. If that position is right and these 1,344 votes be counted for Mr. Brookhart, it reduces Steck's plurality to 76 votes. There is one other question which is decisive of so many hundreds of votes that it completely wipes out the 76, and we do not need to bother, if my view is correct, about all the thousand and one questions that affect a few votes here or a few votes there. If the second question be resolved in Mr. Brookhart's favor as well as the first one, then we can neglect all the other questions that have been raised and the contest is over.

The committee found that in many precincts, about 1,072 or 1,073 of them—at least 1,068, and I think there were four or five others, though perhaps the four or five were included in the 1,068, but that does not matter—the number of persons shown on the poll list as voting was different from, and in most cases greater than, the number of ballots found in the boxes. In those 1,068 or 1,070 cases the election officer who kept the poll list, and was supposed to have checked off each voter to whom a ballot was issued, had marked a greater number of persons than the number of good and spoiled ballots that were found by the committee in the returns from that district. The problem that confronted the committee was how to deal with those districts in which there was such a shortage. The first district in which they seem to have acted, at least the first in sequence in the minority report, is a precinct in Madison County known as the first ward of Winterset. They found there that the poll book or poll list showed that 946 voters had received the ballots, and yet in the official returns the ballots did not total 946, but only 748. The ballots were supposed to be wired together and the wire closed with sealing wax and then put in an envelope and sealed up. That is the shape in which those ballots were received by the county auditor, who was their custodian. The committee was confronted with the problem, What are we going to figure out for that district? After a good deal of consideration they seem to have reached the conclusion that in such a case obviously there had been tampering with the ballots; obviously nobody could know except by the election officers' return what those missing ballots had said, and for whom they were voted. There was nothing they could do but take the official certificate made by the election officials the night of the election. That is the only evidence they could have of the intent of the voters who cast those 946 ballots, and no other method, short of subpoenaing each of them to testify, would disclose the will of those 946 voters.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator tell me whether the ballot in Iowa has a stub?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A detachable stub?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know.

Mr. GEORGE. No; it has not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no method of checking up between the stubs and the ballots?

Mr. GEORGE. None whatever. The ballots are not numbered and the names on the poll list are not identified by the ballots.

I am sure the Senator has heard what I said before, but I would like to repeat it. He said the committee at considerable difficulty went back to the official count in this precinct. The committee did not know anything about it until the argument of the case was on. Mr. Brookhart's representative agreed to count it in that particular way, and Mr. Steck's counsel agreed to do it in that particular way.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, some of us over on this side of the Chamber would like to hear what is going on between the two Senators.

Mr. GEORGE. With reference to the 198 ballots short in one precinct I shall be glad to make the statement so as to be heard. When that particular package of ballots left Iowa, not when it reached here, but when it left Iowa, it was unsealed. The wiring of the ballots and the unsealed condition of the package and the fact that about one-fourth less ballots were found in the bags than the number of names appearing on the poll list was considered as a reason at least why Mr. Cook, the manager for Mr. Brookhart, and Mr. Pendy, the manager for Mr. Steck, should themselves deal with this particular batch of ballots. The committee did not know a thing about it. They simply reported that to us in the course of the argument.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Do not the hearings show that while that was the opinion, Mr. Brookhart's representative did submit the precinct to the committee for decision, and does it not so show on the work sheet?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no. The work sheets were made up by the representatives, not by the committee.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in my view of this case, Mr. Brookhart could not waive that principle in the district. Nothing that he could do here before the committee of the Senate could operate to nullify or negative the will of those 198 voters whose ballots had disappeared. What a principle that would be to set up, because one lawyer was more alert than the other, because one contestant or the other was not aware of all the facts at the moment, or because of some more sinister motive! What a situation we prepare for ourselves when we say that the will of the voters of a sovereign State can be set aside by the agreement or the tacit waiver, if you please, of one individual here in Washington!

I say that if Mr. Brookhart came in here and admitted the contrary of this proposition we ought to pay no attention to his admission. If some day in the future an election contest comes here with just a few votes hanging in the balance, who is to say that a contestant of great wealth might not so tempt his adversary as to make his yielding, his waiver, his stipulation so attractive to him that he could not resist it? Is the Government of the United States to be controlled by the waivers of single persons after the citizens of a whole State have spoken? Even if Mr. Brookhart tried to waive this rule which I am endeavoring to state, I would not pay any attention to his waiver.

Now, then, let us see what the committee did. They did exactly right in that district. In the first ward of Winterset, in Madison County, they looked to the official return, which is prima facie right, and they adhered to that return because it was not upset by competent evidence. But then, when they reached Guthrie County and Bear Grove Township, they find there that the poll books show 256, while the ballots numbered only 236; they reversed their ruling in the Winterset case, disregarded the official count, counted the 236 ballots, and defied the will of the missing 20; they ignored them completely. Their justification for that, as I have understood the case, appears to be some sort of a waiver by Mr. Brookhart or his counsel.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If that is not the justification, then I have not heard any justification for their blowing hot in one case and blowing cold in the other.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will not the Senator let me finish and then demolish my argument? I had rather have it demolished at one blow than picked to pieces as it proceeds.

We come to Emmet County, Estherville Township, the second ward of Estherville, where there were 20 less ballots than the names appearing on the poll books and the official count, and the committee again forgets its ruling in Winterset, counts the ballots, and the 20 men who cast the missing ballots might just as well not have gone to the polls.

Again we come to Wapello County, and 22 ballots were short. The committee disregarded the official count and the official return, although it was prima facie right and was not upset by competent evidence. They did the same thing in Lee County.

Mr. President, I do not know the names of the other 1,068 precincts, but it was found when the vote was all checked up that there were 3,500 missing ballots in the 1,068 precincts. How can we disregard the intention of those 3,500 voters, disfranchise them from this election, and say Steck was elected by 76 votes? What business have we to overcome the presumption that the "official return" is correct without any competent evidence to the contrary?

We have no evidence as to what those 3,500 ballots were except the official return of the election officials, and yet, although that is the only evidence to guide us, it is proposed to disregard them entirely and say they were voted exactly evenly for Steck and Brookhart. That, in substance, is what it is proposed to do. It is proposed to throw out the 3,500 missing ballots from consideration, and the committee would have us seat Steck by 76 votes. I say it can not be done. That is my second reason.

I say that those 3,500 votes may, and in all likelihood did, overcome the lead of 76 that Steck had. Senators may ask me why I say "in all likelihood." The evidence in this case is that the Republican State committee of Iowa appealed to the voters of the Republican Party to vote against Mr. Brookhart. That means that men active in Republican politics in Iowa were generally opposed to Brookhart's election. Most of the election officers, the county officers, the men active in politics, sided with the Republican State central committee. Wherever ballots came here unsealed, unprotected, so that any partisan could pull a few off the wire, the chances are, if there were any fraud, it was fraud to Brookhart's prejudice.

I want to state clearly that I think the Republican State central committee was right in its action. Mr. Brookhart had opposed the platform and the nominees of his party, and, I think, he did not deserve to be voted for as a Republican. I can fully understand the spirit that animated those men; and

I sympathize with it; but I am here as a judge, and I have no business to sympathize with it here. I must admit that where ballots are short the chances are that if there were dishonesty it was dishonesty to Brookhart's prejudice. That is why I say that we can not assume that those 3,500 votes can be disregarded.

To sum up, in the first place, these 1,344 votes marked like the sample ballot which is hanging on the wall of the Chamber must be counted for Brookhart, unless we shall disregard the Federal Constitution and the law passed under it by the State of Iowa; and the 3,500 missing votes must, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be taken to have been voted according to the official returns—and there is no proof to the contrary—and that far more than overcomes Steck's supposed lead of 76 votes.

EXHIBIT A

John E. Spurrier, appellant, v. Alex. McLennan

Election contests: Residence of voter. That a voter had visited Oklahoma, contemplating possibly his residence there, and that he liked it, and had determined to go there in the future, did not lose him his rights as a citizen of the State, so as to disqualify him as an elector.

Marking of ballots: Code, section 1120, relative to elections, declares that when a circle on a ballot is marked the ballot shall be counted for all the names on the ticket beneath the circle, and that the making of a cross in the square of another ticket than the one marked in the circle shall not effect the validity of the ballot, except as to the office for which the person opposite whose name such mark was made is a candidate, and as to such office the vote shall not be counted. On a ballot sheet appeared two tickets of two parties, neither of which contained county tickets. Several of the tickets were marked in the circle, and a mark was also placed in the square opposite the name of the candidate for a certain county office on another ticket. Held, that it was proper to count the ballots for the one opposite whose name a square was placed, since the statute makes the cross in the circle effective as a vote for the names printed on the ticket below it, and nothing more, and the only votes for the county office were those indicated by the cross in the square.

Same: Code, section 1120, enacts that when a circle is marked the ballot shall be counted for all the names on the ticket beneath the circle, and that the making of a cross in another ticket than the one marked in the circle shall not affect the validity of the ballot, except as to the votes for which the person opposite whose name such mark was made is a candidate, and that as to that office the vote shall not be counted. On an election contest it appeared that a number of tickets on which the name of incumbent was printed were marked in the circle with a cross and a cross likewise put in the square before each name except that of incumbent, and a cross was placed in the square opposite contestant's name on another ticket. Held, that it was proper to refuse to count such ballot for contestant, a cross in the circle conclusively meaning a vote for the whole ticket below it, and the marking of the square before a name on another ticket having no other effect than to nullify the vote for the office doubly voted for.

Same: The marking by an elector of the squares opposite the names of candidates on a ballot, he having also marked the circle at the top of such ticket, does not add to the effect of the mark in the circle nor detract from it, the ballot being a vote for all candidates under the circle.

Same: Where on an election contest a ballot is objected to because of a line drawn partially across it, but it is shown to have been done by the judges of election when making the count, the objection is properly overruled.

Evidence—General objection of hearsay: Where on an election contest the testimony of a witness was generally objected to as hearsay, but part of his testimony was plainly not hearsay, the objection was properly overruled.

Appeal and cross appeal—Election contests: On an election contest, the judgment of the court having fixed the number of votes the incumbent had received, he might appeal from the holding, if not satisfied, and the appeal would bring up all rulings on the reception and rejection of the ballots affecting the total, and the incumbent may maintain a cross appeal.

Is not tried de novo: On an appeal from the holding of the court on an election contest, the supreme court does not try the case de novo, but considers only the errors assigned by appellant.

Findings as to marking ballots—Review on appeal: Where on an election contest the court holds that a cross in the square opposite a blank on a ticket not filled by the insertion of a name is not an identifying mark authorizing the rejection of a ballot, the holding is a finding of fact and not reviewable on appeal, except for insufficiency of evidence to sustain it.

APPEAL FROM IOWA DISTRICT COURT—HON. M. J. WADE, JUDGE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1902.

This is a contest over the right to hold the office of clerk of the district court in and for Iowa County, each party claiming to have been elected thereto. The board of supervisors declared defendant to have been elected. In a proceeding before a court of contest plaintiff's case was dismissed. On his appeal to the district court trial was had on the merits, and defendant was found to have been elected by a majority of five votes. From such finding this appeal is taken.

Affirmed.

J. T. Beem and Thomas Stapleton for appellant.

Hedges & Rumble for appellee.

Waterman, J.: Defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's appeal for want of jurisdiction in the court of contest, and also in the district court, will be overruled. In view of the conclusion reached on the merits of the case, we need not take the time or space necessary to set out our reasons for this action. Defendant also took an appeal from the finding of the district court on two grounds: (1) As to its holding that it had jurisdiction; (2) as to rulings on the reception and rejection of certain ballots. There is a motion to dismiss this cross appeal. What we have already said indicates that such appeal is not sustainable on the first ground. As to the second ground, it is admitted by contestant that all such rulings may be considered on plaintiff's appeal.

Inasmuch as defendant's abstract may properly be taken and accepted by us as an amendment to that of appellant, it makes no difference whether we consider the matters on one appeal or another, so long as we may consider them at all. We might therefore pass the motion without a ruling. But we think it is not well taken. The judgment of the trial court fixed the number of votes defendant had received. If not satisfied with this holding he could appeal from it, and his appeal would, of course, bring up all rulings which affected this total. We do not understand that on an appeal this court tries a case of this kind de novo; but, rather, that we consider only the errors assigned by the appellant.

I. It is claimed that one Nettifee, who voted at the election, was not a qualified voter, for that he was not a citizen of Iowa at the time. He was asked by counsel for contestant for whom he voted for clerk of the district court, and, upon objection, the trial court ruled that he need not answer, a sufficient foundation not having been laid. All that has been shown was that Nettifee had previously gone to Oklahoma, with the intention of looking at the country, as a possible place of residence; that he liked it, and had determined some time in the future to remove there. This did not make him a citizen of Oklahoma, nor lose him his rights as a citizen of Iowa.

II. There was a motion by contestant to strike the testimony of D. O. Jones, one of the election judges, on the ground that it was hearsay. This was overruled, and complaint is made of this action of the court. The witness was explaining marks on certain ballots, and attempting to show they were made by the judges of election in counting the same. Whatever may be said as to certain parts of his evidence, his statement with relation to Exhibit 69, "I am pretty positive those marks were not on there before they (the ballots) were taken from the box," followed by his assertion as to Exhibit 68, "It was the same as the others," was not hearsay; and as the motion went to all of his testimony it was properly overruled.

III. Upon the ballot sheet appeared tickets of the Prohibition and Socialist Labor Parties. Neither of these contained county tickets. Several of these tickets were marked in the circle, and a mark also placed in the square opposite the name of incumbent on the Republican ticket. These ballots were counted for the incumbent, and this action of the canvassing board was sustained by the district court. Section 1120 of the code is in part as follows: "(1) When a circle is marked, the ballot shall be counted for all the names upon the ticket beneath the circle. The making of a cross in the square of another ticket than the one marked in the circle shall not affect the validity of the ballot, except as to the office for which the person opposite whose name such mark was made is a candidate, and as to such office the vote shall not be counted." This section, we think, makes the cross in the circle effective as a vote for all names printed upon the ticket below it, but for nothing more. Such a cross can not indicate a vote for an office that is left blank upon that ticket. If these tickets had contained the name of the nominee for the office of clerk of the district court, and the voters, after marking the circle, had put a cross in the square preceding the name of incumbent on the Republican ticket, they would have voted for two candidates for an office to which but one could be elected, and for such officer their votes could not be counted. But this reason does not apply in such a case as that now before us. The crosses in the circle were not votes for clerk of the district court, because the name of no candidate for that place appeared below them. The only votes for such officer were those indicated by the crosses in the square before the incumbent's name, and we think they were rightly counted for him.

IV. Nineteen ballots were rejected on which contestant had been voted for, because of identifying marks, which consisted in some cases of a cross opposite the name of the presidential candidate, and in some of a cross also opposite the name of the candidate for Vice President, the ticket being otherwise correctly marked. It is said these crosses could not be used for or considered as identifying marks. In Voorhees v. Arnold (108 Iowa 77) we held that a cross in a square opposite a blank space on a ticket which had not been filled by the insertion of a name was an identifying mark which demanded the rejection of the ballot. That holding seems decisive of the present contention. But that case goes farther. It holds the question to be one of fact for the trial court, whether an unauthorized mark on the ballot was intended as an identifying mark. The trial court in this case found these crosses were intended as identifying marks, and held against the validity of the ballots under consideration. Following the decision in the Voorhees case, we must say that no sufficient ground is shown to warrant our interfering with that finding. (See, also, Morrison v. Pepperman, 112 Iowa 471.)

V. A number of Republican tickets, upon which the name of incumbent was printed, were marked in the circle with a cross, and a cross likewise put in the square before each name thereon except that of incumbent; the square before his name was left blank, and a cross placed in the square preceding contestant's name on the Democratic ticket. These ballots the district court refused to count for contestant. What is said in the third division of this opinion applies here. A cross in the circle conclusively means a vote for the whole ticket printed below it, and marking the square before a name on another ticket has no effect other than to nullify the vote for the officer thus doubly voted for. This rule is in no wise altered by the marking of the squares below the marked circle also. The statute providing for the effect to be given a cross in the circle makes no exception of such a case. Whittam v. Zaborik (91 Iowa 23) was decided under the old law, which, in relation to the marking of ballots by voters, was materially different in certain respects from the present statute; but something said therein we deem applicable to this case. Robinson, J., who delivered the opinion, says in the second division thereof: "It is said there is no authority for making a cross in the circle and also in the squares of the same ticket, as was done in the second, third, and fourth illustrations we have given. We think it is clear the statute does not contemplate that plan of voting. . . . Hence, when a voter has marked his ticket by placing a cross in the circle opposite the title, he does not add to the legal effect of that marking by placing crosses in squares opposite the names of candidates on the same ticket." This we think, is true under the present statute. And we may say, further, that crosses in the squares under such circumstances not only do not add to the effect of the mark in the circle, but they do not detract from it—they have no consequence whatever, except in the case of a name written in, and that is specially provided for in section 1119, code. The court's ruling on these votes was correct.

VI. Exhibit No. 68 was objected to because of a line drawn partially across it; but, as this is shown to have been done by the judges of election when making the count, the objection was properly overruled.

VII. A great many ballots are grouped and objected to as bearing identifying marks. Nothing is said in argument by appellant on this branch of the case, beyond making the charge. We, therefore, deem it sufficient to say we discover no error in the ruling of the district court in relation to any of these ballots.

We need not consider the cross appeal. Our conclusion leaves incumbent with a majority in the count. This gives him the office in controversy, and with this he will, doubtless, be content.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed. (Spurrer v. McLennan, 115 Iowa Repts. 461-467.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I did not intend to address the Senate at this time; but, if no other Senator desires to proceed now, I shall be glad to do so.

I had asked that a blackboard be brought into the Chamber for the purpose of tabulating exactly what the committee did in this case.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS], on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I greatly regret that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has left the Chamber, because I wished him to remain in the Chamber.

I forbear to discuss his remarks in his absence. But now, Mr. President, I want to make what I did not at this time expect to make, a statement in this case, and in the outset I desire to say that I am not prosecuting Mr. Steck nor defending Mr. Steck; neither am I prosecuting Mr. Brookhart nor defending Mr. Brookhart. Those functions do not belong to me as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

As a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and as a Member of the Senate it is my duty to consider the case fairly, justly, and dispassionately, and to arrive, if I can, at the vote of the electorate in the State of Iowa as reflected in the election of November 4, 1924.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said, and a great deal will be said, about the voter being the real party at interest. So he is. The candidate for election is also the real party at interest; and it is a universal principle of law, one that grows out of necessity—not a matter of technical law, but one springing out of necessity—that when a large and numerous class of people are interested in any matter they are represented by and necessarily bound by anyone who has a right to represent the whole class.

Take, for instance, the case of elections. It has been many, many times held that when a voter having the right to raise the question of a fair election has in fact attacked the election as being fraudulent, thereafter another voter having precisely the same right can not raise the same question. An adjudication of the case is binding upon all parties interested in that case, subject, of course, to the general rule that the party to the case had the right to make all of the questions that were made or that might have been raised in the case, and subject to the further general qualification that the merits of the case were in fact taken into consideration.

So, Mr. President, when we speak of the people of Iowa being interested in this election let us remember that according to the official count 446,000 votes and over were cast for Mr. Steck and but a little more than 447,000 votes were cast, according to the official count, for Mr. Brookhart; so Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart represent respectively the voters of the State of Iowa; and though it does not seem to make the same appeal to many Senators in this body, it is quite as immoral to take the election from the one man as it is to take it from the other man.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Not now. When I finish my statement I will yield.

It does not seem to make any difference with some of the Senators, because they hold up their hands in holy horror and assert that we are about to upset a vote which from the beginning and according to all counts was practically an evenly divided vote. But, Mr. President, as I conceive it—certainly that is the way that I approach my own responsibility in the case—it would be just as wrong and just as immoral for me to deny Steck a seat in the Senate if he was elected by one vote, and one vote only, as it would be if I should deny Senator Brookhart a seat in the Senate if he was in fact elected by one vote, and one vote only.

What are the facts in the case? I am not going to talk about stipulations and written agreements. I am going to talk about the facts in the case.

On July 20, 1925, the committee of the Senate, or a subcommittee of a standing committee of the Senate, came to Washington, came to the Senate Office Building, and there we found Mr. Steck's counsel, Mr. Parsons; and there we found Mr. Brookhart's counsel, Mr. Mitchell; and there we found two other men; Mr. Pendy presented to your committee as the representative of Mr. Steck for the purpose of a recount of the ballots cast in the election of November 4, 1924, and Mr. Cook, the representative of Mr. Brookhart, who had been the campaign manager of Mr. Brookhart in the election of 1924, a man of generally good or even superior capacity. In the Senate Office Building in this city we were asked to do what? To count a large number of ballots contained in a large number of mail pouches.

It does not make any difference how those ballots came down to Washington. It is not a matter of concern how they came, or who brought them. Brookhart's lawyer said: "Here are the ballots, and I ask you to recount these ballots." Steck's lawyer said: "Here are the ballots, and I ask you to recount those ballots." There had not been a mail sack opened. If the ballots did not in fact come from the proper officers in Iowa, if they had not in fact been properly preserved, we could have sent to Iowa, brought on here every auditor and every election manager, and could have taken testimony about those ballots. We could have put the witnesses on the stand and could have shown all that the facts would have disclosed about those ballots. But they were here. We were advised that they were here. We were carried to the ballots themselves by Brookhart's lawyer, counsel of record in this case, by Brookhart's political campaign manager and his personally selected representative to supervise the counting of those ballots.

Did they not have the right to do that? Were they waiving anything but what we might have been able to show if we had been allowed or if we had elected to call the witnesses? The fact is beyond all dispute that the ballots which we then had, and which they then asked to be recounted, were taken in charge by us.

How did we actually proceed? Here is a table, Mr. President, in a room in the Senate Office Building. On one side of that table is seated Mr. Pendy, selected by Mr. Steck but appointed by your committee, to represent him in the counting out of those ballots. On the other side of the same table is seated Mr. Cook, selected by Mr. Brookhart but appointed by your committee, or rather confirmed by your committee, to represent Mr. Brookhart in the counting out of those ballots. At the head of this table is seated the present Secretary of the Senate, who was selected by your committee as the chief supervisor. Then at the other end of the table is the official tabulator, the gentleman who sits by my side now, Mr. Turner, who was to take the votes from the hands of Cook and from the hands of Pendy when each one of them had put his O. K., his approval, upon the votes that were agreed as good votes. Mr. Turner then commenced his tabulation.

Is Mr. Brookhart not to be able to waive the preliminary proof that the ballots had been properly preserved, had come to us from the auditors out in Iowa, had come to us in those sealed mail sacks, with a rotary lock on each showing that there had been no unlocking and relocking from the time it left Iowa until we were then examining it in the Senate Office Building? Could he not dispense with that? Why, Mr. President, in the brief submitted by Mr. Mitchell himself in this case he says, quoting from a decision of the State of Iowa, that this preliminary proof that the ballots were the identical ballots cast in the election, safely and securely preserved from that moment down to the time that they were handed to us for recounting, must be made by the party challenging an official return unless waived. At this time I will not stop to refer to the specific decision; but it is cited by Senator Brookhart's own counsel in this case, and it undoubtedly is the law. (De Long v. Brown, 113 Iowa, 370, p. 25 Mitchell's Brief.)

So, Mr. President, we go back to this table in the Senate Office Building, and the first mail sack is opened, and out of that mail sack is taken the first batch of ballots. Then these three supervisors proceed to examine, in turn or jointly, each ballot taken out of that particular sack or container; and each one of the supervisors, Cook and Pendy and the chief supervisor, Colonel Thayer, approve that ballot if they deem it to be a good ballot, either for Steck or for Brookhart. If it is a questionable ballot it is contested by the one or the other, and is still initialed by all of the representatives and all of the officials, acting for and under the direct supervision of your committee.

At the conclusion of the count of the first batch of ballots taken out of the first container it was discovered that there were not quite as many ballots by two or more in that particular container as appeared on the poll list. The matter was then brought to the direct attention of all of the supervisors and passed over as a matter of no consequence. Whether it was a matter of consequence I shall discuss later, but I am now detailing merely what occurred.

When the ballots out of that particular package had been counted and it was found, for instance, that 300 of them were good ballots for Steck and 350 were good ballots for Brookhart those ballots were bundled back and disposed of; but if it were found, for instance, that 50 ballots claimed for Steck were challenged by Brookhart, and 50 ballots claimed for Brookhart were challenged by Steck, then those challenged ballots were placed in a separate mail bag, kept under lock and key, and augmented from time to time as challenged ballots were taken out of the various precincts recounted.

Mr. President, look at the facts as they were. When we came here and found the ballots which had in fact come here in response to our subpoena, it was then possible for us to call witnesses from the State of Iowa and prove how those ballots had been kept; the fact that they had never been opened; the fact that they had never been tampered with. But when Brookhart, by his personal representative or by his counsel, and when Steck, by his personal representative and by his counsel, waived such proof and asked us to count the ballots, and we accepted them at their word, and they themselves engaged in the count, they made it forever impossible for the Senate to restore those ballots to the exact condition they occupied when they were brought here to us, or when we found them over there in the Senate Office Building.

For instance, when one of the sacks was opened, it was found that the container was not sealed, in that the sealing wax which had been dropped on the knot which tied the sack together had been broken and had crumbled away. But they did not raise a question about it. They merely noted on each work sheet, "Package sealed" or "Package unsealed." They did not raise any question about it. Had they raised a question about it, your committee could and would have sent out into Iowa, where that package was sealed, and brought the witnesses here, and asked them to detail all the facts. We could have brought and would have brought the county auditors and any other witness who knew any material facts with reference to the sealing of that package.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. Not at this time. We would have brought witnesses who could have testified with respect to the preservation of those ballots and with respect to the manner in which those ballots had been kept; but they did not raise the question that the ballots could not be counted, because the packages were unsealed. Can responsible men say that in those circumstances, when it has passed entirely out of our power to restore those ballots to the condition they occupied when we came to consider this case, we are not to bind Brookhart by not only the thing he participated in, not only the thing he invited, but the thing that his own personal representative did?

Mr. Cook went into this alleged unsealed package, and he counted out of that unsealed package, let us say, 500 votes that he said were good votes for Brookhart. He placed those over before this tabulator here and said, "Give me credit for those votes." He was given credit for those votes, in sealed and unsealed packages, in precincts where there was an exact tally between the number of ballots and the number on the poll books, and in precincts where there was a variance between the number of ballots and the number on the poll books.

He claimed them, he asserted his right to them, and day after day, not in December and January when the full committee was meeting here, but day after day in July and in August, 1925, he was having added to the unprotested Brookhart vote every good vote taken from every package that we found over here in the Senate Office Building.

Mr. President, not only did he claim the good votes—that is, the uncontested votes—but he took out of every package, whether sealed or unsealed, whether there was a disparity between the number of ballots and the names on the poll books or whether these two factors exactly balanced, without a single exception, every vote that he claimed and Steck challenged, and he challenged every vote that Steck claimed which he desired to challenge on any ground that appeared to afford a valid basis of challenge.

It is physically impossible for any man living to go and find those ballots that were contested and claimed by Brookhart, taken from all of these packages of votes, and place them back as they were. It is physically impossible for Steck to have the right, as he had in the first instance to do, to call witnesses to testify concerning the manner in which those various packages of ballots had been kept, whether they had in fact been tampered with, and whether in fact there had been any possible opportunity to tamper with them.

It is a law as old as morality itself, it is neither technical nor statutory, that no man shall be allowed to mislead another to his injury, whether he is acting for himself alone or whether he is the representative of a class. No man can by his conduct invite another man to take a step which will forever preclude the other man from replacing himself in his favored position and then take advantage of his conduct.

We are not invoking any written stipulation. We are not invoking any written agreement. We are invoking the facts, and nothing but the facts, the ballots over here in the Senate Office Building, the table with the representatives of these parties at interest sitting around it, and exactly and precisely what they did, and nothing but what they did.

Mr. President, let me stop here to call attention to what was said, not in December, 1925, not in January, 1926, but in July, 1925. We are back in this room in the Senate Office Building. The chairman of the committee (Senator EARNST, Senator Spencer having died) said this:

As acting chairman of the committee, I do not intend for one moment to pass on those questions which will have to be acted on by the entire committee. After the count is completed—

Speaking here now to Mr. Brookhart's lawyer, Mr. Brookhart's personally selected representative, and the representatives of Mr. Steck, and speaking also in the presence of the counters who had been selected by your committee to do the work for your committee:

After the count is completed, and there have been set aside for final determination all of the contested ballots which either side thinks should be set aside, then a meeting of the full committee will be called and counsel will be heard.

Then followed some discussion as to how long it would take us to count these ballots. A reference was made to the length of time required in the Texas contest, and a comparison of the total number of ballots involved in the Texas contest with the number of ballots involved in the Iowa contest was adverted to by Colonel Thayer. Senator EARNST, the chairman of the committee, said:

How many (ballots) were there in the Texas contest?

Mr. THAYER. There were 340,000; but there were more complications arising in that contest. This is just a straight count.

That was said at the table, with Brookhart's lawyer and Steck's lawyer and Brookhart's representative and Steck's representative and your committee there.

This is just a straight count.

In this the chairman of the committee concurred, with this language:

I take it that all of you want the count expedited just as much as possible. Is not that the desire?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, Senator.

Mr. PARSONS. Certainly.

Then followed other record evidence at this meeting back in July, 1925. We then went down into the counting room, a room large enough to contain all of the counters, and the chairman, Mr. EARNST, duly administered to all of these officials an oath of office, and they proceeded with this recount.

Mr. President, these ballots were not separated into ballots taken from particular precincts, but the ballots were separated according to the class of the ballots themselves. In other words, when a good ballot was found for Steck or for Brookhart, it mattered not from what precinct that ballot was taken, it mattered not from what county that ballot was taken, it was simply added into the total of good votes. We thus proceeded step by step, and counted out all of the votes agreed upon by Steck's representatives and Brookhart's representatives. Whenever they disagreed on any ballot for any reason, that ballot was set aside. The tabulator did not take it into consideration. He merely noted the disagreement, the ground of the protest, and the ballot itself was placed in a general batch of contested ballots.

Let me go back just for the sake of bringing up what otherwise is not, however, in dispute, a class of ballots that were not in fact sent down here. Fortunately there are no questions raised about those ballots. I refer to the machine ballots. Senators will understand that in a machine-voting county all of the precincts in the county may have voting machines except one.

There may be one precinct in the county where the paper ballot is used, but machines were used in all other precincts. The fact is that Mr. Brookhart's representative and Mr. Steck's representative and Colonel Thayer went out to Iowa and read those machines. Fortunately there is no question arising here about the correctness of their reading of the machines. They brought back to Washington, and had here on the morning when we met to count the paper ballots, the tabulation made from the machines. They brought the total vote as recorded by each machine for Senator Brookhart. They brought the total vote as recorded by each machine for Mr. Steck. They did not bring the total number of votes cast at the machine precincts. In other words, they did not bring the total number of ballots found; indeed they could not well do so when we consider the character of machine voting; but they did not deem it of importance, because they did not take the official register on the machine itself showing how many votes were cast upon that machine. They brought simply the total vote of Mr. Steck and the total vote of Senator Brookhart, and along with those votes there came in from all of the auditors also one set of the poll books from the State of Iowa.

Mr. President, your committee simply turned over this approved vote, taken from the machine, to the committee's tabulator. The counters for Messrs. Steck and Brookhart and the Senate counters themselves, and the supervisors representing both parties at interest and the Senate itself, turned over to the tabulator every good vote, recognized and conceded to be a good vote, for either Steck or Brookhart to go into the total of uncontested votes for each candidate.

There were two other candidates for Senator in this election in Iowa. We were not concerned with votes for these other candidates. They were not here contesting. We were not concerned with them. We were merely taking the Brookhart votes and the Steck votes, and we tabulated not one vote that was not conceded to be a good vote.

Mr. President, we could not take a record that would reflect the acts and doings of from 40 to 60 counters, 3 supervisors, an official tabulator, and the members of the committee; but may I say that from the 20th of July, and for several days, one of your committee remained here while this work was progressing? We wished to know that the work proceeded fairly. We wished to know that the questions that might arise might be properly and carefully preserved. The work went on through the remainder of July and until the very last day of August, when every ballot had been counted and all of the ballots, except 8,000 plus, had been agreed to as good votes for either Steck or Brookhart or no vote for either one of them. The 8,000 votes were in several sacks—because it took more than one sack to hold them—taken from all the precincts in Iowa, and the ballots confused, because not a question had been deemed as having raised any issue that would require the committee to do anything more than go through the contested ballots and say to whom they belonged.

Mr. President, I want to have placed on the blackboard which stands here in the Senate Chamber exactly what your committee found. I want to invite the attention of the Senate to it as the correct evidence. I am going to ask the official tabulator, Mr. Turner, to enter in columns on the board the conclusions reached by the committee. I now ask that there be tabulated on the board the ballots that were conceded by Mr. Steck as being good votes for Mr. Brookhart, and the ballots that were conceded by Mr. Brookhart as good votes for Mr. Steck.

While the tabulator is transcribing the figures from the official record in the case I want to say that the first class of ballots are the machine votes taken out in Iowa. The next class of ballots, as I now recollect it, are the straight votes for both Mr. Brookhart and Mr. Steck—that is, the straight party votes. The third class of ballots are those good votes for both parties which were not straight party votes, but which were found upon tickets that we called mixed tickets. I will ask the tabulator, Mr. Turner, to place the three classes of votes that make up the totals and to also place on the board the number of contested votes of each of the parties.

While those figures are being placed on the board, I want to say that until this hour there has never been a question but what every vote agreed to as a good Brookhart vote was, in fact, a good Brookhart vote. There has never been a question raised until this hour but what every vote that was agreed to as a good vote—on the face of it, I mean—for Mr. Steck was, in fact, a good vote for Mr. Steck. Of course, I am not overlooking the fact that now a question is raised of a disparity between the actual number of ballots re-counted by us and the number of names appearing upon the poll books. But there has not yet been a question made but what every vote claimed as a good vote and agreed to as a good vote for Brookhart were, in fact, good votes for Brookhart; nor is there yet a question made but that every vote claimed and conceded as a good vote for Steck is, in fact, a good vote for Steck. Those ballots, with one county missing that were sent back to Iowa under express agreement with Mr. Mitchell himself and a record of which we have, are yet over in the Senate Office Building, and any Senator who questions the correctness of any count made by your committee or accepted by your committee at the hands of its sworn representatives or agents, and under the agreement of the representatives and agents of the respective contestants in this case, may raise the question, and the ballots themselves can be brought here and examined, and it will be found that all ballots conceded as good votes were, in fact, good votes.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. Might I ask in reference to page 13 of the committee report? It is stated there:

Not considered, 42 votes for Brookhart, 7 votes for Steck.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will get to that question in the course of what I shall say.

Mr. HOWELL. I thought, in view of the Senator's statement that every vote that was held to be good had been counted, that this was important.

Mr. GEORGE. I repeat the statement. Every vote that was conceded to be good was and is in fact a good vote, not by virtue of any stipulation, not by virtue of any waiver, but by virtue of a fair agreement honorably made by honorable men on the facts as they appeared upon the faces of the ballots themselves. Those ballots are in the possession of the Senate, and while Senators can not put them back into the precincts from which they came because of Mr. Cook's acts in this case, the totals are over there and they can be examined and they can be counted. No reflection is intended by reference to Mr. Cook's acts. His acts were, in fact, proper.

Mr. President, the agreed votes, agreed as good votes for Steck, are as follows: Machine ballots, 125,756; straight—that is to say, straight Democratic ballots—agreed as good votes, 75,702; scratched tickets, but agreed as good votes for Mr. Steck, 246,486; total 447,944 votes.

Now, let us go over into the Brookhart column. Conceded to be good machine votes for Mr. Brookhart, 122,930; conceded to be good straight Republican votes for Mr. Brookhart, 120,720; conceded to be good votes for Mr. Brookhart, but appearing upon scratched ballots 200,167; a total of 443,817.

Challenged ballots claimed by Mr. Steck and challenged by Mr. Brookhart upon one ground or another, total 2,268.

Challenged ballots claimed by Mr. Brookhart and challenged by Mr. Steck upon one ground or another, 6,453—there being a double challenge in fact in many instances, if not in every instance, because the same challenge was leveled by Brookhart at a Steck vote and by Steck at a Brookhart vote. They varied merely in that one claimed a larger number of votes in a particular class of ballot.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wanted to have it made clear if it is a fact that those challenged votes there were ballots in addition to the totals above enumerated?

Mr. GEORGE. Absolutely; they were votes in addition; they were votes that Mr. Brookhart's counsel and Mr. Steck's counsel both told us were challenged votes. They were taken from every precinct in Iowa. Over 4,000 of the 6,400 claimed by Brookhart were taken out of precincts in which there is now said to be a disparity between the total number of ballots and the names on the poll books, and yet Brookhart claims them; he now insists that they are his votes; and the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] took out 1,344 of them, every one of which might have come from a precinct in which there was a disparity between the actual ballots and the names on the poll books, and he wants them counted for Brookhart.

Has it come to a pass that in the Senate of the United States a man may have his cake and eat it, too? Has it come to a pass that a man may solemnly challenge a whole class of votes and in the next breath lay solemn claim to 1,344 of them which might have come out of the very precincts against which he now levels his objection?

Mr. President, let me go one step further. We have a total conceded vote for Steck, a good vote for Steck, of 447,944, and claimed vote for Steck in addition to that total of 2,268.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield in just a moment, I will say to the Senator.

We have a total of 443,817 votes for Brookhart, conceded to be good votes; and we have a total of 6,453 votes claimed by Brookhart but challenged by Steck. When Mr. Parsons and Mr. Mitchell, counsel, respectively, for Steck and Brookhart, came to Washington, not in December after the Senate met, but after these totals had been made up and these challenged ballots had been segregated into separate sacks, they were allowed to take those challenged ballots and go through them for the purpose of agreeing upon them. I am going to ask Mr. Turner now to subtract from those challenged votes the number which both sides agreed to be no vote for either party. One hundred and fifteen of those votes, claimed by Brookhart, were conceded by Brookhart's counsel—and Brookhart was in the city occupying a room in the same office building where these transactions were going on, even after the Senate met—to be no votes for either candidate.

The tabulator will, of course, state the correct number as it appears officially in the record. Thirty-five, as I recollect, were conceded to be no votes for Steck.

Mr. President, there is the picture of what your committee did. I have told as best I could, without repeating details, why your committee did it. There is a total conceded vote for Mr. Steck of 447,944; there is a total conceded vote for Brookhart of 443,817. There is a total vote claimed by Brookhart and set aside for our inspection, taken from practically every precinct in the State, and the same for Steck. There is the agreement of Steck and Brookhart that 115 of the votes claimed for Brookhart were not, in fact, votes for Brookhart, and that 35 of the votes claimed for Steck were not, in fact, votes for Steck. Give to Brookhart every remaining vote claimed by him and add them to his total—and if we do that we must give Steck his votes because every challenge in the case is double, and the only variation is in the actual number of votes falling within a given challenged class—and Steck has a slight plurality of twenty-odd votes; the exact number I need not stop to state.

I do stop to say, however, Mr. President, that the 6,338 votes that are now given there to Brookhart include the 42 votes that the Senator from Nebraska just asked about. They are buried in the total but they are there, though they were not, in fact, votes, as I can explain. Forty-two of them are now by my tabulation given to him outright, rather than raise any question.

Those 6,338 votes include every vote that the Senator from Pennsylvania claims should be counted for Brookhart, and those 6,338 votes give to Brookhart every vote except the 115 which he himself concedes were not good votes.

Mr. President, from those totals on the board your committee thought there were 49 votes that were in fact no votes and that ought to be subtracted—7 from Steck and 42 from Brookhart—but he is given credit there for them. That arose in this way: I stated just now that the ballots were generally challenged upon the same ground, and it not infrequently happened that the same ballot was challenged by both parties; that is to say, that both Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart claimed the same ballot, and each one of them also challenged that ballot, and challenged it upon the identical ground. So that there were two challenges where there was actually but one ballot. So when the challenged ballots were added—2,268 and 6,453—there were found to be 49 less ballots than the total, because 2,268 was simply the number of challenged ballots claimed by Steck and 6,453 was simply the number of challenged ballots claimed by Brookhart. There having been two challenges to the same ballot, there might have been in some instances a failure to note that fact. There were, in fact, many instances in which there were two challenges to the same ballot—one ballot but two challenges—and they would have been listed in the total there as indicating the existence of two ballots when only one existed in fact. But the total there gives to Senator Brookhart 42 votes and gives to Steck 7 votes, which accounts for the 49 votes, the difference between the number of challenges and the actual challenged ballots which were turned over to your committee for its decision.

Now, Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate to a further fact in the case: In November, 1925, one week before the Senate convened, your committee came to Washington for the purpose of expediting this contest; and on December 2—the Senate not having convened, as I recollect, until December 7—we met for the purpose of going over the last remaining question in this case. At that meeting Mr. Parsons made the statement, as appears on page 62 of the record:

The ballots were all ordered to Washington, and they have been gone through.

We knew that.

The tabulator for the committee has made up his tabulation of the votes that have been agreed on.

We knew that.

I think somewhere between eight or nine thousand votes are in dispute.

There were in dispute 2,268 plus 6,453.

We had hoped to have those ready—

Bear that in mind, Senators—

We had hoped to have those ready to submit to the committee by this time. Mr. Mitchell and I have been going over those votes, and we have eliminated most of them.

Up until that hour not a voice from any quarter had been raised calling attention to any discrepancy between the ballots and the names on the poll books. Up until that hour not a question about unsealed packages had ever been raised. Up until that hour not a suggestion that there was a shortage of ballots had ever been raised by Mr. Brookhart or Mr. Mitchell.

In the summer of 1925 your committee with its sworn officers and with every safeguard thrown around these ballots had counted them and agreed upon them, Mitchell and Parsons coming back, before the Senate convened, themselves had taken those contested ballots, Parsons making this statement in the presence of Mitchell.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield, Mr. President, but I was about through with this point.

Mr. LENROOT. The question I desire to ask has to do with the accuracy of the statement which the Senator has made. I should like to refresh his recollection, and to ask him if, upon that very occasion, on December 2, as appears on page 63, the Senator himself did not ask this question:

And there is no dispute arising about any omission of ballots?

Mr. PARSONS. None that I know of.

Mr. MITCHELL. There may be a question of discrepancy between the ballots and the poll books.

Mr. PARSONS. There may be in one or two cases.

Senator CARAWAY. How many votes will likely be involved in that?

Mr. MITCHELL. I would not think more than 200 or 300.

Mr. GEORGE. That came afterwards.

Mr. LENROOT. It is in the same hearing on the next page.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand; but that was subsequent to the statement I have just detailed, and I am going to show the Senator the significance of it.

I was undertaking to show that in the summer before the Senate convened Mitchell and Parsons, representing the two interested parties, came down here and knew what the totals of the agreed votes were; they had been made up on the work sheet; they had been tabulated. They knew that Brookhart had 443,817 conceded votes; they knew that Steck had 447,944 conceded votes; and before the Senate met and before the second day of December, when we were holding the first informal meeting, as it might be called, Parsons and Mitchell had gone over these 2,268 and 6,453 votes, and Parsons and Mitchell knew just exactly what they agreed to; that 115 of them claimed by Brookhart were no votes, and that 35 of them claimed by Steck were no votes, and that if Brookhart were given every remaining vote claimed by him he was honestly and fairly beaten.

I have observed lawyers ere this, and parties ere this, when under their own solemn agreements they are face to face with an adverse decision. Not until this happened, not until Mitchell knew it, not until Parsons knew it, not until Brookhart knew it or could have known it, not until Steck knew it or could have known it, not until the facts were here for every man interested to know them was ever a question raised about discrepancies between poll books and ballots.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there are some of us who are really very desirous of ascertaining what this is all about; and I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia what is the significance of this part of the record to which his attention is now called by the Senator from Wisconsin? The count had been made, the figures had been disclosed, as the Senator has told us, and the attorneys for both parties came before them and told what had been done.

Mr. GEORGE. What they had done.

Mr. WALSH. What they had done; and then this colloquy occurred (page 63). Mr. Parsons seems to have been the spokesman; and the chairman said:

And those who are interested in the contest were also permitted to go over them with you?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes. They have not been heard, but I suppose they have that right.

The CHAIRMAN. They have not requested it?

Mr. PARSONS. No.

Senator WATSON. In other words, they are not interested in counting the ballots, but they come in on another issue.

Senator GEORGE. All of the ballots cast in the election have been brought to Washington and have been gone over?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Senator GEORGE. And there is no dispute arising about any omission of ballots?

Mr. PARSONS. None that I know of.

Mr. MITCHELL. There may be a question of discrepancy between the ballots and the poll books.

Mr. PARSONS. There may be in one or two cases.

Senator CARAWAY. How many votes will likely be involved in that?

Mr. MITCHELL. I would not think more than 200 or 300.

It would seem as though at that time Mr. Mitchell was insisting that there was a question for the committee to determine, namely, the case of the discrepancy between the ballots counted and the names on the poll list, and Senator CARAWAY apparently had that idea about it, because he asked:

How many votes will likely be involved in that?

Can the Senator tell us just what that means?

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I have been trying to say to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in that connection will the Senator read the next question and answer, which show how he proposed to raise the issue?

Mr. WALSH. Yes:

Senator CARAWAY. Do you propose introducing oral evidence to settle that controversy, or is there some other means?

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be simply a matter of record with the ballots, and the record of the final report.

So there was a question presented for the committee to pass upon, apparently.

Mr. GEORGE. There was one presented, but it was never raised until Mr. Mitchell knew the verdict in the case, and it has some bearing upon this case, and that is what I am discussing.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but I understood the tenor of the argument of the Senator to be that Mr. Mitchell had assented to the whole proceeding, and was not raising any controversy at all concerning this discrepancy between the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll list.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is entitled to have my best statement about it. That is exactly what happened. That is exactly what occurred. This question is now being raised, Mr. President; but I am trying to show the continuity of these several questions as they arose, and under what circumstances they arose.

Mr. Mitchell in person, and Mr. Cook, the selected representative of Mr. Brookhart, if I may repeat, and counsel and representative of Mr. Steck, not only agreed but they themselves actually counted these ballots or supervised the counting of them, and agreed that the totals appearing on the board there as good votes were in fact good votes for both Steck and Brookhart; and I say unfortunately those ballots are intact.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; I decline to yield at this time. If Senators will allow me to finish the statement, then I shall be pleased to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I have asked the Senator three times to yield. Of course, if he does not want to yield—

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield as soon as I finish answering the question.

They did agree that these were good votes. That happened in July and August, 1925. Before December 2, before the Senate convened, Mitchell and Parsons, representing Steck and Brookhart, with knowledge of these totals, with all available knowledge, came down here to examine the contested votes.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, my understanding about that matter is—and I want to be correct; I followed the Senator on that—my understanding is that they actually counted the ballots that were in the box, and this was the result of counting the ballots they found in the box; but here, I understand, Mr. Mitchell is insisting that the count of the ballots found in the box with reference to certain precincts should not be followed.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, is Mr. Mitchell insisting that that is so, or suggesting that it might be so?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should not want to answer for Mr. Mitchell's present attitude in the case. He is, I think, a very high-toned gentleman. All I want to point out is that these were conceded to be good votes. There was not a qualification attached to them. They came to us and said: "These are good votes." They were actually counted out day after day and passed over to the official tabulator as good votes. There was not a qualification attached. There was not a condition attached. They were handed over, and we counted them as good votes, and they are in fact, on the face of them, good votes. The remaining votes, the smaller numbers appearing under the larger totals, were the contested votes; and Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Parsons had gone through those contested votes before we met here in December of last year. They therefore knew what the result was, because when they went through these contested votes Mr. Mitchell himself conceded that out of the 6,453 votes claimed for Brookhart 115 of them were in fact no votes.

Mr. President, permit me to say for myself that those were in fact no votes by any sort of count. I took nobody's word for it, and I am asking nobody to be bound by waiver; but their counsel did correctly agree that 115 of them were no votes, and the 35 votes that Steck claimed were in fact no votes for Senator. They rightly tabulated those votes; so those facts were known. Any experienced attorney, any man acquainted with ordinary figures, could at once see that there was an actual plurality, though slight, in favor of Mr. Steck on the very face of it, giving Senator Brookhart everything that he claimed, giving him the 1,344 votes marked substantially after the style of the ballot hanging on the wall, and giving him the 42 votes that represented the number of challenges in excess of the actual ballots which we found; though I pointed out that a ballot was frequently challenged by both parties, having been claimed by both parties, and in some instances that fact may not have been noted. Taking out every question except one, the status of the vote shows, as that board shows it, a plurality for Steck.

What is that one question? That one question is the question that Mr. Mitchell suggested here when he said that some two or three hundred votes may be involved. That is the question that is suggested here by Senator Brookhart and by Senators who take his view of the matter when he says that the committee followed one rule in a certain precinct where there were 198 ballots short, and refused to follow the same rule in three or four more specifically enumerated cases.

Now, let me say this, and I think the Senator from Montana will now understand the issue that is really in the case. I have no disposition to confuse it, but I want to clarify it.

The four precincts, or five—I do not know which; the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] enumerated them a while ago—the four or five precincts pointed out specifically by Mr. Brookhart were pointed out after these facts were blazoned across the sky, showing the unmistakable evidence of the actual ballots. These precincts, the 67 alleged unsealed packages, are all but particulars included in the 1,068 precincts in which there is said to be a variance between the names on the poll books and the actual ballots in the box.

If there is a legitimate issue in the case, that is the issue, and the only issue, under my view of the case; and I give to Brookhart, rather than raise an argument about it, every vote that he claims, that his counsel claims, every vote that his campaign manager claims, every vote that his personal supervisor of this recount claims. Concede them all, and there is but one question that can be legitimately raised in this case.

I base the statement, not upon any written statement, not upon any stipulation, not upon the language of any subpoena; I base the statement on what Senator Brookhart's personal counsel did and on what his personal supervisor did; I base the statement on the actual and undisputed and incontrovertible facts in this case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I had the impression that Senator Brookhart did not know until the completion of that tabulation of the 1,068 districts that there was a variance between the poll books and the number of ballots delivered to the Senate for those districts. If that is so, how could any action by him prior to that time be construed to be a waiver of his rights under those circumstances?

Mr. GEORGE. I expressly excluded that question, and said that that was the only legitimate question, under my view of the case, that could possibly remain in the case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that if that question is resolved in Mr. Brookhart's favor he will then be the winner by several hundred votes? I gathered that from the minority report. I do not know.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I expect to discuss that. The Senator does not need to ask me to draw a conclusion about a matter that I am going now to discuss.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GEORGE. I do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The question of the Senator from Pennsylvania would indicate that Senator Brookhart had no knowledge of this discrepancy between the poll lists and the actual ballots. As a matter of fact, there is no question but that his representative in the county, and his counsel, did have knowledge of that fact prior to the completion of the tabulation; is there?

Mr. GEORGE. No question at all.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is no question at all that his representatives had the knowledge?

Mr. GEORGE. There is no question. I am not saying what Senator Brookhart personally knew, because I can not say.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The natural inference is that his counsel and his representative in the county informed him of the status of the proceedings. That is the natural inference.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I will not draw any inferences. I do not want to draw them.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator know, as a matter of fact, that Senator Brookhart did not know of the differences until he came before the committee, and did not the Senator himself call his attention to a lot of discrepancies that Senator Brookhart did not know of?

Mr. GEORGE. That is probably true. I am not speaking of what he actually knew. I am merely stating the facts.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield for a question, but not for an argument at this time.

Mr. HOWELL. I do not propose to make an argument, simply to call attention to the fact that Mr. Parsons—as I understand, he was the attorney for Mr. Steck?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. HOWELL. That, at the same time, the questions were asked which were read here by the Senator from Montana, Mr. Parsons said:

Of the poll judges, I think, however, some discrepancies will arise that may be explained. We have, in Iowa, what is called the absentee voters' law, and those votes are sent in, and those parties are not there to register. I think in some of the cases that the judges failed to put their names on the books, and, therefore, there would be a slight excess of ballots in those precincts.

They expected an excess, not a deficiency.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, but I do not wish to be led aside to answer that question. The facts answer it.

The 20th day of July, 1925, when these ballots were opened—I repeat, the day that they were opened—when the ballots taken out of the first bag were counted, this discrepancy was discovered and by the tabulator was brought to the attention of Cook and brought to the attention of Pandy. Whether it is material or not, they did not regard it as being especially significant, and that is exactly my position in the case.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understood the Senator to say that the supervisors, or whatever they were called, noted on the work sheet, or whatever they tabulated their findings on when the ballots from certain precincts were opened, whether there was a discrepancy, or whether the packages had been broken open. Anything like that was noted by the supervisors. I am wondering whether it was the place of the supervisors to go any further than to make that notification to the committee, and whether it was not the duty of the committee to investigate after they had that notification.

Mr. GEORGE. They noted the facts which they deemed material, plus such facts as the tabulator himself deemed material, as appears now by the work sheets, which are subject to examination by every Senator. They noted that the first package, "— precinct," — county, "sealed" or "unsealed"; the number of votes for Steck, the number for Brookhart, the number contested, the number of "no votes," and so forth. I think generally where the poll books were here, they noted the number of names appearing on the poll books. Those facts were matters of record, and they were records made up in July and August, 1925. They were facts known to Mr. Mitchell, counsel for Mr. Brookhart, together with the total number of votes that had been conceded to Steck and the total number of votes conceded to Brookhart, and the total number claimed by each.

Mr. FRAZIER rose.

Mr. GEORGE. In the interest of time, I am going to decline to yield for any other question at this time, but I will yield in a moment, if the Senator will permit me to proceed.

Not a question was ever raised by Mr. Mitchell, not a question was ever raised by Mr. Parsons, or by anybody interested in this case in any way until counsel for both sides knew the result of the recount, and I submit that it was too late, that it was then too late in good morals, in good conscience, to seek to raise questions all of which we might have examined and which might have been explained by competent evidence if the questions had been brought to us in time.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. GEORGE. I decline to yield until I have finished, and I hope to be able to finish in a very few minutes. Then I will yield for any question.

I am not discussing the legal right of Mr. Brookhart to raise the question that there was in certain precincts a discrepancy between the number of votes actually counted by your committee and the number of names on the poll books. I am not questioning his legal right to raise that question, but I am going further than that, and I say that in point of time the question was never raised by anyone, though counsel for Brookhart, able and capable lawyer that he is, knew the facts, and knew all of the facts, before your committee met here in December to determine to whom the contested ballots should be given.

Mr. President, can Senator Brookhart make a waiver of mere procedure, of mere practice? I take it that any man can waive any question of procedure or practice unless there be some positive law providing that he may not make the waiver. I take it, as a general proposition, that the manner in which the ballots came here, the manner in which the ballots were counted, the manner in which the whole proceeding moved forward, were matters that lay within the competency of Mr. Brookhart and Mr. Steck, as representing not only themselves, but every voter in Iowa in the election of 1924. I take it that they not only could agree, but I take it that their agreement is binding, and I take it that the two men of all men who have the primary interest in a correct recount, with full authority to raise any question, would have overlooked no question that could have been of the slightest benefit to either one of them.

Public rights always have been asserted by citizens in their individual or official capacities. Brookhart, representing the voters behind him, and Steck, representing the voters behind him, were entitled to counsel, and they had counsel. In the course of time, as every Senator knows, the counsel will be paid out of the coffers of the Senate itself, if any sufficient reason appears why they should be paid. Not bound by what they did? Not bound by what they discovered? Not bound by what they found? Upon what kind of morals are you to justify a repudiation, when they come here and actually count the votes, go through them one by one, and agree upon them, and challenge every one which they think they have any reason to challenge, and when they mix and scramble the ballots, when they destroy the evidence as it existed when they began that work so that it is beyond human power to put the case back here on the table before us?

We are reminded that it is immoral to permit a contestant to waive away the right of a voter. How immoral it is to say that we will not hold a man who seeks to retain a seat here to his solemn acts upon which his adversary has acted to his prejudice and hurt, who now can not bring his case here and have it tried upon its merits. If it is a mere question of the weight of morality, upon which side does it lie?

Allowing the question to be raised, and proceeding now to its consideration, there is not a Senator here who is going to be confused about how the ballots got here, when, irrespective of how they got here, with every fact known to Brookhart and Steck, they not only agreed and asked us to count them, but they helped us to count them, and they claimed whatever good either one derived from the recount.

There is no question before the Senate, therefore, about the language of the subpoena, about a departure from the agreement made by counsel, because all of that sinks into insignificance, it fades out of the picture when, with all the knowledge they now have about it—and they could not have any more now than they had then—they came here and actually opened up those ballots, and actually went into the boxes, and actually counted out the votes, and actually claimed the benefits of the recount.

Not only is that true, but you are not going to allow Steck and you are not going to allow Brookhart to come here and open up ballots and scatter and mix the ballots and then say, "You did not show that those ballots were sealed out in Iowa and left Iowa in good condition. You did not see that they came from the proper hands out in Iowa." You are not going to allow that. You are going to dismiss that with the conclusive answer that when they came here and found the ballots, and knew all the facts, and asked us to count them, and themselves participated in the count, not only through their personal representatives on the counting board but through their attorneys of record, they thereby eliminated the question now raised.

There remains but one question, and that is the question to which I adverted a few moments ago. These 4 precincts, in which there is a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll books and the actual number of ballots found, the 67 precincts from which came the alleged unsealed packages, are but particulars out of the general class of 1,068 precincts in which there was a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll books and the ballots actually found and recounted.

Mr. President, that brings me to the law of Iowa. I am not discussing any of the various challenges that have been made to these ballots, because, as far as the case is concerned, I concede every one of them claimed by Brookhart, concede every one of the 1,344, and every one he claims on any other ground, conceding every question that he has raised in this case except his proposition to go back and take the official count in the 1,068 precincts in which there was a discrepancy between the actual number of ballots and the number of names on the poll books.

Let me read the law on that point. We are going to determine this question, of course, as we determine any other disputed issue of fact. We are going to determine it upon what is the reasonable interpretation to be placed upon any given fact. First, section 800 of the code of 1924, which went into effect about seven or eight days before the election. So far as this provision of the code is concerned, it was old law and is as follows:

The name of each person, when a ballot is delivered to him—

Notice the language—

The name of each person, when a ballot is delivered to him, shall be entered by each of the clerks of election in a poll book kept by him in the place provided therefor.

The question that is made here, and the only question is, that there is simply a shortage of ballots which we have recounted when compared with the names on the poll books. What is the poll book? It is the list made by the clerks of election. The voter never touches it. The voter never does a thing about it. When he comes into the precinct voting place and asks for his ballot, which must be delivered to him by the judges of election, then the clerks begin to write his name. He then goes into the booth in plain view of the election judges and managers. In some of the voting precincts there are a large number of booths. There were nearly a million voters in Iowa who cast their ballots for some one for some office in the election of 1924. Here are the clerks making up the poll list, putting down the voter's name when he walks in and asks for a ballot. When he goes into the booth he may change his mind. He may not wish to vote. He may put the ballot in his pocket. He may put it in the box of blanks. And yet will Senators contend here that the actual ballot in the box, the ballot that the voter marked, the ballot that he placed in the box himself or handed to the judge, the actual ballot in the box that night, is of less probative value than the number of names on the list that two tired clerks made up on the election day?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the case of the voter changing his mind and concluding that he will not vote taken care of in the statute? Does not the statute require that he must return that ballot to the judges?

Mr. GEORGE. If he spoils it or does not vote.

Mr. WALSH. If he does not vote he must return it, so that the ballot comes back whether he votes or whether he does not vote.

Mr. GEORGE. As a matter of legal presumption; yes. But are we not men of experience? Are we not trying to find the facts of the case? Are we not trying to find the truth of the case? Is it not universally true that the ballots are better evidence of how many voters there were, unless we can show some fraud? Is it not in the nature of things the highest and best proof of the number of voters?

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. Is not this true, that if a voter goes into the booth and spoils a ballot, he has a right to return that ballot to the clerk, and it is the clerk's duty to write his name again on the stub and give him another ballot, and the one he spoils does not go into the ballot box at all? And would not that make a difference between the count itself and the number of ballots in the ballot box?

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is undoubtedly true. I think it is undoubtedly true that if one goes into a crowded voting precinct at the peak hours, at noon time or late afternoon, with hundreds of voters waiting on him, there is apt to be a spoiled ballot. He goes in and asks for a ballot and his name goes on the list. It may be if he comes out of the booth with a spoiled ballot, and asks for another ballot, his name will inadvertently go on the list again. The tired clerks might duplicate the name. The tired clerks might themselves blot the voter's name so that they could not read the first writing of the name, and might duplicate it, and that brings me to one further observation that I wish to make about the poll books.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma used the expression of an entry being made on the stub. There is no stub.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

Mr. HARRELD. I understand that. They record the name in a book.

Mr. REED of Missouri. In a book, but not on a stub.

Mr. HARRELD. The point I was making is that it would make a discrepancy between the number of names that are written, whatever record is preserved, whether it is a stub or a book, on the one hand, and the number of ballots on the other.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be no discrepancy.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; if the names were duplicated, there would be a discrepancy.

Mr. NORRIS. Not unless the name was written a second time. The clerk would not write it the second time.

Mr. HARRELD. The law in my State does require the clerk to keep stubs, and he could write the name on the stub twice under such circumstances. I do not know whether in this particular case he would write it twice in the book or not.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want the Senator from Oklahoma to be clear about this fact. There is no such thing as a stub in the State of Iowa.

Mr. HARRELD. I understand that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. There is a book. When a voter gets his ballot, his name is entered upon that book, and if he destroys his ballot then he goes back and gets a new ballot.

Mr. HARRELD. The point is, Do they write his name again?

Mr. REED of Missouri. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Missouri leaves an impression that is not quite accurate. The election officers there put into envelopes ballots that they call defective.

Mr. GEORGE. They are required by law to do it.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the ballots in the box, as it is carried to the county auditor, the ballots which they count, may never agree and never do agree with the poll list. Those Senators who want to decide this question on the official count will disfranchise 7,000 votes that they know now are good votes.

Mr. GEORGE. Undoubtedly. Let me explain further the law of Iowa. Bear in mind that the poll list is a list made up by a clerk. In the heavily populated districts, at the peak hours of voting, all men of experience know that the clerks will duplicate names. All men know that where the name is written by the clerks when the ballot is called for by the voter, as is required by the Iowa law, contrary to the rule in many, if not most, of the States, whatever the law may prescribe, hundreds of ballots are received and hundreds of names recorded where the ballots never go into the box and are not returned by the voters. Senators can not close their eyes to the facts of every-day experience.

Not only that, but the names on the poll books are tabulated in this way, and I beg Senators to note this fact. The lines in the poll books are numbered; and when the election is concluded, if the last number is 1,895, they say that 1,895 men voted, and that is the poll list. They were never purged for duplication. The lists were never corrected for mistakes. Many weeks ago, though I suppose it makes no difference about what time questions are raised, the poll books went back to Iowa, when we did not know that this question could be considered a serious question, when it had been brought to the attention of Mr. Cook and Mr. Pendergast on the very first day of the recount and dismissed as immaterial.

Not only is that true, but there are certain ballots in Iowa that are not required to be sent back in the boxes. But let me get to that in another way. If there be anyone who is willing to assume that a clerk can never make a mistake, and that the voter and the judges alone are the ones who can make a mistake, let me make this observation.

Under section 840, providing for the canvassing of votes under the law of Iowa, the duties of the canvassers are expressly enumerated, and the first is to make a public canvass of the vote and credit each candidate with the number of votes counted for him; second, ascertain the result of the vote; third, compare the poll list and correct errors therein. And yet Senators argue that the record that a tired clerk makes is better evidence than the actual ballot in the box. Let them read the law of Iowa. Let them read that the legislative declaration of the State is that the managers of election shall correct the errors in the poll lists.

Let us go another step under the law of Iowa. Provision is made in the Code of Iowa, in section 845, where the ballots are in excess of the poll list:

If the ballots for any office exceed the number of voters in the poll list, such fact shall be certified, with the number of the excess in the return.

Then there is a provision that if the election officers can not possibly reconcile the excess of ballots they are in certain circumstances to call another election. There is not one word said where the ballots are less than the poll list. The men who write laws in our American States are practical men. The men who make our laws for us back home, and the law of Iowa is vigorously invoked, are practical men. It is even said that if we do not abide by the law of Iowa we will violate the Federal Constitution, when the Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of the elections and the returns of every man who comes here for a seat. The law of Iowa makes no provision where there is a shortage of ballots, and that is all there is in this case. It is assumed, as a matter of fact in every election where there are large numbers of men voting, where the poll list is kept by the clerk, who takes the name of the voter and enters it on the list when the ballot is called for and not when it is voted, that there will be a shortage of ballots. When there is no number placed on the ballot and no number placed against the voter's name on the poll list corresponding to a number on his ballot by which it could be identified it is perfectly obvious why no provision is to be found in the Iowa law touching a shortage of ballots.

But there is a provision of the law of Iowa which settles this case on principle. Every ballot that goes into the box must have the initial of the election manager written thereon. Here we have a law requiring the managers to correct the poll lists, conceding errors. Conceding what universal experience confirms beyond the peradventure of a doubt. The managers must correct errors in the poll lists. Specific provision is made when the ballots are in excess of the names on the poll lists. Why? Because the ballot must have the name or initials of the election judge, or some mark which he can identify as his mark, written on the back of the ballot.

So that when they go into the box and find an excess of ballots over the names on the poll list, they examine the ballots to see whether every ballot has the mark of the election manager or judge thereon. If it has, they undertake to reconcile this difference and correct the poll list even then; but when they can not account for the excess ballots—for instance, if there are 10 or 15 ballots with no initials of the election judge on the back of them, and they can not account for them—the law of Iowa provides the procedure to be followed. There is no requirement for the certification or correction of a mere shortage of ballots. That is why Mr. Cook, that is why Mr. Pendergast recognized as of no importance the fact that there were a few less ballots on the first work sheet, or at least the work sheet that was completed on the first day of your committee's labors back in the summer of 1925. There was, in fact, no waiver of a legal right, because none existed.

Now let us look at the facts. Here are 1,068 precincts, including the alleged 67 precincts in which the ballots were unsealed, including the four or five counties, especially enumerated in the brief filed by Senator Brookhart and in the views of the minority presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. Here are 1,068 precincts in which there is a total shortage of a little over 3,000 votes. The Senator from Nebraska says the number is 3,570. I believe, according to my figures, the shortage is about 3,000; but we will not dispute about that. Here are 1,068 precincts in which there is a shortage all the way through, except in one or two instances, where, if we take the official count there, and there alone, it would reduce Brookhart's plurality even beyond the figures given. Here are 1,068 precincts and about 3,500 votes short. The table in the hearings is a tabulation of the whole vote of each county, not of the different precincts; and though the difference in the county may be 20 or more, the precinct is what we are interested in. The 1,068 precincts show a total shortage of a little more than 3 votes to a precinct.

The startling suggestion is here made that men of the intelligence and education of the citizenship of the great State of Iowa would go all over the State and in nearly half of the precincts undertake to steal an election by the destruction of about three ballots on the average in those precincts. At every election precinct there were three judges of election and two clerks. If in 1,008 precincts throughout Iowa there was a stealage of Brookhart ballots—a matter which I am going to discuss a little later on—than there must have been more than 5,000 men participating in that fraud, a fraud spread out over the face of a great State like Iowa where it would be exposed to the view of every passer-by.

There is no line in the record, there is not a fact in the case that justifies any man imputing fraud or corruption to any person except some one connected with the holding of the election, if fraud be charged. There is no line in the record, there is not a fact in this case that justifies any man in challenging the integrity and honor of more than 5,000 men scattered throughout the State of Iowa in this election. No man can take that position and maintain it, because there is nothing whatever to sustain it, but everything indicates that the election was fair; fair in the sense that the votes were actually and honestly counted.

What are the facts? When we take the official vote as printed in the certificate of Senator Brookhart presented to the Senate and included in his sworn answer as well as in the sworn petition of Mr. Steck we see that both of them, in complete agreement, aver that—

The returns of the general election held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1924, in the State of Iowa, certified by the various election boards, showed that he had received 447,706 votes for the said office of the United States Senator, and that the contestant had received 446,951 votes.

When we take the official count made by the managers of the election out in Iowa, which is reflected on the face of the certificate itself which Senator Brookhart brought down here and presented to the Senate, we find that Senator Brookhart is given 447,706 votes, but when your committee added up the total vote to which Senator Brookhart was entitled on the official return sheets—not our recount, bear that in mind—we gave to him 447,637 votes and we gave to Mr. Steck a total of 446,840 votes, though he claimed according to the official count 446,951 votes.

We found errors in the actual addition of the official vote as made up by the managers of the election in Iowa, but the errors were about as great against Mr. Brookhart as they were against Mr. Steck, a little in favor of Mr. Brookhart, perhaps, by a few votes, but they were simply errors in a few votes that would naturally occur in the tabulation of nearly a million votes. There was nothing to indicate fraud. We have given Mr. Brookhart, in our recount, the advantage that he gains even in that particular, which is a matter of no significance, but serves to illustrate that such errors can and do creep into so large a tabulation of votes.

So, Mr. President, the official vote for Senator Brookhart was 447,637. We give—or I give at least; I am not now speaking for any member of the committee save myself—Mr. Brookhart more than 450,000 votes. When we recounted the ballots I find that he was entitled to a little over 450,000 votes, the sum of the two figures, 443,817 and 6,238 votes, less 42 votes and 20 votes, which I do not now discuss. Also though Mr. Steck was given 446,951 votes, according to the official count, when we recounted the votes we find that he has 450,000 votes plus, the sum of the two figures, 447,944 and 2,233; the election always being conceded out in Iowa and here to be an exceedingly close election. We have not found more votes than the official election managers in Iowa counted on the day of the election, as I think, but we have disregarded some technical rules in a few instances, and we have also found certain minor errors in addition in the mere tabulation of the votes.

It is quite reasonable to say, I think, that trained men, efficient accountants, sitting here in an office building in Washington, with ample time to go over the votes, with ample time to scrutinize each ballot, with ample time to correct any error or mistake, might generally be assumed to be able to make under such conditions an actual mathematical calculation better than they themselves might have made it on election day and after the physical and mental strain endured by them during the day.

But mark this: When we go through the votes one by one we find more votes for Mr. Steck and more votes for Senator Brookhart than the judges of election in Iowa found; but we find them each gaining just a little here and a little there. At no place, however, was there any great gain or any remarkable or even noteworthy loss. At no place was there a single badge of fraud, a single evidence of corruption, and at no place was there evidence of a corrupt intent to deprive one of these candidates of votes and add them to the count for the other.

Now, Senators, let me urge upon you a fact that is conclusive upon the question of the good faith of the men out in Iowa who managed the election, and also of the men who recounted the vote here. In the machine precincts Steck gained and Brookhart gained. If the Iowa managers intended to falsify the ballot so as to defraud Brookhart of the election, why did they subtract votes from both Steck and Brookhart? Do criminals act in that way? Do corrupt men act in that way? In the 789 paper-ballot precincts in which we found the ballots exactly to balance with the names on the poll sheets, bear that in mind, Steck gained about 1,000 votes and Brookhart gained some 600 or 700 votes. Again both candidates gained.

Can anybody imagine that men who want to steal an election or defraud a man out of an honest vote would spread the fraud out all over a State, and that they would also be careful so to practice their fraud as to vary the totals of each man, increasing the vote of each candidate? And how are you going to increase the totals of Mr. Brookhart when the only complaint is not of additions of ballots but of subtraction of ballots?

You are asked to believe that a fraud has been perpetrated because the poll list which a clerk keeps does not tally with the solemn act of a sworn judge of election. You are asked to take the poll list as against the ballots actually found in the box, when under all law the ballot is higher and better evidence, because the object of an election is not to keep a poll list but is to find the will of the voters by a count of the ballots in the box. You do not hold elections to give physical or mental exercise to two clerks who keep the poll lists. You are asked to disregard the actual ballots when the very law of Iowa recognizes that there may be a mistake in the poll list and provides for the correction of the poll list. You are asked to disregard the actual ballots and take the poll list when the only applicable provision of Iowa law provides for the procedure to be followed when there is an excess of ballots over the names on the poll list, which might be and probably could be easily discovered and corrected. You are asked to take the poll list and say that the poll list indicates the number of men who actually voted, the number of ballots that actually went into the box, when we have found here more good ballots for both Steck and Brookhart than the official managers of election found out in Iowa on the very day of the election, according to their returns.

You are asked to do what? You are asked to go back and take the official count merely because you find an average of about three votes less in nearly half of the State than the names entered on the poll list. We must, it is asserted, take the official count, though the moment you take it, rejecting the careful recount made by your committee, you increase the disparity between the ballots and the poll lists by over 7,000 votes. You are going to correct an error by multiplying it.

There is but one question that can be legitimately raised in the case and that is whether we are to disregard the actual ballots which, under every rule of law and of morals and of fair dealing, we must take as good and genuine ballots, properly preserved and brought to us for the single purpose of recounting them, because the ballots do not, in about half of the State, exactly balance with the names on the poll books; and whether we are to accept the official count, which brings about a greater disparity between the names on the poll books and the total votes counted by the election officers in Iowa for both Steck and Brookhart by at least 7,000 votes. We are asked to do it, Mr. President, upon not a word of evidence tending to show fraud; not a suggestion that any man acted corruptly, when there is not, if you scrutinize with care and candor every one of the 900,000 ballots cast in the election, anything that would indicate any willful or intentional fraud upon the part of any man connected with the election. You are asked to do it when by so doing you must impeach not only the ballots that were brought here but at least a large number of men in the State of Iowa, scattered throughout that State, where fraud upon their part could be easily and almost certainly detected.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator states that there is no evidence of fraud, and argues from that, because there is no evidence of fraud, that we must take the ballots. If that is true so far as the ballots which you find are concerned, likewise there was no evidence, was there, to account for these 3,500 ballots?

Mr. GEORGE. I think there was the highest and best evidence.

Mr. REED of Missouri. You did not find the ballots in the sacks?

Mr. GEORGE. The ballots in the sacks are the highest and best evidence of the ballots actually put in the box.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I agree with the Senator this far—that the ballot in the sack, in the absence of evidence that the sack was tampered with, is the highest evidence of what the voter did. That is true as to the ballots in the sack. Suppose you find that the ballot is not in the sack and nobody offers any evidence to show what that ballot was, what shape are you in then?

Mr. GEORGE. Then you take the higher and better evidence, in the absence of fraud shown?

Mr. REED of Missouri. What is the next?

Mr. GEORGE. Your higher and better evidence is the number of ballots; and if they are irreconcilable with the poll list, if there is a discrepancy, under the Iowa law an excess of ballots only is dealt with by statute, you adhere to the rule and apply the higher and better evidence rule throughout.

Mr. REED of Missouri. There can not be any higher or better evidence than the mere absence of a ballot.

Mr. GEORGE. The ballot itself is evidence of the number of ballots cast unless you bring evidence that the ballots have been tampered with.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But is not the burden upon the contestant when you find only part of the ballots there, as shown by the poll books, to account for the lost ballots?

Mr. GEORGE. The burden is on the contestant to bring ballots here which we from the evidence would feel free to count. The Senator was not in the Chamber when I began my statement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I was not. I was unavoidably absent. I am very sorry.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me repeat: The ballots were brought. Every fact in connection with the bringing of the ballots was known to Mr. Steck and Mr. Brookhart at that time. The ballots were over here in the Senate Office Building, and we gathered about the table—Mr. Brookhart's counsel, Mr. Steck's counsel, the supervisors selected by each—and they not only asked us to count the ballots and agreed with the statement that nothing but a straight count was involved, made on the 20th day in July, 1925, but they themselves, that is, the supervisors, actually did the counting.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; I understand that point.

Mr. GEORGE. Would the Senator then insist upon any preliminary proof that the ballots came from the proper custody?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Suppose the very circumstances happened that the Senator has recited, that you brought here a great number of sacks containing ballots, and each side said: "We do not know of any fraud; we do not charge any fraud"; and you open one of those sacks, we will say from precinct A, that ought to have in it, according to the poll books, 500 ballots, and you find only 100 ballots. Would not the Senator say that the burden was upon the contestant to show what had become of those 400 ballots before he could overcome the presumption that the contestee was properly here in his seat under his certificate?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, it would be the duty of the committee to examine all the facts; but let me add one other fact which the Senator has omitted. Suppose on the first day when the recount is started, and in the first precinct in which the recount is made, a discrepancy is discovered between the actual ballots and the number on the poll list, and that is brought to the attention of the personal representatives of the two contesting parties for the purpose of enabling them then, if they thought it of consequence, to bring evidence and go into it and to make as full and thorough an examination as might be possible, and they said "It is of no consequence," and proceeded on with the count.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It was of no consequence in that matter, and they waived it, perhaps, if a candidate can waive it, which I maintain he can not. I claim that no man can stipulate another man into the United States Senate. He has to be elected. Suppose it was done in that case: Does the Senator say that was binding in every other precinct?

Mr. GEORGE. I say that same thing happened in every other precinct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We might be of contrary opinions about it. I simply wanted to ask the Senator the question which I did ask him, and which the Senator has answered very clearly.

Mr. GEORGE. The legal proposition is quite clear that, once you have established the identity of your ballots—that is, once you have shown that they come from the proper custody and have been kept and preserved, either by evidence or by an admission that it could be shown by evidence, because it is a matter of procedure and does not go to the merits of the issue actually involved—once that is established, you have then the verity of your ballots established, and thereafter, as between a naked conflict arising between the ballots and the number of names on the poll lists, the ballots are always the higher and better evidence. Of course, that is not true if you have impeached the integrity of the ballots; but where there is a mere discrepancy between the number of names on the poll list, which under the Iowa law may reasonably and probably does arise in every election in a large number of precincts, and where the discrepancy is slight, the mere number of names on the poll list should never be taken as controlling when you are counting the actual ballots.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It does not control, but does it not require explanation—and the question is, whose duty is it to furnish the explanation? I say it is the contestant's duty.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, for he has been very courteous, as he always is.

Mr. GEORGE. Furthermore, let me say this: I do not think you can ever require one who brings and who relies on the higher and better evidence to furnish additional evidence merely because his position is assailed by one dependent entirely upon secondary and less trustworthy evidence.

You come back to the conflict between the poll list and ballots, and when once you concede the ballots to be the highest and best evidence—if they have been properly preserved—a mere disparity in number when compared with the poll list can never put the burden on the man who has the advantage in the ballots.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the point. I concede that the ballot, when you find it, is the best evidence of the voter's intent, but I do not concede that the ballot when you do not find it is evidence of anything.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator this question: Suppose the Senator, as manager of an election, should sit at his table all day, and with the utmost care mark his initials on all ballots handed to him by the voters and put them in the box; and suppose when night came and the precinct was closed the Senator should count those ballots himself, and count them accurately, as best he could, having such aid as he might have, and he should find 1,001 ballots. Suppose his clerks during the day had put down 1,006 names. Would not the Senator think those ballots were the highest and best evidence of how many votes were actually put in that box?

Mr. REED of Missouri. If I did it myself, I might think I had been wiser than my clerks.

Mr. GEORGE. Will not the Senator allow us to assume that all other men are about as good and wise as we are?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not think the Senator's illustration is a fair one.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not ask the Senator to say that, but I simply asked him to say what would be the highest and best evidence—the ballots?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The highest and best evidence—

Mr. GEORGE. I concede that you would undertake to reconcile the disparity. You would make such investigation as you might see fit. But if you found an irreconcilable difference, you would be driven to take the ballots.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to take the Senator's time, or to interrupt him; but since he asked me this question, I will answer it. Let us get an illustration somewhat near the facts.

If I were the clerk of an election, or the judge of an election, and I wrote down in longhand the names of men as they came up to whom I delivered ballots, and I put my initials on those ballots and handed them to the voters—

Mr. GEORGE. The clerk does not put his initials on the ballots.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The judge does.

Mr. GEORGE. The judge does that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I said "clerk or judge." When we got through, we counted the ballots, and we did not have any trouble at that time. We did not find any discrepancy between the ballots and the poll books. At least, none was noted, and none was recorded. Six or eight months after that somebody opened the sack in which those ballots were put, after it had been in the custody of other people and shipped across the country, and then you found that the ballots did not tally with this book written in longhand; and I had made the book, or it had been made under my supervision, and I found that there were 3, or 4, or 5, or 10 ballots short.

I would say my book was correct, and that in some way or other those separate and loose slips of paper, the ballots, had been mislaid or lost. That is what I would say. I would go by my books, the same as I would if I were keeping a grocery store and were entering upon the books the purchases of my customers and also had some tabs that I stuck on a spike. When I got through, six or eight months afterwards, if I could not find a tab for every entry, I would say the tabs had been lost in some way.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is impeaching the ballots, and he is presuming a case in which he is the judge of his own acts; but fortunately none of us are permitted to act as judge in our own case.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not impeaching the ballots.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is impeaching the ballots. He is presuming facts that do not appear in this case.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am insisting that where the ballot is not there and the book shows it ought to be there, the contestant has to prove that it was not there.

Mr. GEORGE. Would you not have to prove that on the very day of the election, as well as three months afterwards, say, if you had carefully preserved your ballots?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not catch the import of the question. I think that we have discussed that so that we understand each other, but the Senator has spoken of the small number of votes in each precinct, an average of only three. Of course, sometimes they ran away above three, did they not?

Mr. GEORGE. They ran above three, but they never ran very high in any one precinct.

Mr. WALSH. Twenty-two.

Mr. GEORGE. And that in only a very few precincts.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That seemed slight, but I recall that President Wilson's election turned upon a majority of 312 votes, I believe it was, in the great State of California, and, according to the Senator's own judgment in this case, this election turns upon 76 votes.

Mr. GEORGE. Seventy-odd.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Seventy-odd votes. Therefore three votes in a precinct, in 1,057 precincts, is quite an important item. It is a determinative item.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator has completed his statement, I have never conceded, and I have never imagined, that there was any real shortage of ballots here. I have supposed there was simply the ordinary discrepancy which usually and generally occurs when approximately a million votes are deposited in boxes throughout a State in the course of one day's election.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. In regard to the talk back and forth about a shortage of ballots, or a discrepancy which is characterized as a shortage, I understood the Senator from Georgia to say a while ago that the recount made here gave to each party a larger total vote than the official count in Iowa gave to them. Is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; by approximately six or seven thousand. I have forgotten the exact number.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But not larger than the poll books showed?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no. Our recount is nearer the poll books than the official count was.

Mr. BRATTON. Obviously, then, there must have been a variance in Iowa between the total number of ballots counted and the total number of names on the poll books.

Mr. GEORGE. Obviously there was.

Mr. BRATTON. The recount of the ballots here more nearly approached the number of names on the poll books than the tabulation in Iowa did.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is undoubtedly true, but I think the difference is accounted for by those errors which would creep into an election where so many votes were cast.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I wish the Senator from New Mexico would give his attention a moment. I do not know the fact myself, but is not this discrepancy between the official count and the number of ballots found largely accounted for by the fact that on the recount the committee allowed certain ballots which had been disregarded on the official count?

Mr. GEORGE. I think we undoubtedly did that in some instances, and I said that a while ago. I think undoubtedly we have the same ballots that were counted by the managers of election there on election day. Giving the matter the most careful consideration of which I am capable, there is nothing, in my mind, to indicate any fraud or any corruption, either by any of the managers of election, or by anybody else, in the handling of these ballots. There is simply the discrepancy that would ordinarily and usually and generally occur.

There is also a probable further explanation, in that certain ballots, though they went into the boxes out in Iowa, were not required by the managers of the election to be canvassed or sent up to the canvassing boards in the respective counties for the purpose of recounting them. These were not, strictly speaking, ballots that ought to have gone into the box. They went up to the respective county seats, but they did not go as a part of the official ballot, counted by the managers in the official returns made by them. That is clearly disclosed by the provisions of the Code of Iowa, and we found evidences of it here.

For instance, we found one package of ballots, in which, let us say, there were 396 actual ballots. The poll book showed 400 people to have voted in that precinct. We found 396 only, but in a separate envelope, marked as defective and not considered ballots by the election managers, from the same precinct, attached, in fact, to the package, we found 4 ballots that were blank, perhaps in one case the voter had written his name across the face of the ballot. That is authorized by the law of Iowa. That happened in one precinct. It may well explain a reasonable shortage, if you wish to denominate it as a shortage, in the actual ballots, when compared with the names on the poll books. But plus the other matters brought to the attention of the Senate, to my mind it is conclusive that there was no tampering with these ballots, that there was no fraud in the preservation of the ballots. Why? There were not 67 precincts in which the bags were unsealed. If the auditors out in Iowa did their duty, there were only two, and only one that was especially material, and that one was the one in which 198 votes were by Mr. Steck's and Mr. Brookhart's representatives set aside, the official count in that case being taken as more nearly correct. That one package came from Iowa unsealed. It left the county auditor unsealed. It was received by him unsealed. That one package bore evidence of some actual tampering with the ballots, in that the ballots had been removed from the wire and the wire itself running through the ballots had been broken or unsealed, as I am advised. There was reason, good, substantial reason, upon which men who were trying to find the truth in that particular precinct could agree, and they did agree.

Not until we had been given the figures by the supervisors did we learn that in that particular precinct had the official rather than the actual recount been by express agreement accepted. Not another one of the containers appeared to have been unsealed when it left Iowa except one. There were about 72 of them on which the seals were broken when they were opened here. If Senators will look at the testimony of Colonel Thayer upon that question, which is a part of the official record in the case, they will see that he testified that the packages from those 72 precincts did not bear any evidence of ever having been properly sealed, but it appeared that they were defectively sealed in the first instance. As a matter of fact, the containers were cotton sacks, tied with a cotton string, and on the knot of the string, or on two strands of the string brought together, there was dropped a bit of sealing wax. When you consider that those packages went up to the county seat, when you consider that they left Iowa by parcel post registered mail and came to Washington, were loaded on trucks, and were brought over to the Senate Office Building and thrown into a room, you would expect to find, if you apply the ordinary experience of men, at least 60 or 70 of them on which the sealing wax would have been shattered or broken in the course of transportation to Washington. Not only that, but through every one of these packages of ballots there was run the pliable wire required by this statute; and bear in mind that the ballot must be folded, and through the center of the fold the wire must be run by the election manager, and that wire itself sealed. In not one case, with the possible exception of where the official count was by agreement taken by the representatives of the parties—not by the committee, but under the circumstances I have already detailed—not in a single case was this wire unsealed.

Again I ask, are you looking for the truth in the case? How would it be possible to take off just enough ballots from a wire, with seal intact, when the ballots were folded and it could not be told until they had been pulled out whether they were for Brookhart or for Steck?

There is no evidence of fraud and we are not authorized to presume it, subtle as it is, and only the imagination can discover evidences of fraud in this whole election. There is no excess of ballots. Except in a few precincts, I think the total of them, going back to the official count, would give Steck an advantage, as I recollect having tabulated them at one time. But they did not add ballots. They subtracted ballots, assuming fraud. They could not tell what they were subtracting in the way of ballots unless they broke the wire, and the wire was never broken. It was sealed when it came here and sealed when we went to count the ballots.

If we are to judge this case by the unmistakable evidences of fact and circumstance that control men in all the high affairs of life, we can reach but one conclusion, in my candid judgment, and that is that under any and all circumstances Steck was elected; first by the narrow plurality, whatever it is, shown on the board, and then by the deduction of 7 votes from Steck and 42 from Brookhart, or a net loss to Brookhart of 35, and then by the loss of 20 votes as appears in the official report, which we personally inspected, and which we were entirely satisfied were no votes under any circumstances. That allows Mr. Brookhart the full number of 1,344 votes which, under the law and under the law alone, perhaps, he could justly and rightly claim, but under the correct application of what I think to be a sound rule, to which he is rightfully entitled.

It does not allow Mr. Brookhart, of course, the advantage in gain in one or two instances, though in the case of all challenges overruled he gained many more votes than Steck. Where there is an unmistakable intent and purpose of the voter to vote for either Senator Brookhart or for Mr. Steck, indicated according to the law of Iowa, we have held the ballot good, although something more than authorized by technical law, or forbidden by such law, may have been added by the voter to his ballot. I will never consent to cast out a man's vote because marked by a mark which is alleged to be a distinguishing mark, when such mark and the purpose of the voter in making it is fully explained in the light of current events, known and published throughout the State, entirely consistent with honesty and inconsistent with any presumption of dishonesty or corruption or fraud upon the part of the voter.

So, Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to yield the floor, and I do so.

Mr. LENROOT. Before the Senator takes his seat I want to ask him a question.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the presumption following the sealed packages or boxes, I want to make an inquiry about the second ward of the city of Estherville, with reference to which the work sheets were put in the record. It appears that they were received in a sealed bag and a shortage of 20 ballots was recorded.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not understand the Senator's statement exactly.

Mr. LENROOT. The work sheet of the second ward of Estherville is found in the record, and according to those work sheets there is a shortage from the poll books of 20 ballots. Then the second work sheet of the same ward is put in, which shows an excess of 10 ballots, making a difference of 30 ballots for this same precinct. It appears from the statement of Mr. Mitchell that somebody sent 30 more ballots to Washington, and that accounts for the second work sheet with the difference between it and the first work sheet. It is also stated by Mr. Mitchell that the tabulators allowed those 30 ballots to be counted that came here in that way, although the original package was a sealed one. What has the Senator to say with reference to the treatment by the committee of this precinct?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not recall that precinct, I will say.

Mr. LENROOT. It will be found on page 248, the first work sheet appearing at the top of that page, and, on page 249, the second work sheet at the bottom. They were both submitted to the committee for determination, not under stipulation.

Mr. GEORGE. When does the Senator mean they were submitted to the committee?

Mr. LENROOT. They are dated November 4, and Mr. Mitchell put them in evidence. The chairman of the committee himself said, "Let the record show that these sheets are offered," and they are in the record.

Mr. GEORGE. My statement, made in the beginning, I think, covers the case. The Senator said they were dated November 4, 1924?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the date of the election.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; that is the date of the election. Anyway, it is the work sheet that was submitted to the committee by the representatives of Mr. Brookhart and Mr. Steck.

Mr. GEORGE. When the work sheets were submitted to us, it was long after the ballots had been counted.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes.

Mr. GEORGE. It was after the 20 ballots, if that be the number, had been placed in the general bag of contested ballots.

Mr. LENROOT. There were only 5 contested ballots involved.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but they had been placed in the contested bag. My recollection is, and in fact I am quite sure of it, that where the ballots came here in a sealed sack we counted the actual ballots, as I have just said.

Mr. LENROOT. They apparently did so in both cases.

Mr. GEORGE. We counted the actual ballots. If there was an excess of ballots sent down at a later date, that presents a question about which I do not just at the moment recall the facts.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Mitchell states at some point that—

Mr. GEORGE. I rather think there was in one case a few ballots that were subsequently sent down here while the counters were at work which the county auditor said belonged with a certain precinct. Some question arose as to whether they should be counted. My recollection is that they were not counted, but until I could refresh my recollection I could not state positively.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will find Mr. Parsons's statement on page 252 of the hearings:

Mr. PARSONS. In the case of the second ward, city of Estherville, we object to this for the following reasons, that the ballots that came down are set out here; and, subsequently, there were some more ballots came down that purported to be, and that the auditor wrote—not the auditor, but that somebody wrote—a note, and said they were found lying around somewhere else; and so we object to considering any ballots—and they are taken into account here—that were not in the original package sent from the county auditor.

Mr. GEORGE. Refreshing my recollection, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the ballots which were subsequently received down here were not in fact counted.

Mr. LENROOT. They were not counted?

Mr. GEORGE. No; they were not counted. We counted only those that came in the sealed packages.

Mr. LENROOT. There was a shortage in the sealed package, but there were sent here an additional number of ballots that were stated to belong to this precinct. Of course, they should not have been counted, but does not that rather remove the presumption that there was no actual shortage?

Mr. GEORGE. I would expect to find one or more errors of that kind occurring in the State of Iowa where there is such a great number of people. That confirms, to my mind, rather than indicating any fraud, the fact that the men out there who had charge of these ballots were perfectly honest and perfectly candid. They had no disposition to conceal anything. Even after they had sent down the other packages, they ran across a little bunch of ballots that might have been voted. They were candid enough to send them on down here, and we inspected them and thought there was too much doubt about them to count them. To that Mr. Brookhart agreed, I think, and Mr. Steck's representative agreed, and they were not counted.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask a further question. There were actually four precincts submitted to the committee for determination upon the matter of discrepancy. I take it the committee did not pass upon the merits of that question, but declined to do so because of the way the matter had been handled and because of the mixing up of the challenged ballots from those precincts in the general mass. Am I correct?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to answer the Senator. I could not say what the committee declined to do. The committee acted somewhat informally in most of these hearings, because they were hearings at which only the Senators and the counsel, experienced lawyers, were present, and there was not that formality observed that is ordinarily observed in an important investigation. But for myself and as a basis for my own judgment I did consider the question. I considered it many days after the question was first raised. I considered it in every possible light, and I reached a conclusion which, if I have been able to make my position understood to the Senator, whether he agrees with it or not, I think to be the sound one, that we have at least prima facie evidence of the integrity of those ballots, the identity of the ballots; and that being true, the ballot is the higher and better evidence, particularly where it is quite possible to explain what we might naturally expect to occur in the way of some discrepancies in the ballots. Since the Senator has asked that question, let me conclude with this statement. We are asked to go back to the official count because of a discrepancy between the poll book and the actual ballots found.

I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will follow me. The official count is impeached in the machine vote. Does the Senator understand the proposition? It is impeached according to Brookhart's present contention with the light of every fact before him. He is now claiming nearly a thousand votes more in the machine precincts than the managers of the election gave him according to the official count in Iowa. The official count is impeached in the 789 precincts in which there is exact agreement between the actual ballots and the poll list. The Senator will observe that in those precincts where there is actual agreement Steck gained 1,163 votes and Brookhart gained 699 votes.

I have drawn attention to the physical facts which made the stealage by subtraction an impossibility in this case, unless those charged with fraud are assumed to have had ample time and unsealed the wires and went through the ballots one by one and were careful to hold another election and make an exact tabulation so as not to take too many ballots from the candidate, Steck, in whose behalf we are to assume the fraud was practiced. Senators who are to find the truth in this case are asked to go back and take the official count merely because there is not an exact balancing of the names on the poll books with the ballots in the box, when the official count has been impeached in the machine precincts and has been impeached in the 789 precincts where there is an exact balancing of the number of names on the poll book with the ballots. You ask us to take a thing which on the face of it you are now asserting to be false and fraudulent; you ask us to take an official count which Brookhart to this good day says is false and fraudulent against the actual ballots sent here from the proper officers of Iowa, without evidence of actual fraud, and by your committee recounted at the request of both parties, with Senator Brookhart's campaign manager watching the process, step by step.

I have finished, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask if any Senator desires to speak on the pending question this evening?

Mr. WALSH. I was desirous of proceeding, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] has suggested to me that perhaps we have another engagement, and therefore I will ask leave not to proceed at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator had just as lief go on, of course we should like to have as much time taken to-night as possible on the pending question.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to do so very much, if the other engagement did not require my attendance.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 9, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, April 8, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, the day is Thine; Thou dividest it from the darkness. Separate from us all wrong desires, all false ambitions, and incline our hearts to love Thee and to keep Thy law. Deliver us from evil thinking and from all things that dull our spiritual sense. Be patient with us until we learn to live the life of Thy holy precepts. O teach us over and over again that he lives most who serves best. Let not the evil in our hearts darken the outlook of our souls. Help us to make the world better, but open our eyes to the good that is now in it. Bless all strangers within our gates, and let the angel of Thy merciful providence abide over every fireside throughout our broad land. In life and in death, O Lord, abide with us. Through Christ, our blessed Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE SCHUTZVERBAND

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House Resolution 182, asking certain information of the Secretary of State, and to include in the extension a copy of the resolution and the letters received from the Secretary of State giving certain information called for in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, on March 22, 1926, I introduced H. Res. No. 182, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and provides as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, what information he has, if any, as to the organization and existence in Germany of the Schutzverband, or an organization and association which is fostering and encouraging litigation to recover for German citizens real estate in Germany purchased by American citizens; and the Secretary of State is further directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, what action, if any, has been taken to protect the rights of American citizens so involved.

Apparently from credible sources comes the information that there is a general movement in Germany to restore to German citizens, the original owners, the title to all real estate purchased by foreigners in Germany from 1919 to 1923. The New York Times recently published an article dated at Berlin, February 27, which gave an account of the organization of a protective association known as the Schutzverband. The purpose of this organization is said to be to call attention to all German citizens who sold property to foreigners from the period of 1919 to 1923 to the effect that the courts in Germany have been giving favorable rulings to German citizens and suggesting to such citizens that they apply to the court to have their sales vacated and get the title to their property restored. It is estimated that hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested in Germany by American citizens.

Deeming the matter of vital importance to all American citizens who have purchased property in Germany during this period, and because of the special interest of some of my constituents, I introduced H. Res. 182, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER, chairman of the said committee, has transmitted to me certain correspondence with the Secretary of State, which I desire to be put in the RECORD for the information of the House and country.

Under date of March 30, 1926, Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, transmitted to me the following letter from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 29, 1926.

The Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. PORTER: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of March 23, 1926, inclosing a copy of House Resolution No. 182, introduced by Mr. Woodrum, requesting information concerning an alleged German organization known as the "Schutzverband."

In reply I take pleasure in informing you that the department has already had the matter under consideration, and some time ago instructed the ambassador in Berlin to watch the situation closely and to keep the department informed as to developments. He has also been instructed to report to the department, by cable, such information as he may have, or obtain, relating to this reported association. As soon as his report is received I shall not fail to communicate with you further.

I am, my dear Mr. PORTER,
Sincerely yours,

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

Again, on April 6, 1926, Mr. PORTER transmitted to me the following further communications from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 6, 1926.

The Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PORTER: In further reference to your letter of March 23, 1926, transmitting a copy of House Resolution No. 182, concerning the organization and existence in Germany of the Schutzverband, I beg to inform you that the department has since received two telegrams from the embassy in Berlin, No. 63, March 30, and No. 65, March 31, 1926, paraphrases of which are inclosed for your information. In view of the statement made by Mr. Schurman in his telegram, No. 65, I am inclined to believe that Americans who have purchased property in Germany will have no serious difficulty. In any event, you may rest assured that this department will use every effort to protect legitimate American interests.

I am, my dear Mr. PORTER,
Very sincerely yours,

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

(Two inclosures: Paraphrases of telegrams.)

(Paraphrase of telegram No. 63, March 30, noon.)

In reply to the department's telegram No. 20 of March 27 I am informed by the consul general that he knows definitely of the existence of two such organizations and he believes that there are others. Certain individual lawyers are also known to be active. Such organizations and lawyers may be compared to so-called ambulance followers in America. They direct their activities against all foreigners alike and not Americans in particular, the purpose being to provoke litigation in the hopes of earning fees.

I have discussed the matter informally with the Foreign Office officials, but there does not appear to be very much that they can do even if formal protests were lodged. It must be presumed, at least for the present, that the courts will safeguard American citizens in their rights. Confidentially, I would advise you that the one case so far decided against an American appears to have been very badly defended and is now going forward on an appeal. I was told last week by a New York lawyer whom I know very well and who is the largest American owner in Germany that he has had no trouble whatsoever and he attributes the difficulties of others to faulty legal papers.

SCHURMAN.

(Paraphrase of telegram No. 65, March 31, 1 p. m.)

I was informally advised to-day by the Foreign Office that it has taken a strong stand with the Ministry of Justice of Prussia on this question, and I am assured that American interests will to the fullest extent possible be protected.

SCHURMAN.

The above information will doubtless be of interest to the membership of the House in view of the fact that a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means is now conducting public hearings on H. R. 10820, a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] and known as the Treasury plan for the payment of the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and the return to German nationals of property held by the Allen Property Custody.

COMMISSIONER FREDERICK A. FENNING

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, about two months ago, when I began my investigation of St. Elizabeths Hospital and the connection which Frederick A. Fenning, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, has with the guardianship and estates of numerous veterans of various wars, I knew I was making myself unpopular with certain prominent citizens of the District who use Commissioner Fenning in their business. Since that time I have received three notices that if I pressed this matter against Commissioner Fenning and if I did not hold up, not only would I be ruined but my many friends who are faithful employees of certain departments of government in Washington would likewise be punished.

I realize that Commissioner Fenning is now a prominent citizen here. I realize the prominence of his political friends. I know the tremendous influence and power of the "Big Six" behind him, and when I say the "Big Six" that has no reference to Congress; it is, as you know, in the city.

I am already beginning to feel their influence. My punishment has already begun. Until I began this investigation for the last three years without an exception at every monthly meeting of the chamber of commerce and monthly banquet in Washington I have received a guest invitation, but since I have begun my investigation those invitations have stopped. [Laughter and applause.]

A month ago I was invited as an honor guest to the firemen's banquet held last night. All of the 800 firemen here felt kindly toward me and are my friends. I had introduced, fought for, and helped to pass both through the committee and the Congress a bill which gave them a day off each week in lieu of Sunday, something they had never had before. They were very grateful. I was therefore invited as an honor guest to their banquet last night. I appreciated the invitation as a great honor from these brave men. Yesterday the firemen's president and a distinguished editor of a Washington paper called me out in the hall and very regretfully told me that at that banquet I would be persona non grata to Commissioner Fenning. I did not go, because I knew that the job and welfare of each and all of these 800 worthy men were in the hands of Commissioner Fenning, who could ruin any of them by a mere stroke of the pen.

For a month I have been invited to the big banquet to-night—the real-estate banquet in Washington. I have received notice from one of my realtor friends that my presence there would be persona non grata to Commissioner Fenning, who is also to be there. Hence I shall not go to-night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For just this statement. The gentleman can live very well without going to these banquets, can he not?

Mr. BLANTON. I will do my very best to survive it. I want to say that during the three years, at every monthly banquet of the chamber of commerce, I have only remained three times for their supper. Do you know why I went? I am your acting minority leader on the District Committee. You have the right to expect from me definite, concise information about every piece of District legislation that comes on the floor of the House, and I have gone down there simply as a matter of duty. When I ought to have been at home many times I have gone there to gather information, and when the business meeting would break up I would go home or go back to work at my office. I did not stay to the feasts they gave except on three occasions.

I also introduced a bill, got it through the committee, and helped to pass it through Congress into law, giving the policemen of this city, 1,200 of them, a day off in lieu of Sunday, something they had never had before. Naturally they are my friends and feel kindly toward me. I have always been invited to their banquets. They are to give an unusually big one at the Mayflower Hotel on the 15th of this month. Mr. Fenning is to be their honor guest and principal speaker, and I have not been invited. [Laughter.] My punishment has begun. [Laughter.] Verily, this commissioner has much power and influence, for by the stroke of a pen he could ruin any one of these 1,200 brave policemen.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman seems to be surviving very well.

Mr. BLANTON. But this is just the beginning of my punishment. They say I am to be ruined. Mr. Speaker, I have carefully prepared my speech in logical form, with exhibits and quotations from court records and from records of St. Elizabeths, including clippings and also affidavits of prominent individuals here. I can not read a speech. I never could. I want it to go in the RECORD in logical form, and I want to speak extemporaneously so I can give my colleagues a chance to ask me questions. I therefore ask leave that my speech may go in in logical form without my reading it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman already has that privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will quit my manuscript. [Laughter.] I want to read you the main editorial in the Washington Post this morning:

POST EDITOR PROTECTS COMMISSIONER FENNING

The initial editorial, which is always the one deemed most important editorially, appearing in the Washington Post this morning was inspired by its multimillionaire editor, who, had he lived in Nero's time, would have harmlessly fiddled while Rome burned. He says:

The House Rules Committee has before it several resolutions providing for "investigations" of District officials and institutions, all of which it can well afford to throw in the wastebasket.

One of the resolutions proposes to investigate the legal practice of Commissioner Fenning. The President, in inquiring into Mr. Fenning's qualifications before appointing him commissioner, found nothing objectionable in the maintenance of this private law practice.

Mr. Fenning is entitled to public thanks for rendering his service.

ANYBODY WOULD SUIT HIM, IF OF THE RIGHT KIND

I am reliably informed by one of the most prominent Republicans in Washington that when the "Big Six" went to this millionaire editor and advised that they were thinking of having the President appoint Frederick A. Fenning to succeed Mr. Oyster as commissioner, and asked whether he had any objection, that he replied: "Oh, a negro would suit me, if he is the kind we want." So Commissioner Fenning being the kind the "Big Six" and the millionaire editor wanted, what does he care how many veterans of wars Fenning exploits or how many sane, helpless women Fenning keeps stored away in insane asylums while he robs them?

REJOICES IN AFFRONT GIVEN ME

And on his second page he tells of the annual banquet of the firemen last night, and in large headlines says, "Fenning gives talk—BLANTON not present," and then, under a large sub-heading, "BLANTON does not attend," he says:

Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, failed to attend. Whether it was because of the presence of Commissioner Fenning, whom he has been attacking in Congress, could not be ascertained.

E. F. Colladay (Republican national committeeman) predicted that the bill providing free uniforms would go through.

Was not that funny? And was not it funny that Republican National Committeeman Edward F. Colladay should all of a sudden decide to attend a banquet with Commissioner Fenning, whom he has been defending against my charges and whom he has been trying to protect by trying to keep my resolution from passing to investigate Fenning? It was funny indeed that the most interesting thing he could think of to say to these brave fire fighters of Washington was that my "bill to give them free uniforms would go through." Because it is my bill, and I got it through the committee, and got it passed by the House about two months ago, and it is now in the Senate. But I must get to my subject.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when my investigation concerning the exploitation of veterans of the World War, alleged to be of unsound mind and incarcerated in St. Elizabeths, a Government hospital here for the insane, brought to my attention the combination and concert of action between Dr. William A. White, superintendent of St. Elizabeths, and Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, I never dreamed that such combination extended back for a quarter of a century and began with an exploitation of veterans of the Civil War.

And when my investigation unfolded as incidents to and aiders and abettors of said combination, Undertaker Gawler and Dr. J. Ramsay Nevitt, coroner of the District and brother-in-law to Commissioner Fenning, I never dreamed that they were incidents to a like combination operating together as far back as a quarter of a hundred years ago.

Back tracking this interesting combination has gradually unfolded its history and revealed an almost unbelievable state of facts.

PUBLIC AROUSED 20 YEARS AGO

In April, 1906, 20 years ago, the press of Washington was charging Dr. William A. White and Frederick A. Fenning, Esq., with high crimes and misdemeanors. The Medico-Legal Society, composed of physicians and attorneys of Washington, was likewise charging them with many improper practices. Hon. Frank Clark, until recently our colleague from Florida, also was charging an unlawful combination between Dr. William A. White and Mr. Frederick A. Fenning. He introduced a resolution for a special committee of five to investigate St. Elizabeths, which passed, but when the committee was appointed Frank Clark was not included in its personnel.

FREDERICK A. FENNING PRESENT THROUGHOUT HEARING

The committee organized on May 4, 1906, with Dr. William A. White and Mr. Frederick A. Fenning present. From the dusty basement of the Capitol I have secured a copy of these interesting hearings of 2,251 printed pages. Three members voted a whitewash, and it would seem their report evidently was written by Doctor White himself, while the other two members, James Hay and Robert M. Wallace, filed their separate report, from which I quote the following excerpts:

That attendants have treated patients cruelly, both by blows and neglect, is proved beyond doubt, no less than 40 witnesses having testified to specific instances of cruelty; 26 of them were attendants and ex-attendants. A management under which such instances could happen, and under which they continue to happen, must be faulty. There is a certain amount of callousness displayed both by physicians and attendants, as well as a want of sympathy with these unfortunate people.

The great preponderance of the testimony is that the food is generally badly prepared, badly served, and oftentimes is not of such a kind as to be fit for consumption. It appears that the food served from the general kitchen is cold and unpalatable, that it is sometimes insufficient, and sometimes not fit to eat. Forty-one witnesses testified to one or the other of these conditions, and these witnesses are for the most part employees of the hospital. The meat is frequently bad, inspected by persons who are entirely inexperienced. There is no excuse for any or all of these conditions. The Government of the United States makes a very generous appropriation for the care of these unfortunates, and if properly managed and judiciously expended these appropriations are ample to provide good, palatable food, well cooked and properly served.

It has seemed to us that the manner of commitment of soldiers and sailors to the hospital is not in accord with those principles of law and justice which should be applied in cases involving the liberty and property of the citizens of this country. The law seems to provide that in the case of an enlisted soldier or sailor, or of a retired soldier or sailor, he can be committed to the hospital upon an order of the Secretary of War or of the Navy, as the case may be. It seems to us clear that these people should be entitled to a jury trial before they are deprived of their liberty.

But the case of the soldiers sent to the hospital from the different soldiers' homes is even worse. They are committed to the hospital upon the order of the president of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. No process of any kind is invoked. And from the evidence it appears that the president acts upon the ipse dixit of the surgeons of the different homes. Surely a jury trial ought to be had in these cases, especially when it appears that men have been committed to the hospital who were not insane.

It is difficult to say how much is spent each year for the maintenance and support of this hospital.

It is desired to call attention to the very large powers exercised by the superintendent, who practically appoints every employee of the institution and fixes the salaries of these employees. It would be superfluous to point out the evils which inevitably result from placing in the hands of one man the power not only to fix salaries but to raise and lower them at his will and pleasure.

The superintendent's office is a most important one and great care should be used in filling it. We might call attention to the Maenche case for the purpose of showing to what extent the power of the superintendent extends and how it may be abused. Maenche was superintendent of the laundry, where a large number of people are employed. He was reported on two occasions for an offense, with no investigation and no excuse for not having one, though the charge was well founded.

With the growth of the hospital it has been more and more impossible for the board of visitors to exercise necessary supervision. There are many wards into which the board of visitors do not go once in a year. There should be inspection by disinterested and impartial men whose duty it is to report upon every phase of management, and without fear or favor fearlessly expose any abuse which may exist. It should be inspected by some agency corresponding to lunacy commissions of States. Doctor White opposed such a method of inspection.

The undersigned would also call attention to the loose management of the finances of the institution. There has arisen a good many abuses.

JAMES HAY,
ROBERT M. WALLACE.

TWO OUT OF FIVE

The above report was signed by two of the five Congressmen who conducted the hearing. If one of the others had joined them, the above would have been the majority report submitted to Congress. And the great preponderance of the evidence, in many instances undisputed, supported the above report. As Frederick A. Fenning was merely a private lawyer and not then a public official, he was not mentioned in the report.

BUT FREDERICK A. FENNING WAS MENTIONED IN THE EVIDENCE

As soon as the committee organized the hearing, our former colleague from Florida, Hon. Frank Clark, in the presence of Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, stated:

We expect to show, Mr. Chairman, that it has been the custom of Doctor White to go into court in lunacy proceedings and ask for a writ of lunacy to be issued in the case of some old soldier incarcerated in the asylum, and that it was his invariable practice in the petition for the writ to name Mr. Fenning as the proper person to be named as the committee of the lunatic, Mr. Fenning being an attorney here in the city. We expect to show that usually the attorney who drafted the petition was Mr. Fenning's law partner, and that he received a fee. Mr. Fenning, as the committee, received a fee of 10 per cent, and the court officials received fees, all out of the pittance due to the old soldier by the Government. Our insistence is that a man should not be incarcerated in this hospital for the insane until his insanity has been determined.

THE ABOVE HAPPENED 20 YEARS AGO

Is it not strange that Congressman Clark 20 years ago charged Mr. Frederick A. Fenning with having done just what I am now charging him with doing at this time and with having done continuously for over a quarter of a century? And Congressman Clark, who preferred the charges, requested the committee to permit him to ask the witnesses questions, but this right was denied him. Yet if you will examine page 16 of the hearings, you will see that Mr. Frederick A. Fenning "buted in," attempting to discredit witnesses, and that he was present at each meeting, his presence being noted in the hearings.

TESTIMONY AGAINST FENNING 20 YEARS AGO

I will now quote some excerpts from the testimony of sworn witnesses given at this hearing 20 years ago. This is House of Representatives Report No. 7644, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, with hearings attached, embracing 2,251 printed pages:

Judge A. W. Thomas under oath testified:

My name is A. W. Thomas. I am a member of the District bar, and practice here in Washington. I have had several habeas corpus cases, in bringing inmates before the courts. Among those are the cases of Mr. Logue, and the Corbetts. I found that Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, a member of the law firm of Coldren & Fenning, practicing attorneys, was committee. So I examined the records of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and I found that from September 8, 1904, to November 25, 1905, Mr. Frederick A. Fenning had been appointed committee in 62 cases by the court; that fully three-fourths of those cases were cases of old soldiers. The old soldiers, in the great majority of those cases—in nearly all, in fact—were pensioners, and I examined to see how it was that he had so many of those cases. I found that in nearly all of those three-fourths of the 62 cases he was appointed the committee of the soldier upon the petition of the superintendent, Dr. William A. White, who recommended and suggested his appointment. I found that the petition of Superintendent White was drawn on the letterhead, and on the legal-cap paper and other paper of the law firm of Coldren & Fenning. I found that the records showed that the law firm of Coldren & Fenning represented the petitioner, W. A. White, in the proceedings. I found that in looking over the papers that Mr. Coldren, the law partner of Mr. Fenning, was charging, and was allowed a fee for drawing these petitions of $10, $15, $20, and in some cases $30. The drawing of the petition was a mere trivial matter. Any attorney could draw that very readily. I found that when the petition was sent to the court it was usually accompanied by the affidavit of two of the practicing physicians, under salary at the asylum. For that, in many cases in which settlement has been made of the case by Mr. Fenning, they have received a fee of $10 or more. It occurred to me that the interest of Mr. Fenning in these cases was not that of a mere indifferent person.

APPOINTMENT NOT USUALLY SOUGHT AFTER

The courts usually appoint a committee for the ward of the Government and sometimes the court appoints attorneys, but the appointment is not sought after, nor is it sought after as a source of revenue.

PROFESSIONAL COMMITTEEMAN AIDED BY DOCTOR WHITE

It seemed to me that Mr. Fenning's attitude in the case was that of a professional committeeman, and in that he was largely aided by Superintendent White, who in nine-tenths of the cases suggested his appointment. It occurred to me that the appointment of a committee in these cases seemed superfluous. The pensions of the old soldiers amount to $1,200 or $2,000.

Mr. HAY. The law provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall pay it to the superintendent.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to me that the Secretary of the Interior could make some regulation about that. Mr. Logue had $470 and $80 back pension, had been there six years, and did not want his pension. He said that when he got out he could go and get it. Here was that money safe in the Pension Department. By these proceedings brought by Mr. Fenning he puts his hand in the Pension Department and takes the money out, and in that transfer a very large proportion of that money is somehow distributed to the committeeman, and allowed as doctor's fees, and for various expenses.

Mr. Fenning, in addition to his claim for 10 per cent for collecting the $400, charged for his services in investing this money and made a charge for services in paying it out, and if the interest was collected he would still make a charge for his services in collecting the interest.

AFTER SIX YEARS' INCARCERATION LOGUE CERTIFIED SANE

In the Logue case Mr. Fenning's attitude has not been one such as an ordinary committeeman would show. He placed every obstacle and delay he could to investigating the man's sanity. When Mr. Logue was brought into court Mr. Fenning opposed it and wanted a continuance. He got a continuance, and then still another continuance. Then, when he was finally discharged, I demanded final account of Mr. Fenning, so that Mr. Logue could have his money. Mr. Fenning demurred and said that he should have 30 days. But I said, "This man has no money; in 30 days he will starve." So the matter went over, and in several weeks we got it up. Judge Stafford said to Mr. Fenning, "This money belongs to this man; he is entitled to it; and I order you to pay down $200 cash now to him, and then you can determine the rest." As to the rest of that money, six months have gone by and delays have been put in the way. We have brought proceedings to recover the money, and Mr. Fenning has questioned the law, and the man has not got his money yet; and I do not know that he will ever get it.

Superintendent White finally wrote that he had no objection to Mr. Logue's release, but we said that he must be released as sane. When the time came for the trial Superintendent White signed the certificate of sanity. He had been there nearly six years, and there never was anything the matter with him, except that when he went there he had been treated for alcoholism. He had been perfectly sane ever since.

The same course was pursued in the Corbett case. Those ladies were taken to the asylum without any warning. Their goods were sold (by Mr. Fenning) without any warning. A valuable painting, valued at about $1,200, was sold for almost nothing.

Mr. SMYSER. Do you think, Mr. Thomas, that there is collusion between Doctor White and Mr. Fenning?

Mr. THOMAS. I would have no right to express a criticism of that kind, but I would think that it is exceedingly fortunate for Mr. Fenning that Doctor White recognizes him in that way. Otherwise he would hardly be appointed to so many cases. Probably one-half of all the committee cases in the record show the name of Frederick A. Fenning.

Mr. SMYSER. Do you think there is anything sinister in it?

Mr. THOMAS. I would not feel that it was proper for me to say anything other than that it is very fortunate for Mr. Fenning that it is done. Certainly it must be done not by mere accident, because these petitions are brought by Coldren & Fenning as attorneys for the superintendent. It must have been done by the consent or agreement or knowledge of the superintendent. He signs these things.

Mr. SMYSER. Can you suggest any reason why Doctor White should be interested in naming the committee?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think he would have any proper reason to recommend anybody.

Mr. SMYSER. Would he have any improper reason?

Mr. THOMAS. It must be some personal favoritism, to say the least—some personal favoritism—wishing to help brother Fenning.

VETERAN OF THE CIVIL WAR

One of the said wards of Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, about whom Judge A. W. Thomas testified, Mr. William J. Logue, under oath testified at said hearing that he served in the Federal Army during the Civil War, and continued to serve in said Army for 20 years; that he had been drawing a pension since 1885; that he was sent to St. Elizabeths in 1899; that after six years he secured his release by order of court on habeas corpus; that Fenning had received $648 of his money, and that all he ever got was $13 while in St. Elizabeths and $200 which the court ordered Fenning to pay him.

Let me quote just a few paragraphs from his examination before the hearing:

Mr. LOGUE. I don't know how Mr. Fenning came to draw the pension when it was drawn over there. My name was on the rolls over at the asylum, and the pension was drawn there and turned over to him.

Mr. HAY. Then there was drawn for you while you were at the hospital about $700?

Mr. LOGUE. Six hundred and forty-eight dollars.

Mr. HAY. Six hundred and forty-eight dollars?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes, sir; outside of the interest that would be on it if it had been put at interest, as the man said he did.

Mr. HAY. Were there any different kind of clothes furnished you from what were furnished all the other inmates?

Mr. LOGUE. No, sir.

Mr. HAY. Did you have a different kind of food from what the others had?

Mr. LOGUE. No, sir; I drew the general run of clothes over there, and, of course, the rations were all alike.

Mr. HAY. Did you ever get any chewing tobacco or smoking tobacco outside of what they gave to all of the patients?

Mr. LOGUE. No, sir.

Mr. HAY. What was the necessity of Mr. Fenning qualifying as your guardian, anyhow?

Mr. LOGUE. I do not know. He never seen me and I never seen him. I heard from a patient that this man Fenning was my guardian and that he had my money drawing 4 per cent. I said: "I do not know Fenning." About a month afterward this man Fenning came over and seen me. When I was released I saw him in the court room and he never spoke to me.

Mr. HAY. Did any of the physicians out there talk to you about whether or not you had a pension?

Mr. LOGUE. About two years ago, when I wanted to come to town, Mr. Hummer asked me if I had any money. I said: "Yes; lots of it." He asked me where it was and I said: "In the United States Treasury." He spoke up quick and says: "Are you a pensioner?" I said: "Yes." In about six months after that I heard about this man Fenning being my guardian. While waiting for them to turn me loose I preferred for my money to remain in good hands in the Pension Department, which was better than Fenning's, in my estimation. Now I am poorer than I was when I went there.

Mr. BARCHFIELD. How old a man are you?

Mr. LOGUE. On the 4th of July I will be 66 years old, sir.

HIGH-WALLED GROUNDS AND IRON-BARRED WINDOWS OF ST. ELIZABETHS SHUT OUT THE WORLD.

Can anyone conceive of a more horrible injustice? This faithful old soldier, 66 years old, who had loyally served his country throughout the Civil War and for 20 years thereafter, was forcibly segregated from the rest of the world and buried behind the iron bars of St. Elizabeths for six long years when he was not of unsound mind but sane, and was not only proven of sound mind by a jury but was certified to be of sound mind by Dr. William A. White himself, when Judge A. W. Thomas forced a hearing before the courts. And during this time Mr. Frederick A. Fenning had exploited his money and had made every attempt possible to prevent his regaining his deserved liberty. Now, let us look into the Corbett case, mentioned by Judge Thomas.

Miss Cornelia L. Corbett testified under oath:

Miss CORBETT. Yes, sir; we (her mother and herself) were taken out there Saturday afternoon, June 11, 1904.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether any proceedings were had before you were taken out there? Was there a regular court commitment?

Miss CORBETT. The day we were taken there they came in without any warning whatever. We had not the least idea that any such thing was premeditated. We were taken right out of the house. They had a patrol wagon in front of the house. They had a large Irish policeman and a private detective, a woman, I do not know who she was, a lady physician, and a large black policeman; and they put us in a patrol wagon, and there were two men on the front seat of this wagon. We were taken right over to St. Elizabeths without any warning whatever. They came right in our house.

Mr. SMYSER. Have you seen the board of visitors?

Miss CORBETT. No, sir; I have never seen them. I think they have visited the building occasionally—not all of them, but a few of the members.

Mr. SMYSER. Have you ever had a talk with any of them?

Miss CORBETT. No, sir.

Mr. SMYSER. Do you not have a separate room?

Miss CORBETT. Yes, sir; with my mother.

The CHAIRMAN. You have been taking care of your own room?

Miss CORBETT. Yes, sir. I have taken charge of everything about myself, ever since I have been there. Even when my mother was ill I attended to her altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. You nursed her?

Miss CORBETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. What was the character of her illness?

Miss CORBETT. Soon after she was taken over the shock was so great and the humiliation, altogether, that she had a slight stroke of paralysis, and she was ill for a number of weeks—very ill.

Mr. HAY. You have taken complete charge of her?

Miss CORBETT. Yes, sir. Occasionally I would have to call on the nurses to help me; but very seldom.

Mr. HAY. Is there anything you desire to say yourself, Miss Corbett?

Miss CORBETT. Well, only of the injustice of the whole proceeding—of being taken out of our home in the way we were. And then we were taken to court after we had been in St. Elizabeths two weeks; and in three weeks' time the contents of the whole home were sold without our knowledge, and sold for a very small sum. Of course, that naturally affected us very much. And then they told us after all our things were disposed of that unless we had money or a home to go to that that would affect our being allowed to go free. Of course, we were thrown in the insane asylum without any justice, and while we were in there everything we had was disposed of.

Mr. HAY. You do not know who sold them?

Miss CORBETT. Mr. Fenning, Lawyer Fenning, was given authority—what they call the committee in charge of our affairs—and he sold them. He was the one who sold them.

The CHAIRMAN. After you went to the hospital, were you taken to the Supreme Court of the District?

Miss CORBETT. On the 24th of June. We were taken in on June 11, and the 24th we were taken to court; but we were not allowed any witnesses.

Mr. HAY. You do not know how much the personal property was sold for do you?

Miss CORBETT. Yes, sir; they told us it was sold for nearly $500.

Mr. HAY. What kind of personal property was it?

Miss CORBETT. We had very valuable paintings, pictures, books, and some rare pieces of furniture and bric-a-brac. They sold an organ for $40 that cost over $400. One painting cost $1,500; and we had a great many rare things—heirlooms and personal property, even my writing desk. They sold the desk and sorted out what letters they wanted to destroy, and gave me those that were of no use.

Mr. HAY. What do you do, Miss Corbett?

Miss CORBETT. I embroider and do all kinds of fancy work, and I have made a great many things.

Mr. HAY. Have you any piece of embroidery with you?

Miss CORBETT. I have this waist [indicating waist worn by witness] that I embroidered. That is one thing. But I have a great many other things—colored embroidery—in silk.

FREDERICK A. FENNING TESTIFIED 20 YEARS AGO

I will now quote some very interesting excerpts from the testimony of Frederick A. Fenning before said hearing in 1906. His admissions then are most damaging just now. I quote only such portions as I deem material:

Frederick A. Fenning, having been duly sworn, testified:

Mr. HAY. Mr. Fenning, you are a practicing attorney here?

Mr. FENNING. I am.

Mr. HAY. How long have you been at the bar?

Mr. FENNING. Nearly five years.

Mr. HAY. How long have you been employed in these cases at the hospital?

Mr. FENNING. Well, if the committee please, I can give you a rather concise statement as to how I became connected with these cases.

Mr. HAY. Yes; go ahead.

Mr. FENNING. When I was at the United States pension agency, in the Government service, I had charge for a good many years of the payments of pensions to fiduciaries. All of the payments to guardians, committees, or conservators have been through me.

It seemed to me there was a field here for a man to act as what might be called a quasi public guardian.

Within two months after I resigned from the Government service and took that up, business of that nature began to come in; and I have been appointed and I am now committee of, I think, about 65 lunatics, and 1 habitual drunkard and guardian of about 7 minor children.

When I took that matter up with some of the judges of the courts, as I did in the first instance, and told them what I was ready to do, Mr. Justice Barnard, who was then holding probate court and also hearing lunacy cases, remarked that he would be glad to appoint me in such cases, but he was practically in every case guided by the recommendation of the petition; that if a petition came to him suggesting some one else, and that person was a proper person; he should feel that he ought to appoint that person. Then it was up to me to see that I was the person suggested in the petition.

IS NOT THAT ADMISSION MOST REMARKABLE?

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that is the most remarkable admission that I ever heard any attorney, who claimed reputable standing, make. Did you get its full significance? Mr. Frederick A. Fenning back in 1906 then testified: "Then it was up to me to see that I was the person suggested in the petition." Is there no law against barratry here in the District of Columbia? Is there no bar association to regulate such indecent "begging for law business"? But let me quote further excerpts from his testimony:

TESTIMONY OF MR. FENNING IN 1906, CONTINUED:

Mr. FENNING. Then it was up to me to see that I was the person suggested in the petition, because the judge had made it rather plain to me that he did not care, unless there was an unusual reason for it, to neglect the suggestion shown in the petition.

With particular reference to what physicians and how many physicians should testify in lunacy cases, Justice Barnard agreed with me that in accordance with the old Maryland law there ought to be the testimony of at least two medical men. The conclusion was reached that the ideal arrangement would be to have one physician from the hospital and one physician from the city.

I have had Doctor Nevitt, who used to be the police surgeon here, and who has testified on the stand that while he was police surgeon he testified in from 600 to 800 cases.

The question came up years ago as to whether a physician on the pay roll at the Government Hospital for the Insane could properly receive a fee in those cases. So I submitted to the justice in November, 1904, bills for $10 each that I had received from Doctor Hummer, of the hospital, and from Doctor Nevitt, of the city. He asked me if I could find any law on the subject which would operate to prevent a physician at the hospital receiving a fee, and my recollection is that the only law I could find and cite was the statute which provides that an employee of the United States testifying in a case in which the United States is a party shall receive nothing in addition to his actual expenses. He signed this order:

"In re John Crowe, lunatic, lunacy No. 1652.

"The committee in the above-entitled cause, having appeared in court and informed the court that he has received bills for $10 each from Dr. Harry R. Hummer, Government Hospital for the Insane, and Dr. J. Ramsay Nevitt, Washington, D. C., for their services as expert witnesses at the lunacy proceeding held in this cause June 20, 1904, it is by the court this 14th day of November, 1904,

"Ordered, That the committee be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the said bills from the funds of said lunatic.

"THOMAS H. ANDERSON, Justice."

Charles O'Neil was a retired soldier of the Marine Corps. I was appointed in this case at the suggestion of Doctor White, who filed the petition. I took in altogether $250.72 belonging to that man, and I paid for the ward's burial, and that left a balance in my hands amounting to less than $75. I suggested "that this estate can best be closed by authorizing the purchase of a suitable headstone to be erected over the grave of the ward." The court agreed.

Mr. HAY. As I understand it, you went into this business on your own account. You saw that there was a field here, as you say, and you thought that it would be a good field, and you have continued in that line—

Mr. FENNING. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. And you have continued not only to solicit these cases from the Government Hospital for the Insane but from others.

Mr. FENNING. From every institution and from all the attorneys I could reach; from anybody who was connected in any way with a case requiring the services of a fiduciary.

Mr. HAY. Some intimation has been made that perhaps you were, to use a vulgar term, in cahoots with somebody out at that institution, and that they get a part of your fees, or that you compensate them in consideration of the fact that you are employed in a case. Is there anything in that?

Mr. FENNING. No; there is absolutely nothing in that.

Mr. HAY. A good deal has been said about the case of Miss or Mrs. Corbett. I wish you would explain about that. It has been stated here, and I believe there has appeared in the public print in some newspaper—

Mr. BARCHFIELD. Truth.

Mr. HAY. Yes—that you sold a large amount of property there for a very small amount of money.

Mr. FENNING. I can tell you in a few words the history of that case. Those ladies were adjudged insane about June, 1904—Mrs. Corbett and her daughter.

Doctor Hamlin . . . said that the furniture and clothing and personal belongings of these ladies were out in a house in Eckington which they had been occupying for some time. I at once filed with the chief of police a certificate showing my authority, and he turned the property over to me. I told the superintendent that there was one question that I wanted to have definitely answered and that was whether there was a possibility of the early recovery, or the recovery within a reasonable period, of either of those women. His answer to me was that the chance was about one in a million, and then I made up my mind that it was up to me, as committee, to do something, and the only thing to do was to get rid of the expenses. It would have been a very foolish thing to have stored that stuff. . . . I took those slips, those informal bids, for that is what they were, and I went over them and found out who would pay the highest price for each of the articles named on the slips. Then I took this offer of prices to an auctioneer. He went out there with me and certified that he had personally examined the articles named in the schedule and that the prices named were good, fair prices for the articles. * * * As soon as I could after that, and after giving the announcement, I conducted that sale in person. I got for the goods that were sold an amount that was very much in excess of what the auctioneers expected to realize from the sale. * * * You must recollect that Mr. Corbett died some eight or nine years ago, and his affairs were administered in Virginia. * * * His executors received about $25,000 from the sale of the real property, and about $15,000 from the sale of the personal property, and claimed that Mrs. Corbett elected to take under the will, and for that reason she has not received anything to speak of from the estate.

Mr. HAY. There is a case of a man named Logue.

Mr. FENNING. * * * Mr. A. W. Thomas testifies here that my attitude was not that of an ordinary committeeman in the case; that he came to me and made a demand for the money—and he did. He came to my office immediately after Mr. Logue was discharged on habeas corpus proceedings and demanded the money. I told him most assuredly I was not going to pay him or Logue or anybody else the money until I accounted to the court. I probably told him that under the rules of the court after the auditor reported the account would have to lie 30 days in the clerk's office before it was approved. * * * Mr. Gawler, the undertaker, was in the next room and heard me fire him out.

I am going on this record here as saying that I am willing to do business by wholesale whenever I can get it.

Mr. HAY. Where they are inmates of the hospital and are taken by practically everybody to be insane, what is the use of putting their estates to the expense of these proceedings?

Mr. FENNING. As regards men who are soldiers, there is no reason why Congress could not control the whole thing. It would probably take the form of an act authorizing the department to pay the arrearages directly to the superintendent of the hospital, just as was done in the matter of pensions.

Mr. HAY. And if the soldiers were discharged cured it would be paid over to them?

Mr. FENNING. There is no doubt that Congress can have full authority over any fund coming from the United States.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Will my distinguished friend the gentleman from Texas tell us whether he personally knows that it was a violation of law for the doctors at St. Elizabeths to join in the commitment?

Mr. BLANTON. And receive a fee for it?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state that it is against the law. I know that my distinguished friend from New York is one of the most renowned alienists of the United States. Doctor White is another alienist. [Laughter.] There is a fellow feeling between alienists. Doctor White is the kind of alienist who, although the law says—the fundamental law that created St. Elizabeths—that he must give every moment of his time to that institution, he is the kind of alienist who goes to New York to testify, and goes to Philadelphia to testify, and goes to Baltimore to testify, as he admitted he did, and he went once to Chicago, where he stayed two weeks in the Leopold and Loeb case and testified and received, as he says, $250 a day for two weeks for selling his testimony to save the necks of these two educated murderers who ought to have been hung.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman from Texas wants to be fair even to alienists.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and when I get through you will quit your friend Doctor White, the alienist at St. Elizabeths Hospital, because I have all confidence in my distinguished friend from New York, and I know that his heart is right.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman give me 10 minutes to reply?

Mr. BLANTON. I will not object, but I do not want the gentleman to take up my time.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. What the gentleman says is important, and I wonder whether it will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The gentleman put in his speech a few minutes ago, and I wondered whether this one he is now making will be printed.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to revise it and put it in a logical form.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. I must continue where I left off quoting the testimony Frederick A. Fenning gave under oath 20 years ago, before the congressional hearing, to wit:

Mr. HAY. Mr. Fenning, some criticism has been made by some of these gentlemen of the fact that you have in some cases in which you were guardian paid a fee to Mr. Coldren, your law partner.

Mr. FENNING. In cases in which Mr. Coldren appears as attorney he appears as attorney for the case. The practice is to have an attorney in each case. If I am appointed committee in a case and no attorney handles the case—if I handle the case myself—then I am entitled to under our practice and the auditor will allow me—additional compensation for what I have done. He will add to what would otherwise be the commission a sum equal to what I would have paid to other counsel.

Mr. SMYSER. He whips the devil around the other way.

Mr. FENNING. Is that what you call it in Ohio?

Mr. SMYSER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. I think the point of criticism was not as to the fact of the employment of counsel but the fact that Mr. Coldren was your law partner.

Mr. FENNING. I can not see how that would enter into it, Mr. Hay, or how that could be criticized, for, as I have just stated, if I did the work myself I would get additional compensation for it. I do not think it looks very well on the face of it to have an attorney who handles the case also act as committee. I think if you can bring in a disinterested man, as an attorney usually is, and have him act as counsel in the case, it shows better on the record. It does not have a cut-and-dried appearance, as you might say.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not that same condition of affairs obtain where a man's partner acts for him? I mean, does it not have the same cut-and-dried appearance?

Mr. FENNING. I can not see the difference, Mr. Chairman, between Mr. Coldren acting as counsel in a case in which I am committee and Mr. Lerner, the general counsel of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., acting as counsel in a case in which the Washington Loan & Trust Co. is committee.

Mr. HAY. In other words, you do not share these fees with Mr. Coldren, do you?

Mr. FENNING. Mr. Coldren gets the counsel fee, and I get the commission.

Mr. HAY. But do you not share with Mr. Coldren any of the counsel fees?

Mr. FENNING. It all goes to him as counsel, and all the commission comes to me as the committee.

SUPPOSE THE INTERROGATION HAD STOPPED THERE?

If the committee had stopped there, just the opposite of the real facts would have been understood, as Mr. Fenning tried to make it appear that there was no general division of fees between him and his law partner of this double-fee system. But the committee, with a corkscrew, had to twist the facts out of him by pinning him down with direct specific questions that he could not longer evade. Note the further examination:

Mr. SMYSER. Do you divide up? Do you throw it into hodgepodge and then divide?

Mr. FENNING. Mr. Coldren and I have a general partnership.

Mr. SMYSER. These fees that he gets in these cases, are they divided with you?

Mr. FENNING. All professional business done by either member of the firm is considered as firm business—yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. In whatever way it comes in?

Mr. FENNING. Yes; the professional time of each member of the firm belongs to the firm.

Mr. SMYSER. Do you yourself feel that you have transgressed the ethics of the profession?

Mr. FENNING. No, sir; I do not. I have been criticized by one or two members of the Medico-Legal Society in this proceeding, and it has been said that I have appeared in court and have endeavored to oppose habeas corpus proceedings and have thrown obstacles in the way of persons getting out of the hospital. I am frank to admit that in the Corbett case—I am the committee of Mrs. Corbett—I went into the court when the habeas corpus proceeding was about to be heard and told the judge that as committee of Mrs. Corbett I had looked carefully into the case since she had filed her petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and my opinion was that the best interests of Mrs. Corbett demanded that she remain where she was, and that that being the case I was going to appear with the district attorney in opposition to the issuance of the writ.

THAT WAS A MOST DAMNING ADMISSION

Note that Frederick A. Fenning admitted that he kept the court from discharging Miss Cornelia Corbett and her widowed mother, when they were trying to get out of St. Elizabeths. But history has revealed his infamous perfidy. For shortly after said hearings had concluded, Hon. Robert H. McNeill, a Washington attorney, had Miss Cornelia Corbett and her mother brought before the court on writ of habeas corpus, and after trial, they were declared to be absolutely sane and of sound mind, and by the court were liberated from St. Elizabeths. It is not possible for any of us to picture all of the suffering, humiliation and injury these two poor defenseless women underwent during the nearly three years that Frederick

A. Fenning wrongfully kept them incarcerated in this insane asylum, in order to draw his 10 per cent from their property which he had squandered.

Remember how he sold it. And he called their most treasured belongings "that stuff." His exact words were—

It would have been a very foolish thing to have stored that stuff.

He did not accidentally say "that stuff," because just a minute before he used the expression "in caring for that stuff." It was not "stuff" to these poor helpless women. It was all they had. It was what constituted their home. It was family heirlooms of several generations. It meant everything to them. And you must not forget how Miss Corbett testified that she and her mother were cruelly taken from their home and shanghaied into St. Elizabeths Insane Asylum. Any man of ordinary judgment ought to have known that both mother and daughter would not lose their minds simultaneously except under extraordinary situations of fright. It is almost providential that they did not lose their minds, for this is what Miss Corbett testified:

MISS CORBETT. The day we were taken there they came in without any warning whatever. We had not the least idea that any such thing was premeditated. We were taken right out of the house. They had a patrol wagon in front of the house. They had a large Irish policeman and a private detective, a woman—I don't know who she was—a lady physician, and a large, black policeman; and they put us in a patrol wagon, and there were two men on the front seat of this wagon. We were taken right over to St. Elizabeths without any warning whatever.

And then she told how the shock and humiliation nearly killed her mother and how she had to nurse her. My God! It makes my blood boil to think about it, especially when I remember that this vulture is now a Commissioner of the District of Columbia, living in honor and luxury. But, thank God, this brave attorney, Robert H. McNeill, did not stop when he forced their release through habeas corpus, but he brought suit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against Frederick A. Fenning and by the verdict of a jury of his peers forced him to pay back to Miss Corbett part of that which the court held Frederick A. Fenning had defrauded them out of when he sold their property for less than it was worth. I would hate to be a judge and decide what punishment would be adequate for the sufferings Frederick A. Fenning caused these poor women. Miss Cornelia Corbett has filled an honored position in this city ever since she was liberated, but her poor mother is now dead.

WHAT MISS CORNELIA L. CORBETT SAYS ABOUT IT NOW

I, Miss Cornelia L. Corbett, being duly sworn, upon my oath, state: After my father's death, his estate consisting of at least $75,000 was handled by dishonest executors; my mother and I were living in Eckington, then a suburb of Washington, on June 11, 1904, the executors having forced the sale of our former home on M Street NW.; there had never been any impairment of my mother's mind, or of my own, of any kind whatever; without any warning whatever on the afternoon of June 11, 1904, my mother and I were placed in the patrol wagon and forcibly carried to St. Elizabeths, just as detailed in my testimony which I gave before the congressional committee, when I testified at the hearing on May 7, 1906; in the corps of officers sent for us, one was a large negro policeman; in our first application for habeas corpus Mr. Frederick A. Fenning prevented our having any witnesses, and he caused the court not to release us, but to remand us back to St. Elizabeths without a proper hearing, and he did everything within his power to obstruct our efforts to get out, and to keep us there; the cruel shock and humiliation nearly killed my mother; no one will ever know just how much we both suffered there; Mr. Fenning practically gave away all of our household effects, the accumulation of a lifetime; he sold all of same for about $600, out of which my mother received only $20 in cash, and had a dentist bill of $25 paid; and I received nothing; after the said hearing in May, 1906, Hon. Robert H. McNeill, an attorney of Washington, had granted a writ of habeas corpus, and through trial in court had us both declared sane and of sound mind, and by order of court discharged from St. Elizabeths, where for two years and four months Mr. Frederick A. Fenning had kept us incarcerated behind bars; I then brought suit against Mr. Fenning for my part of the effects he had sold, and the bill of particulars attached to my declaration in cause No. 49104, law, will show just what he had squandered of my property; he pleaded as an offset $100 which he claimed he owed my mother, and it was allowed against my suit, but before a jury I secured a verdict against him and the judgment of the court, but he was able to cut my judgment down far below what really was due me; he did not appeal from my judgment, and after nearly two years I finally was able to make him pay it.

My mother was never able to collect anything from my father's estate, and it was all squandered. If Mr. Frederick A. Fenning had not kept my mother and myself unjustly shut up behind the bars of St. Elizabeths for two years and four months we would have been able in all probability to have recovered something from my father's estate. I was released with my mother from St. Elizabeths under said order of court in October, 1906, and since then I have been employed in clerical capacities here in Washington. My mother had her life shortened very materially by that awful experience in St. Elizabeths, and she died sometime ago. It makes me shudder now to think of all the suffering Mr. Frederick A. Fenning caused us; and, just to think, he did it all for the fees and commissions he got out of our property. I am not vindictive, but I do appeal to the Congress of the United States to see to it that this man is not permitted to occupy the important position of Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

MISS CORNELIA L. CORBETT.

Sworn to and subscribed by the said Miss Cornelia L. Corbett before me, the undersigned notary, on this the 6th day of April, A. D. 1926. Given under my hand and seal of office.

[SEAL.]

HOWARD F. BRESEE,

Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

My commission expires May 9, 1926.

JUST WHAT SHOULD BE HIS PROPER PUNISHMENT?

If Frederick A. Fenning were now placed in a penitentiary and kept there 25 years the punishment would hardly be adequate for all of the injustice and suffering he has caused these two poor, helpless women alone, not considering the many, many others he has robbed and defrauded.

Attorneys for Miss Corbett.

Note that no unusual price was fixed on any article, but that at present prices they would be worth several times the amount asked. For instance, note that she asked only $14 for her mattresses and only $11 for eight feather pillows and two feather bolsters.

BUYING FRIENDSHIP OF HOSPITAL DOCTORS WITH WARDS' MONEY

Remember that Frederick A. Fenning testified that he persuaded the court to allow a fee of $10 to the physician in St.

Elizabeths who signed the certificate that a person was of unsound mind. To show just how careless Mr. Fenning was with his ward's money, I quote from said 1906 hearing the following excerpts from one of the senior assistants of St. Elizabeths, Doctor Hummer:

Mr. HAY. How many of these cases have you appeared in?

Doctor HUMMER. Why, I never stopped to calculate it. I suppose 40 or 50, and possibly more.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you get paid for your services in the Bastin case?

Doctor HUMMER. Yes; I got a fee of $25 for examining that man.

The CHAIRMAN. Who paid you that?

Doctor HUMMER. Mr. Fenning paid me.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the other physician?

Doctor HUMMER. The other physician was Doctor Nevitt, Coroner Nevitt. He is now coroner for the District. As near as I remember, the judge said, "What do you expect to pay these men for their services?" "Well," he says, "a reasonable amount." The judge says: "What do you suppose is a reasonable amount?" He said, "I think a fee of $25," and I am informed that the judge signed an order authorizing him to pay two physicians a fee of $25.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the usual compensation given in these cases?

Doctor HUMMER. Usually the compensation is $10, sir.

Mr. HAY. Did you make any charge yourself or just leave it to Mr. Fenning?

Doctor HUMMER. Mr. Fenning called me up and said, "I think you are entitled to a fee for your services here," and I said, "All right; I will accept a fee."

Mr. HAY. You did not fix the fee?

Doctor HUMMER. No; I don't believe I said a word about a fee.

DR. J. RAMSAY NEVITT WAS HANDY ON CORONER CERTIFICATES

It will be remembered that Doctor Nevitt is a brother-in-law of Frederick A. Fenning. Since August, 1900, he has been coroner of the District. And the hearing of 1906 shows that Mr. Fenning used him as one of his physicians to swear his wards into St. Elizabeths, and for which Mr. Fenning paid him $10 per, except we know that in the Bastin case he paid him $25, notwithstanding that he was coroner. And in this hearing in 1906 complaint was then made that the coroner's certificate of death in the Brown case didn't state the real cause, as said patient had been allowed to burn by steam. Let me quote the following excerpts:

Mr. HAY. What was the charge about this man Brown?

Doctor NEVITT. The charge was that he did not die from the cause of death as recorded in the death certificate; but that he died from an injury.

Mr. SMYSER. Have you seen strait-jackets in use out there?

Doctor NEVITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMYSER. How frequently?

Doctor NEVITT. I have seen them on two occasions.

UNDERTAKER GAWLER

I quote from the 1906 hearings the following:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your business, Mr. Gawler?

Mr. GAWLER. Undertaker.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you frequently receive bodies from St. Elizabeths?

Mr. GAWLER. Very frequently; yes, sir.

Mr. WALLACE. How many do you get over there a year?

Mr. GAWLER. We get, I should say, about 45 or 50.

FENNING ATTORNEY FOR GAWLER

I have been reliably informed that Frederick A. Fenning has for years been attorney for Undertaker Gawler, and that he is a director of and owns stock in the company, and to ascertain the real facts I wrote to them the following letter, and received in reply their evasive answer:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1926.

PRESIDENT, JOSEPH GAWLER'S SONS (INC.),
730 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: For use of our Committee on the District of Columbia will you kindly advise me of the following:

- (1) Is Mr. Frederick A. Fenning now attorney for your firm?
- (2) If he is not, then when did he cease to be such attorney?
- (3) Is Mr. Frederick A. Fenning now a director of your corporation? If not, was he ever a director of same, and, if so, when did he cease to be such director?
- (4) Does Mr. Frederick A. Fenning now own any stock in your corporation? If so, how much. And, if not, did he ever own any such stock, and, if so, how much, and when did he dispose of same?
- (5) Within the last 12 months, how many wards of Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, out at St. Elizabeths, have you acted as undertaker for when they died?

We have a lot of testimony concerning the above, which we are checking up, and we want to find out just what part of same is true, as we don't want to do an injustice either to you or to Mr. Fenning. Please let me have the above information frankly at your earliest convenience and oblige.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

WAS THERE ANYTHING ASKED HARD TO ANSWER?

Just why should not Mr. Gawler furnish the above information to a Member of Congress? What was there improper about this letter? If there were no improper relation existing between Undertaker Gawler and Commissioner Fenning, why should not Mr. Gawler answer and say just what connection Mr. Fenning had with this business? Why should not Mr. Gawler be just as willing to give me the information as to give it to Chairman ZIEHLMAN? If Democrats were in power, I would probably be chairman instead of Mr. ZIEHLMAN. Hence we may apply the law respecting depositions, that when the adversary party refused to answer a proper question it is taken as confessed against him. Because Gawler refused to answer any of said questions, all of which were proper. Here is his reply:

JOSEPH GAWLER'S SONS (INC.),
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1926.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of your letter of recent date asking numerous questions as to Mr. Frederick A. Fenning and as to the business of this corporation.

We note that your letter states this information is for the use of the District Committee. Upon receipt of a request from the chairman of that committee, or from the chairman of any other committee of Congress, such request will have our immediate attention.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH GAWLER'S SONS (INC.),
By ALFRED B. GAWLER, President.

SUPT. WILLIAM A. WHITE 20 YEARS AGO

In their findings, based on their hearings 20 years ago, the committee reported:

The statutes provide that the objects of this insane asylum shall be the most humane care and enlightened curative treatment of the insane of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the District of Columbia; that the superintendent shall receive $4,000 a year, shall be a well-educated physician, possessing competent experience in the care and treatment of the insane, who shall reside on the premises and devote his whole time to the welfare of the institution.

Dr. William A. White, superintendent, is professor of nervous and mental diseases in Georgetown University and professor of mental disease in George Washington University.

As to charges made in regard to improper bathing of patients in the same water that had been used by other patients, it appears from the testimony that in one or two instances this had been done.

On rare occasions a garment called a camisole is used.

During the time the committee visited the institution handcuffs were used on one individual.

Strait-jackets in St. Elizabeths do not exist.

LAST STATEMENT PROVES WHITWASH

The last statement of the majority report absolutely proves that it whitewashed Doctor White, for remember that Dr. J. Ramsay Nevitt, then coroner of the District and now coroner of the District and brother-in-law of Commissioner Fenning, testified that he had seen a strait-jacket used there on two occasions. And the majority report stated:

Altogether there are approximately 700 employees in the hospital; 300 come in contact with patients; and that the average number of patients there is 2,600.

And the committee recommended that "the law relative to the commitment of patients should be repealed and a new law enacted." Why did the three men signing the whitewash report recommend that? They had become convinced that people were being improperly and unjustly committed there.

TESTIMONY OF DR. WILLIAM A. WHITE 20 YEARS AGO

From the testimony of Dr. William A. White, given under oath before the congressional hearing 20 years ago, I will now quote the following excerpts:

The CHAIRMAN. You say the appropriation for the government of St. Elizabeths is given to you in a lump sum?

Doctor WHITE. In a lump sum; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you can expend it entirely in your own discretion?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I was coming to maintenance. You live in the asylum, do you not, Doctor?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir. * * * the men who are supposed to give their entire time to the institution are entitled, or it has been conceded they are entitled, to the maintenance of themselves and their families.

Mr. SMYER. Who concedes it?

Doctor WHITE. It has always been done. It has always been the custom.

Mr. SMYER. Suppose it has. How did it have its origin?

Doctor WHITE. I don't know.

CONCERNING APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIANS

Mr. HAY. Does the court act upon your petition?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir; usually upon my petition.

Mr. HAY. As to who the guardian shall be?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir; in many instances.

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, when this petition is prepared is there a nomination of some particular person for guardian?

Doctor WHITE. In the petition?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir; Mr. Fenning has usually been mentioned in the petition.

PHILIP THOMAS CASE

Mr. HAY. This is the guardian's report. He was appointed guardian on February 13, 1905, and he filed his final report in January, 1906. I see that he paid the coroner (Doctor Nevitt) a fee of $10, not as coroner but as a physician and witness before the court and that he paid Doctor Toner a fee of $10.

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. And the whole of the estate going into the hands of the guardian was $226 and some cents. Is it required under the law that two physicians shall give evidence before the court?

Doctor WHITE. I think so.

Mr. HAY. Then he charges a counsel fee of $25, which he paid, to a Mr. Coldren. Then he charged a commission of $22.61, which would make in fees, outside of clerk's fees, $67, the estate amounting to $226. Do you think that is reasonable—that is, where a gentleman does all the business of this character? Those are ex parte proceedings.

Doctor WHITE. I do not know Philip Thomas.

Mr. HAY. He was a private soldier; that is all.

DESPITE LAW DOES NOT DEVOTE ALL OF HIS TIME

Mr. SMYER. Are you called to Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York as a witness at different times?

Doctor WHITE. Once in a great while.

REMEMBER LEOPOLD AND LOEB, CHICAGO, AT $250 PER DAY

Mr. WALLACE. Doctor, were you ever the superintendent of any asylum for the insane before coming to St. Elizabeths?

Doctor WHITE. I was not.

Mr. WALLACE. There has been a good deal of talk about carriages and buggies. How many carriages and buggies have been furnished for your personal use?

Doctor WHITE. There are three carriages there that I use myself.

Mr. WALLACE. And how many horses?

Doctor WHITE. Two.

Mr. WALLACE. For your personal use?

Doctor WHITE. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. How many automobiles are furnished for your personal use?

Doctor WHITE. Two.

Mr. WALLACE. You have already said that you are a single man?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALLACE. How many servants have you to care for the buggies, carriages, horses, and automobiles which are furnished for your personal use?

Doctor WHITE. They are all in the general stable, and are cared for by the stable force.

Mr. WALLACE. They are all general employees there, whose board is paid for by the Government?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir. We have a large stable, with a good many horses and a great many carriages, and they are all cared for by the general stable force. Of course, there is one man who drives for me usually, but his duties are not solely confined to that.

Mr. WALLACE. How many are there in that stable force?

Doctor WHITE. I should say there are perhaps a dozen men over there in the stable. I could not tell accurately.

WHERE GEORGE ROTHWELL BROWN GOT HIS POOH-BAH

Mr. WALLACE. Doctor, what is a Pooch-Bah?

Doctor WHITE. Pooch-Bah was a character in Mikado.

Mr. WALLACE. He was a sort of a generalissimo, was he not? That is what you meant by saying upon one occasion that "you were mayor, financier, and everything else over there"?

Doctor WHITE. Perhaps. I saw it in the Times last night.

Mr. WALLACE. This was in the Washington Star.

Doctor WHITE. I might have said it.

Mr. WALLACE. Who first introduced Mr. Frederick A. Fenning to you and suggested the arrangement you made with him, whereby you executed so many petitions for his appointment as committee over the persons and properties of your ex-soldier patients?

Doctor WHITE. He may have introduced himself. I don't recall.

Mr. WALLACE. Did you have any knowledge of the fact that Doctor Nichols, Doctor Toner, Doctor Hummer, and others of your official staff, were getting fees of $10 or more out of these ex-soldiers' pensions for testifying in these Fenning cases?

Doctor WHITE. I had knowledge they were getting a fee of $10.

Mr. WALLACE. For the purpose of preparing these petitions in lunacy, does Mr. Fenning have free access to the hospital records of these cases and their army records?

Doctor WHITE. I think so.

Mr. WALLACE. Doctor, I believe you stated something about $30,000 loss on the farm, did you not?

Doctor WHITE. Somebody else did.

Mr. WALLACE. Did Doctor Richardson, in his report for 1901, recommend abandoning general farming?

Doctor WHITE. I don't know, sir.

Mr. HAY. Would it not be a good thing for the Government to have a lunacy commission to inspect this institution?

Doctor WHITE. I can not see that anything would be accomplished. I do not see anything to be gained by it, Mr. Hay.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you know about the George Brown case?

Doctor WHITE. The scald case?

The CHAIRMAN. Brown.

Doctor WHITE. Yes; a man who was scalded.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Doctor WHITE. I don't know that I can say anything about that, sir, except that I know the man was scalded.

The CHAIRMAN. You know the case of the Corbetts, do you not?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They were a mother and daughter, were they not?

Doctor WHITE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the committee appointed?

Doctor WHITE. Mr. Fenning.

FROM 20 YEARS AGO TO PRESENT

I have neither the time nor space to quote further from the hearing of 1906. I wish that every colleague here would read in that record of 2,251 printed pages the many, many cases of cruelty to our veterans of the Civil War and other poor unfortunates. How Congress after Congress has permitted Dr. William A. White to remain there throughout all these years is beyond my comprehension. But I desire to show that conditions there are growing worse all the time. When Congressmen go to St. Elizabeths they are taken to the "show wards" there, and they come away with a very erroneous impression, not knowing of all those immense grounds and buildings contain.

ARTICLES IN POST, 1923

In the issues of March 31, 1923, and April 1, 1923, appeared articles written by Mr. John Major for the Washington Post that referred directly to Frederick A. Fenning, although his name was not mentioned:

[Excerpts from Washington Post, Saturday, March 31, 1923]

Insane veterans pay out millions in fees—Lawyers, as guardians, said to be reaping harvest—Hines to fight practice.

The above are the headlines. Now let me quote excerpts from the article:

A searching investigation into the handling of allotments of insane and otherwise incompetent war veterans by attorneys and others who have been appointed by courts as legal guardians has been ordered by Brigadier General Hines, Director of the Veterans' Bureau.

The inquiry, it was learned yesterday, is to be conducted by William Wolff Smith, general counsel of the bureau.

My God! What a travesty on justice.

If I had known then what I know now about "Poker Bill" Smith I could have told General Hines then that his general counsel would accomplish nothing in his investigation of crooks.

But let me quote further from this article:

Under the present system of guardianship of incompetent veterans attorneys throughout the country have made millions of dollars, it was indicated.

WASHINGTON ATTORNEY GUARDIAN FOR 100

Here in Washington, it was learned yesterday, one attorney has been appointed through legal channels guardian for more than 100 veterans who are in St. Elizabeths Hospital now.

General Hines said yesterday the situation was first brought to his attention when he recently visited a Government hospital in Roxbury, Mass. "One veteran told me he was paying $80 per month out of his allotment for guardian fees. 'I don't need a guardian and didn't ask for one.' I am starting an investigation."

[From Washington Post, Sunday, April 1, 1923]

Congress aids reap insane veterans' fees—Some secretaries said to be getting benefit—Hines is seeking names.

The above are headlines. Let me quote an excerpt from the article:

It was learned last night that records showed cases where secretaries to Congressmen had benefited as guardians. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Director of the Veterans' Bureau, has instructed William Wolff Smith, general counsel of bureau, to investigate.

And general counsel, "Poker Bill" Smith, did absolutely nothing. Not a guardian did he stop. When he learned that the Washington man who had 100 veterans as his wards in St. Elizabeths was Fenning he quit his investigating. But in 1924 General Hines had St. Elizabeths investigated.

INVESTIGATION OF ST. ELIZABETHS BY VETERANS' BUREAU

In April, 1924, Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney, who was then control officer, inspection division of the United States Veterans' Bureau, but who at this time is medical officer in charge of the bureau hospital at Rutland, Mass., was ordered to investigate St. Elizabeths.

He made such investigation and on April 26, 1924, filed his report and recommendations with Col. E. A. Shepherd, acting chief of the inspection division of the Veterans' Bureau.

CONDEMNED FREDERICK A. FENNING

In this report Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney condemned Commissioner Fenning. He certified the following:

The control officer learned that one Frederick A. Fenning, Esq., an attorney, whose office is in the Evans Building, appears to have certain privileges and concessions shown him in contacting claimants of the bureau at the hospital. At the present time he is guardian for over 100 bureau patients. He constantly opposes the transfer of his wards from St. Elizabeths Hospital to any other hospital outside of this jurisdiction. It has been learned unofficially that Doctor White, superintendent, is very friendly to Mr. Fenning. Question is raised as to the propriety of allowing one attorney in the city to obtain guardianship of so many of the beneficiaries of the bureau.

REPORT IN EFFECT AN INDICTMENT AGAINST DOCTOR WHITE

I quote from said report of Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney the following:

The construction capacity of St. Elizabeths Hospital is for 3,300 patients. It has 4,200 patients; 901 of them are United States Veterans' Bureau cases.

Howard Hall group are neither well ventilated nor lighted. The beds are of wooden construction, antiquated, and are without springs. The benches are of an old type and are very uncomfortable. Blacks and whites occupy the same small court during recreation hours.

In one semipermanent ward used for tubercular patients blacks and whites are both hospitalized in the same building and only separated by an imaginary line.

Besides the assistant superintendent, Dr. Arthur B. Noyes, there are 37 doctors on the staff, 1 chief nurse, 5 assistant nurses, and 675 attendants and orderlies.

The cost of rations per diem for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, was between 40 and 45 cents. Attendants handled food in the most careless manner, were sloppy in their service, and appeared wholly inefficient. Some patients were not allowed even spoons to eat with. It is evidently the policy of the superintendent to keep down food cost. There was a doubt in the mind of the control officer whether or not all patients had sufficient amount of food. Lack of green vegetables and fruit, with no milk served except for tea and coffee, with no beverage for dinner, and weak tea for supper, with no butter served, but oleomargarine instead. I was not satisfied that the diet was well balanced, or that a sufficient number of calories were afforded these patients.

Several patients are bathed in the same water. Patients are not properly segregated. Beds are too near together, and too many are congested in the day room. There are an insufficient number of toilets and bathrooms and showers in many of the wards.

MADE EIGHT RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING ST. ELIZABETHS

And Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney made to the United States Veterans' Bureau eight recommendations for correcting the above evils. If the above report of this Veterans' Bureau investigator is not a serious indictment against Dr. William A. White, then what is it? And this is the same superintendent, Dr. William A. White, who, by law, is required to devote all of his time to his duties in St. Elizabeths, yet who for two weeks sold his testimony in Chicago to Leopold and Loeb for $250 per day.

THEN COMES THE GRAND JURY REPORT

And from the grand jury report on the murder of one Green by attendants in St. Elizabeths, filed October 5, 1925, I quote the following excerpts:

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 5, 1925.

In connection with the inquiry into the cause of the death of William Green, a patient of St. Elizabeths Hospital, on the 17th day of July, 1924, the grand jury made an investigation as to the general conditions of life at said institution.

The grand jury visited the hospital in a body and were shown about the grounds and through many of the buildings. As William Green came to his death in Howard Hall, they inspected it with greater care and more closely than they did the other buildings.

There are approximately 4,400 patients and 1,200 attendants in the entire institution, about 1,000 of the patients being veterans of the World War. We found the hospital greatly overcrowded and most deplorable conditions existing as a result of this overcrowding. There are some rooms, intended to accommodate 20 single beds, containing more than 40 beds; there is scarcely enough room to walk between these beds, and consequently there can not be the least privacy for the patients in dressing or undressing.

CONCERNING HOWARD HALL, WHERE GREEN WAS MURDERED

There is an open court in the center of the building, about 100 feet square, called by the inmates the "bull pen." This is the only recreation space available, and here the dangerous as well as the noisy patients mingle with those whose minds are almost normal. This intermingling must be very depressing to the better class of patients.

After examining conditions in Howard Hall the members of the grand jury could readily believe the statement of the guard, who said: "If a man went in there—Howard Hall—with a perfectly sound mind, he would be hopelessly insane in less than three years. If I were an inmate I would go crazy in less than a year."

As there is no assembly hall in the building, it is but seldom that religious services are held, and accordingly the spiritual well-being of the patients is sadly neglected. There is nothing to break the dead monotony from one end of the week to the other.

Among the witnesses who were summoned and appeared before us, including present patients of the hospital, former inmates, and others well acquainted with the present inmates, many expressed the belief that there are many persons now confined there who are not now and never were insane, but who have been sent there for ulterior motives. Like stories have been in circulation in Washington for a long time; and whether true or false they are unquestionably injuring the hospital in the estimation of the people of this city, and some steps should be taken to clear up the situation.

We suggest that Congress be asked to authorize a commission, the members thereof to be appointed by the President, to act in conjunction with the superintendent and medical staff of the hospital, in carefully investigating the history and mental condition of every questionable case there, to the end that full justice may be done to each. This great institution will then occupy the position it should in the estimation of the people of this city and of the entire country.

Respectfully submitted for the grand jury.

DANIEL A. EDWARDS, Foreman.

AND GRAND JURY INDICTED FOR MURDER

And at the same time this grand jury for Washington, D. C., on October 5, 1925, returned into court a true bill of indictment against two men for the murder of William Green in the said Howard Hall of St. Elizabeths, which had occurred 15 months before that time. Why did they wait so long? I will let a soldier, Mr. John A. Savage, of 1317 New York Avenue NW., Washington, D. C., tell you through his letter published in the O. E. Library Critic in its issue of February 24, 1926, wherein Mr. Savage said:

The St. Elizabeths situation is such as to compel immediate action of some kind to relieve a condition which I had never dreamed before could exist in this country and which would be hard for anyone who did not know to believe.

Last summer I found an old Army comrade of mine in St. Elizabeths Hospital, where he had been confined for nearly five years. He was not in the slightest mentally deranged. I was not able to get a hearing for him before any of the courts.

I found that there were many others similarly confined, thrown in by bureaucratic orders for which there were no legal grounds.

The Army, the Veterans' Bureau, the Navy, and the Department of Justice have been using this hospital for a muzzling station wherein to bury persons who have criticized officials in these departments. In such cases the victim is thrown in the hospital and held incommunicado behind cement walls, in a division known as Howard Hall. I found that in July, 1924, William Green had been beaten to death by attendants. Before the grand jury, about January, 1925, two or three half-witted patients were called to testify, while three men who were perfectly sane who witnessed the killing were not allowed to go before the grand jury, and it found no bill, and the officials proclaimed an "exoneration."

I found Green's widow and prepared for her a petition for another grand jury inquiry, and the excluded witnesses were produced, and on October 5, 1925, the grand jury indicted Green's slayers.

George C. Tisdale was shanghaied into St. Elizabeths 12 years ago. He is not insane and never was. White has held him and denied access to him of friends and counsel. I made written demand on Doctor White for a copy of Tisdale's commitment. White refused it. The District Code provides a forfeiture of $500 in such a case. We sued and yesterday got judgment against White for $500.

DR. WILLIAM A. WHITE LOVES MONEY HIMSELF

It will be remembered that on December 10, 1925, I showed from this floor that Dr. William A. White admitted in his letter to me that when Clarence Darrow got him to go to Chicago to testify to save the necks of Leopold and Loeb that he received $250 per day for as long as two weeks, but he refused to tell how much more he received or how much he had received for giving his testimony in other criminal cases.

And I then read a statement from Hon. Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, stating that the law requires Dr. William A. White "to devote his whole time" to the welfare of St. Elizabeths, for which the Government pays him a salary of $7,500 per year and furnishes to him free for himself and family their residence, their furnishings, their servants, their food, their lights, heat, gas, water, laundry, and medical attention. All of the above things are furnished free by the Government to Doctor White and his family.

NATURALLY SYMPATHIZES WITH COMMISSIONER FENNING

Both believe in making money on the side. Very naturally, Doctor White sympathizes with Commissioner Fenning. The Star reported that—

Dr. William A. White, superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, frankly came out with praise for Mr. Fenning—

And so forth.

And most likely in return Commissioner Fenning will praise Doctor White for being able to separate the rich Leopolds and Loeb from $250 per day for 14 days and for the manner in which he has been running Howard Hall, upon which the grand jury commented.

FREDERICK FENNING FOOLISHNESS

You will remember that a short time ago Commissioner Fenning notified various heads of executive departments under him that henceforth they could not come to Congressmen or Senators but must submit all matters through his office. And then when I confronted him with his Fenning foolishness he denied it. To show this I will quote the following from page 115 of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations on the District of Columbia supply bill:

Mr. FUNK. At this point we will be glad to hear Congressman BLANTON of Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to just one case that will open your eyes as to conditions relative to the pay of some of the District employees. I am not speaking now of the higher ups, but of the lower downs. There is in the District Building a man named Joseph C. M. Abell. He handles checks and money, approximately $25,000,000 a year. He is receiving $1,440 a year. I am fighting Bolshevism in the United States and am looking for everything that could operate as a cause for the production of Bolshevism or communism. Where you have an employee handling $25,000,000 a year, and he receives a paltry salary of $1,440, I can understand how these measly communistic ideas might come into his mind against his Government. A man with a wife and a houseful of little children performing that service is entitled to more pay than that.

Mr. FUNK. I agree with you there, having heard but one side.

Mr. BLANTON. I spoke to the commissioner here last night about that particular case.

Mr. FENNING. Congressman, have you discussed the duties of this man with the collector of taxes?

Mr. BLANTON. No. The commissioners have a rule down there that you have got to discuss everything through the commissioners, and I am going to help break up that rule before I leave Congress. I have the right, as a Member of Congress, to go to any employee of the Government and ask him about the Government business. I do not like the rule that the commissioners have there.

Mr. FENNING. I know of no such rule.

Mr. BLANTON. I had a talk with you over the phone about my having access to the insurance commissioner, and you then told me that I should be satisfied to get my information from the commissioners. I expect to get my information from all sources obtainable.

NOW PROTECTS STREET CARS IN ROBBERING PEOPLE

It is provided in the charters of the street cars here that they shall never charge more than 5 cents fare. All through the World War the fare was only 5 cents. Not until November 1, 1919, practically a year after the armistice, was the fare raised above 5 cents. The Capital Traction Co. did not want any raise. It was perfectly willing to continue at 5 cents. But because the Washington Railway & Electric Co., which claimed to be the poor company, asked for a raise, the Commissioners of the District authorized a raise on November 1, 1919, from 5 cents to 7 cents, and then on May 1, 1920, they again authorized a raise to 8 cents fare for both systems, when the Capital Traction Co. asserted that it did not want more than 5 cents. And the commissioners thus forced upon the Capital Traction Co. an increase of 3 cents on each fare more than it wanted.

THE POOR RICH COMPANY

Now, remember, that the raise was made because the commissioners claimed that the Washington Railway & Electric Co. was a poor company and needed more revenue. But I want you to notice how it has made millions in profits on its common stock as a natural consequence of the unwarranted action of the commissioners.

ITS COMMON STOCK

I will give you the market quotations on the common stock of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. for the past few years:

In February, 1922, their common stock was worth 38¼; in March it was worth 39; in April, 1922, 39¼; in May, 40¼; in June, 50¼; in September, 57¼; in October, 58; in November, 64; in December, 1922, it was worth 68¾.

In February, 1923, it was worth 69¼; in June, 70½. In January, 1924, it was worth 71; in February, 71¼; in March, 71¾; in April, 72; in May, 72¾; in June, 79½; in July, 82. Just a year and a half before that time that stock was worth only 38¼. In November, 1924, it went up to 87½, and in December, 1924, it went up to 90. Now notice 1925: In January, 1925, it went up to 101; in February up to 103; in March 108½; in April up to 109; in May, 1925, up to 123¼; and in June, 1925, up to 124¾.

In August, 1925, its common stock went up to 182. In November, it went up to 235, and in December, 1925, it went up to 250.

The above figures were furnished me by Major Covell, assistant to the engineer commissioner, hence we may deem that they are reliable. Thus as a natural result of the unwarranted action of the commissioners in increasing the fare from 5 cents to 8 cents, the common stock of this company soared from 38¼ in February, 1922, to 250 in December, 1925, which is 656 per cent increase and which made millions of profits for the officers and directors of this company. And Commissioner Fenning still permits these street railways to charge 8 cents fare, when their charters authorize only 5 cents, and he could stop it to-morrow if he wanted to do so.

IMPOSSIBLE TO GET RECTIFYING LEGISLATION REPORTED

In the last Congress I introduced a bill to annul the action of the commissioners and force the fare back to 5 cents, as provided in the charters. I could never get the bill out of committee. As soon as this Congress met I again introduced the bill, and it was referred to a subcommittee, and when I counted noses I found that the committee stood five to four against the bill, hence I refused under such circumstances to waste any of my time in a two months' hearing when I knew nothing could be accomplished.

STREET CARS IMMUNE FROM TRAFFIC REGULATIONS

The commissioners have refused to make the street cars observe stop signals. When I introduced a bill to require street cars to observe all traffic stop signals, the commissioners reported adversely against such bill, and it was over their fight and protest that I got you colleagues to vote that provision into the recent amendments to the traffic law passed by the House.

AFFIDAVIT OF ELLEN H. FINOTTI

I, Ellen H. Finotti, being duly sworn, upon oath, state: I was employed as record and file clerk in St. Elizabeths Hospital from 1918 to 1926, during which time I had charge of all the records of said hospital. I endeavored to keep said records conscientiously. However, upon the order of the superintendent, Dr. William A. White, I was notified that Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, now Commissioner of the District of Columbia, should have free access to such records and to correspondence concerning any cases that he should ask for. No other attorney enjoyed such privilege or concession.

I have no interest in this matter, and make this affidavit only because I was requested to testify as to what I knew about it.

ELLEN H. FINOTTI.

Sworn to and subscribed by the said Ellen H. Finotti before me, the undersigned authority, on this the 3d day of April, A. D. 1926, in Washington, D. C. Given under my hand and seal of office.

[SEAL.]

HOWARD F. BREWER,

Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

My commission expires May 9, 1926.

Please note that Mrs. Finotti swears that Dr. William A. White gave to Frederick A. Fenning the privilege and concession of having free access to all books and records there concerning accounts of soldiers and inmates, which privilege and concession he gave to no one else in Washington.

SERVED AT ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL 40 YEARS

I, Frank M. Finotti, being duly sworn, upon my oath state: That I was chief clerk of St. Elizabeths Hospital from the time the office was created until I retired; I began work in St. Elizabeths on December 11, 1885, and worked there continuously until July 1, 1925, when I was retired. Years ago I used to officiate as notary there and received 25 cents for each affidavit. At one time the Pension Department began sending Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, one of its employees, over to St. Elizabeths to take the affidavits of pensioners; in this way he learned of inmates who were drawing pensions and who were entitled to pensions. Later on he quit the Pension Department and began to practice law himself, and it was then that he arranged things so that he was appointed the guardian or committee of many inmates. He had free access to all the records and correspondence, allowed him by Dr. William A. White, and I have seen him many times going through such records hunting up information concerning inmates who had money and property or who were entitled to pensions or compensation. I have just been shown the petition filed April 22, 1925, by Dr. William A. White, being No. Lunacy 10839 in the Supreme Court, stating that funds were there on deposit due James Roley and recommending that Mr. Frederick A. Fenning be appointed committee, and which was sworn to by Doctor White before me as a notary, and which is written upon the office paper of Mr. Frederick A. Fenning, attorney. I have seen many, many such petitions, and presume that in all there have been several hundred, altogether, wherein Doctor White recommended that Mr. Frederick A. Fenning be appointed committee. It is my belief that from some one in the Department of the Navy and the War Department Mr. Fenning learned of lunatics who were entitled to pay. I am not interested in this matter, and make this affidavit only because I have been requested to tell what I know.

FRANK M. FINOTTI.

Sworn to and subscribed before me by the said Frank M. Finotti on this the 3d day of April, A. D. 1926, in Washington, D. C.

HOWARD F. BRESEE,

Notary Public, in and for the District of Columbia.

My commission expires May 9, 1926.

TEN PER CENT OF PRINCIPAL PLUS TEN PER CENT OF INCOME

Remember that Gen. Frank T. Hines, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau certified to me that Frederick A. Fenning receives a commission of 10 per cent of the principal of his wards and also 10 per cent of the interest or income on their money invested. Here is what he said:

LETTER FROM DIRECTOR VETERANS' BUREAU

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., March 19, 1926.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: In reply to your letter of March 17, requesting information concerning those cases of bureau beneficiaries where the Hon. Frederick A. Fenning has been appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as legal guardian or committee, I am attaching a list of the cases for which Colonel Fenning is now guardian, or committee, and I will furnish you as soon as the information can be prepared details as to where the wards lived and in what institutions they now are.

In order for me to give you the exact amount of compensation which has been paid out of the estate of the wards upon order of the Supreme Court of the District, it will be necessary for me to have reviewed the accounts which have been filed by Colonel Fenning with the Supreme Court and audited by Mr. Herbert L. Davis, auditor acting for said court.

Colonel Fenning has been allowed by the Supreme Court of the District in practically every case for which he is acting as guardian or committee 10 per cent of the principal of the personal estate and on the annual income of the estate, as provided in section 1135 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

TEN PER CENT ON PRINCIPAL AND TEN PER CENT ON ANNUAL INCOME

I want you to note that General Hines, Director of the Veterans' Bureau, reports that Frederick A. Fenning is receiving 10 per cent of the principal of all the personal estates of these shell-shocked ex-service men who are his wards, and that he is also receiving 10 per cent of their annual income. I will show you in a few minutes that the Veterans' Bureau has paid to Frederick A. Fenning the enormous sum of $733,855.87. And remember that he deposits same in the National Savings & Trust Co. Remember that.

VETERANS' BUREAU HAS PAID TO FREDERICK A. FENNING $733,855.87

Let me say again, what I have said many times, General Frank T. Hines is an able, efficient, honest, fearless Director of the Veterans' Bureau, and withal a splendid gentleman. All of the trouble which the ex-service men have had has been occasioned by the total unfitness of the general counsel, William Wolff Smith, and a few other chiefs of departments in this bureau. General Hines felt that he could only give me the following information in confidence, and he tried to so impress it, but when I practically forced him to give it to me, I gave him to understand that as a Representative of the people, I intended to make it public for the good of our Nation. The following is reliable information so furnished me by Director Hines:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,

Washington, April 2, 1926.

(Personal and confidential)

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Complying with your request, I am inclosing a statement showing the number of cases of bureau beneficiaries in which the Hon. Frederick A. Fenning has been appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as legal guardian or committee. This statement gives the C-Numbers, home address, present address, total amount of compensation paid to the guardian or committee for the account of the beneficiary since appointment, the total amount of insurance paid the guardian or committee since appointment, and also the total amount of the last two items.

The names corresponding to the C-Numbers given have been furnished you previously, and it is thought advisable that the names should be omitted in the event of any publication of the list referred to.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

HERBERT L. DAVIS,
Auditor Supreme Court, District of Columbia.

FENNING'S ANNUAL HARVEST SOON TO BE GARNERED

Between now and the first of next month Mr. Frederick A. Fenning will file with the court his annual account on all of his cases, setting forth the year's income received, and incidentally receive his usual 10 per cent.

Upon an examination of the court records I find that Mr. Fenning has already filed his new annual account in the case of Roley Lee; and to illustrate to you just how he handles these accounts each year and receives his 10 per cent therefrom each year, I secured from Hon. Walter I. McCoy, chief justice of the supreme court, an order directing the auditor to deliver to me copies of his new report and the court's order thereon directing the auditor to allow it:

SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

Carbon copy of auditor's report filed in said cause under date of April 2, 1926.

Very truly yours,

HERRBERT L. DAVIS, Auditor.

The committee has been in constant communication with the ward's mother, who is residing in this jurisdiction in order to be near the ward, and has been in correspondence with the United States Veterans' Bureau.

ORDER OF CHIEF JUSTICE, SUPREME COURT, ALLOWING COMMISSION

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia holding an equity court

In re Roley Lee, lunatic. Lunacy No. 8780.

On motion of Frederick A. Fenning, committee in this cause, it is by the court this 2d day of March, 1926,

Ordered, That the fifth account of said committee, and vouchers filed therewith be, and is hereby, referred to the auditor of this court for examination and report and the auditor, when stating said account, is directed to include a commission to the committee of 10 per cent on the income since the last accounting, such commission amounting to $213.04.

WALTER I. MCCOY, Chief Justice.

AUDITOR'S REPORT THEREON

On April 2, 1926, the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Mr. Herbert L. Davis, who, by the way, is a most excellent gentleman, able, efficient, and accommodating, filed his report on said account. He says:

1. This cause is before the auditor under directions contained in the order of court filed herein under date of March 2, 1926.

The above refers to the order of Chief Justice McCoy directing the auditor to allow Mr. Fenning's claim of $213.04 for commission on his ward's income for the past year. But let me quote No. 2 in said auditor's report:

2. From an examination of the records in this cause it appeared that no useful purpose would be served by holding a formal hearing in connection with this reference; therefore, primarily for the purpose of conserving the assets of this estate, the auditor has dispensed with the formality of taking and transcribing testimony, and has stated the present account from data disclosed of record.

CASH KEPT IN NATIONAL SAVINGS & TRUST CO.

This is a very important item, hence I must mention an excerpt from No. 5 of the auditor's report, wherein he tells where Mr. Frederick A. Fenning keeps the cash due his ward, for he says:

Cash on deposit with the National Savings & Trust Co.

This should be remembered, for I shall show its great importance later on.

IS EVERYTHING SO PEACEFUL ALONG THE POTOMAC?

From reading the report of Mr. Fenning, wherein during the past year he shows that he paid $1,440 to the mother of Roley Lee, and that he also paid her $50.22 covering her own funds that she spent for his ward—her son—and that he spent $151.88 for clothing for his ward, and that he spent $185 more for the personal use of his ward, one would imagine that between him—his ward—and the mother of his ward everything was peaceful along the Potomac.

ROLEY LEE SHABBIEST DRESSED IN ST. ELIZABETHS

When I inspected St. Elizabeths last Saturday I found that Roley Lee was the shabbiest-dressed inmate I saw there. He had on an old suit that looked as if it had been worn until you couldn't tell its original color, and it could not have cost over $25 when it was new, unless the purchaser of it had been robbed. I found that Roley Lee does not even know his guardian, Mr. Fenning.

JUST HOW FENNING HAS TREATED LEE'S WIDOWED MOTHER

Notwithstanding that the mother of Roley Lee has qualified as the guardian of his person and estate and has given $5,000 bond and been accepted by the court, Mr. Frederick A. Fenning has for four years, despite her repeated insistence, refused to turn her son over to her and refused to give up his 10 per cent.

AFFIDAVIT OF MRS. ELIZA LEE

I, Mrs. Eliza Lee, being duly sworn, upon my oath, state: I am a widow; will be 57 years old on the 26th of this month; I live in Grundy, Buchanan County, Va.; I am the mother of Roley Lee; he served in France during the World War; he was in perfect health when he entered the service; he had been a good, obedient son all of his life and was my chief support; while he was in France he made an allotment to me out of his wages for my support; he was wounded by shrapnel at Verdun and had a compound fracture of the left hip and was shell shocked, and because of such injuries was discharged June 11, 1919, on surgeon's certificate of being disabled. The diagnosis following his examination August 23, 1919, was active pulmonary N. P., and on examination December 21, 1919, was dementia præcox; when he was first brought back from France he was taken to Camp Lee, and I went there to see him and found him shot all to pieces, but he knew me and put his arms around me and kissed me, and he finally got up and could go about; he disappeared, and for two years I did not know what had become of him, but found that he had been sent to St. Elizabeths and had been there all the time; Mr. Frederick A. Fenning sent papers already prepared for me to sign, which provided that he should be appointed committee, and represented to me that it was best for my son to be kept in St. Elizabeths as his mind was unsound, and that if I would sign the papers, he could get some money both for me and my son; I was almost frantic to see my son and be able to visit him, and was ignorant of the facts and of my rights, and I signed the papers; I next learned that Mr. Fenning had become the guardian or committee of my son, and that the United States Veterans' Bureau had granted my son a total disability rating with an allowance of $157.50 per month, effective and payable from June 11, 1919, when he was discharged, and that besides drawing all of this money Mr. Fenning was also drawing the insurance allowances.

My son had taken out $10,000 insurance, half payable to me and the other half payable to his sister Ethel. I have before me a certificate from Director Hines, of the Veterans' Bureau, showing that he has already paid to Frederick A. Fenning as compensation $7,195.31 and as insurance benefits $4,715, making a total of $11,910.31 paid to said Frederick A. Fenning for my said son and myself; I attach to this affidavit a letter from Mr. Fenning showing that at first he allowed me only $20 per month, notwithstanding that as compensation alone the Veterans' Bureau was paying him $157.50 per month, effective from June 11, 1919, of which sum $57.50 was because of my dependency as his mother and my dependent daughter Ethel; and you will note in said letter that Mr. Fenning ridiculed my contention that I should be allowed at least $45 per month; when I found out just what Mr. Fenning was doing and that he was drawing 10 per cent of this money himself and that my son would be much better off at home with me up in the mountains of Virginia, where I could care for him and give him a mother's love and attention, I went into court and qualified as guardian and committee for my said son, and gave bond in the sum of $5,000, which was approved by the court; and I filed with Mr. Frederick A. Fenning a certificate, like the one I am attaching to this affidavit, from the Circuit Court of Buchanan County, Va., certifying that I had duly qualified, and the clerk of said court sent to St. Elizabeths Hospital certificate of my appointment, recommending that I be allowed to qualify as his guardian and committee and that I be allowed to bring my son home to the mountains; but both St. Elizabeths and Mr. Fenning denied my request. I attach hereto a letter which on August 31, 1922, Mr. Frederick A. Fenning wrote to Congressman Slemm, putting up the excuse that his court would not permit his ward's estate to be turned over to me unless the ward was removed to Virginia, and he knew that he could keep Doctor White from letting the ward be removed; and between the two they have kept my son and his estate away from me. I am attaching another letter which on January 23, 1923, Mr. Frederick A. Fenning wrote to Congressman Slemm making new excuses why he would not transfer my son and his estate to me as his lawful guardian and committee, and you will note in this letter that he admits that he is receiving $157.50 per month and is paying me only $57 per month, and this Congressman Slemm forced him to do by appealing to the court; and you will also note that Mr. Fenning is keeping my son's funds on deposit in the National Savings & Trust Co., of which he is a director. My son, Roley Lee, is absolutely harmless, and to be near him and care for him and give him a mother's love I have been forced to leave my home in Grundy, Va., and stay here in Washington among strangers and pay out every cent I can rake and scrape for my room and board and for little things to make my son happy.

I go to St. Elizabeths for him every day and they turn him over to me, and I take him to my room and all over town and amuse him, and he minds me just like a child; they allow me to keep him from 9 o'clock in the morning until 7 o'clock in the evening, when I get there that early for him, and it is all right for me to have him so long as Mr. Fenning is allowed to keep his money and draw 10 per cent of same for himself. I have before me a report which Congressman BLANTON has secured from the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, which shows that the court has allowed Mr. Frederick A. Fenning a total of $1,155.27 for himself out of the funds of my poor shell-shocked son. If instead I had been paid that amount, I could have made my son happy at home with it for a long time; and if the sums which Mr. Fenning claims he has paid out for clothes and other things for my son, and which the court has allowed him additional, had been paid me, I could have furnished him a hundred times the conveniences he has had. I gave three sons to my country during the World War, and it does seem to me that here in the National Capital a Commissioner of the District of Columbia should not be allowed by Congress to withhold my son from me merely to exploit his estate by receiving 10 per cent of his income each year, and I appeal to the Congress of the United States to right this great wrong.

MRS. ELIZA LEE.

Sworn to and subscribed by the said Mrs. Eliza Lee before me, the undersigned notary, on this the 3d day of April, A. D. 1926. Given under my hand and seal of office.

MRS. ELIZA LEE'S EXHIBITS

(Law offices of Frederick A. Fenning, Evans Building, 1420 New York Avenue)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13, 1921.

MRS. ELIZA LEE,
Grundy, Va.

DEAR MRS. LEE: I have your letter of the 8th instant, and in reply beg to inform you that as committee of Roley Lee I have received the amount of his bank balance at the Washington Loan & Trust Co., viz, $276.09. I have also received his compensation through May, 1921, from the War Risk Bureau, amounting to $914.55. The War Risk Bureau advises me that this includes additional compensation to you at the rate of $10 per month from June 12, 1919, amounting to $236. I send herewith my check, as committee, to your order for this amount for which please sign and return inclosed receipt.

The rate of additional compensation allowed to you is $10 per month and the rate which I am authorized by order of court of May 26, 1921, to pay to you is $20 per month. I do not know upon what basis you have formed your conclusion that you are entitled to $45 per month, unless it is on the basis of former allotment and allowance. Allotments and allowance, however, are not effective in the case of discharged soldiers.

I have taken up the question of your son's war-risk insurance with the War Risk Bureau and believe that I can have it reinstated.

Yours very truly,

F. A. FENNING.

CERTIFICATE OF GUARDIANSHIP AND COMMITTEE

Virginia: At a circuit court held and continued for Buchanan County, at the courthouse thereof, on Monday, April 24, 1922.

Present: Hon. William E. Burns, judge presiding.

On motion Eliza Lee was appointed guardian and committee for her son, Roley Lee, an insane person, and thereupon the said Eliza Lee entered into bond in the sum of $5,000, with J. H. Stinson and S. R. Hurley as her sureties.

VIRGINIA, Buchanan County, to wit:

I, Moscoe Belcher, deputy for S. R. Hurley, clerk of the circuit court of the county and State aforesaid, certify that the foregoing writing is a correct copy of an order of court appointing Eliza Lee guardian of Roley Lee, as appears of record in the circuit court clerk's office, recorded in common law order book No. 6, page 128.

Given under my hand this 3d day of July, 1923.

Hon. C. B. SLEMP,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SLEMP: I have your letter of August 30, 1922, inclosing certificate from the deputy clerk of the circuit court of Buchanan County, Va., showing the appointment of Eliza Lee as committee of Roley Lee. I presume that this refers to my ward Roley Lee.

Our court has held that it would not direct a committee appointed in this jurisdiction to turn over the estate of an incompetent to a committee appointed elsewhere, unless the ward was removed to the jurisdiction in which the other fiduciary was appointed. Roley Lee still remains a patient under treatment at St. Elizabeths Hospital. If he should be removed to the State of Virginia, please let me know, and I will take up the matter with our court without delay.

Yours very truly,

F. A. FENNING.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1923.

Hon. C. B. SLEMP,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SLEMP: In accordance with our telephone conversation this morning, I beg to say that under date of August 31, 1922, I wrote you acknowledging receipt of your letter of August 30, 1922, in the case of my ward, Roley Lee, at which time I called attention to the fact that our court had held that it would not direct a committee in this jurisdiction to turn over the estate of an incompetent to a committee appointed elsewhere, unless and until the ward was removed to the jurisdiction in which the other fiduciary was appointed. If Roley Lee should be removed to Virginia, I should immediately file my final account as committee in this jurisdiction and ask the court to direct me to turn over the estate to the committee appointed in Virginia. In this connection I should say, however, that this patient is obliged to spend practically all of his time in bed, and I anticipate that his transfer would be rather difficult owing to his physical and mental condition.

Meanwhile, as committee, I am receiving his compensation and insurance aggregating $157.50 per month. I am purchasing necessary clothing for him and paying his mother, under order of court, $57 per month toward the maintenance of herself and daughter, and I have also, from the funds of the ward, defrayed the travel expenses of his mother and sister in visiting him on two occasions. Of the funds in hand, $3,000, under orders of court is invested in Liberty loan bonds and Treasury notes, and the balance is on deposit at interest in the National Savings & Trust Co. I make no charges as counsel fees, and my compensation is the commission which the court allows at the time annual accounts are stated, this commission depending upon the service rendered and the amount of the estate.

Yours very truly,

FREDERICK A. FENNING.

In re Roley Lee.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Mrs. Eliza Lee, the mother of Roley Lee, is very anxious to bring her son, Roley Lee, home to Grundy, Va., and care for him here. We have three good physicians here in town, and the boy can get medical aid here and the care of his mother.

If the department could let this boy come home with his mother, I believe that it would be of more benefit and do him more good to get back home in the mountains than all the medical aid that could be administered to him.

Mrs. Eliza Lee has also qualified as guardian for this boy and she is able to care for him if he could be released on a vacation or furlough.

Respectfully yours,

S. R. HURLEY,

Clerk Circuit Court, Buchanan County, Va.

DEPENDENT ON FENNING AND RED TAPE TO GET TO SEE HER SON

(Law offices of Frederick A. Fenning, Evans Building, 1420 New York Avenue)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1924.

Mrs. ELIZA LEE, Grundy, Va.

DEAR MADAM: In reply to your recent letter, in which you say that you are anxious to visit your son, Roley Lee, and wait the expenses paid from his funds, I send herewith a form of petition which I have prepared, with the request that you insert the amount of estimated expenses in the blank spaces and execute the petition before a notary public and return to me, and I will present it to the court for instructions. I assume from your letter that you propose to make the trip alone and that it does not cover a trip by your daughter.

Yours very truly,

F. A. FENNING.

(Law offices of Frederick A. Fenning, Evans Building, 1420 New York Avenue)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, 1924.

Mrs. ELIZA LEE, Grundy, Va.

DEAR MADAM: I have received your letter of the 22d instant, inclosing petition in which you ask the court to authorize me, as committee of Roley Lee, to pay expenses incident to proposed visit to your said son. This petition did not reach me until this afternoon and the court does not meet again until next Tuesday. I will then submit the matter to the court and advise you.

Yours very truly,

F. A. FENNING.

MODUS OPERANDI OF DOCTOR WHITE AND LAWYER FENNING

To let you see the kind of a petition Frederick A. Fenning writes up for Dr. William A. White to sign, when he wants to take charge of the income of some unfortunate, I will quote one:

(Filed April 22, 1925. Morgan H. Beach, clerk)

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOLDING AN EQUITY COURT

In re James Roley, alleged lunatic. Lunacy No. 10839.

The petition of William A. White respectfully shows the court:

1. That he is a citizen of the United States and is the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, and that he files this petition as the next friend of James Roley.

2. That said James Roley was admitted to St. Elizabeths Hospital by order of the Secretary of the Navy on the 6th day of October, 1922, has been continuously since that time and is now a patient under treatment in said hospital.

3. That said James Roley is unmarried, and that, so far as your petitioner is aware, he has no relatives in this jurisdiction; that he has no property other than two lots in Brooklyn, N. Y., value not known to petitioner, and funds on deposit at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

4. That in order that said lots may be properly looked after and funds collected and used from time to time for the benefit of the said James Roley it is necessary that a committee be appointed for him.

Wherefore, the premises considered, your petitioner asks:

1. That a writ de lunatico inquirendo be issued by this court.

2. That the court appoint a committee for said James Roley, under such bond as may be deemed necessary, your petitioner suggesting that Frederick A. Fenning, a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, who is experienced in lunacy matters, has expressed a willingness to act as such committee.

3. And for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet.

WILLIAM A. WHITE.

I do solemnly swear that I have read the foregoing petition by me subscribed and know the contents thereof, and that the statements made therein upon information and belief I believe to be true, and the statements made therein upon my personal knowledge are true.

WILLIAM A. WHITE.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 18th day of April, 1925.

LAW OFFICES OF FREDERICK A. FENNING

On the back of this petition is indorsed:

Law offices of Frederick A. Fenning, Evans Building, 1420 New York Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

VERDICT AND JUDGMENT RECITES FENNING AS DOCTOR WHITE'S ATTORNEY

The verdict of the jury declaring James Roley insane, and the court's order thereon, recites that the petitioner, Dr. William A. White, appeared in court by his attorney, Frederick A. Fenning. And in accordance with the recommendation made by Doctor White in his petition, drawn and handled by Fenning, the court appointed Frederick A. Fenning committee.

On May 14, 1925, Frederick A. Fenning filed with the court his first report in said case, showing that he had received from St. Elizabeths Hospital $2,651.56, personal funds belonging to his ward, which he had deposited in the National Savings & Trust Co.

On August 8, 1925, the court authorized Frederick A. Fenning to sell certain property in Kings County, N. Y., belonging to his ward for $4,200.

On January 13, 1906, Frederick A. Fenning got permission of the court to pay New York lawyer $250 for helping him sell property.

On January 20, 1926, Frederick A. Fenning reported to the court that he had on hand $5,870 of his ward's money and that he also expects more as proceeds from sale of other property.

SOME RECENT CASES OF COMMISSIONER FREDERICK A. FENNING

I will now mention some recent cases of Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, filed since he became Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

On June 10, 1925, in lunacy case No. 10890, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning filed a petition to declare Michael Flaherty, of Massachusetts, of unsound mind, the petition recommending that Frederick A. Fenning be appointed committee, and Fenning used the affidavits of Dr. D. C. Main and Dr. John D. Gable, doctors employed in St. Elizabeths. On June 10, 1925, Flaherty was declared unsound, Commissioner

Frederick A. Fenning was appointed committee, and the order of court recites that the petitioner appeared by his attorney, Frederick A. Fenning. And on June 20, 1925, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning reported to the court that he had received from the United States Navy $565.80 as pay due his ward, which he had deposited in the National Savings & Trust Co., and that he expected from the Navy $94.30 each month pay due his ward.

On September 22, 1925, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, as attorney for Mrs. Elizan Norris, filed lunacy case No. 11041 seeking to declare Richard M. Norris unsound, using Doctor Silk and Doctor Lind, of St. Elizabeths staff, to do the work, the petition reciting that the only relatives of Norris known were his wife, Elizan Norris, and his daughter, Fannie Norris, aged 13, living in Savannah, Ga., and the petition reciting:

That Richard M. Norris is entitled to war risk compensation monthly, amount not yet known.

I want this recitation to be remembered, for it shows that there must be a claim filed against the Government of the United States before his rights can be determined, for the Veterans' Bureau is one of the institutions of the Government. And the papers in this case show that Frederick A. Fenning is acting as attorney for Mrs. Elizan Norris, and later papers show that he did prosecute a claim against the Government and got it allowed, because on January 20, 1926, he filed for Mrs. Norris her first report to the court showing that she has received compensation check from the Veterans' Bureau, and deposited it in the National Savings & Trust Co. And if it is traced down by Congress, it will be found that Frederick A. Fenning, in cooperation with Dr. William A. White, worked up this case himself, and ascertained that this man could obtain compensation, and that when his wife refused to waive her rights, that Fenning induced her to let him file the papers for her. And it will be found that it was under the direction of Frederick A. Fenning that the funds were deposited in the National Savings & Trust Co.

COMMISSIONER FREDERICK A. FENNING IS A DIRECTOR OF IT

Note the following received from the National Savings & Trust Co., showing why Commissioner Fenning deposits all of his fiduciary funds in that institution. Such deposits inure to his benefit and profit, as it brings dividends for his stock:

(National Savings & Trust Co.—capital, $1,000,000; surplus, $1,000,000; incorporated by special act of Congress January 22, 1887; reorganized under act of Congress October 1, 1890)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 2, 1926.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of April 1, we write to advise you that Mr. Frederick A. Fenning is a director of this institution.

Yours very truly,

WM. D. HOOVER, President.

Any man who can manipulate things so that he can draw from the United States Veterans' Bureau $733,855.87 fiduciary funds can become a director in a trust company. How much is it worth to him and the company?

A CRIME UPON COMMON DECENCY

In cause No. 11092, on October 20, 1925, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, as attorney, filed a petition in the supreme court, alleging that Francis D. Allen is a patient in St. Elizabeths and believed to be of unsound mind, and that he is entitled to retired pay of $150 per month as lieutenant in the United States Navy, and recommending that Frederick A. Fenning be appointed committee for him.

Using two doctors from St. Elizabeths to do his swearing for him, Frederick A. Fenning filed the following as evidence:

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOLDING AN EQUITY COURT

In re Francis D. Allen, alleged lunatic. Lunacy No. 11092.

We, the undersigned, do solemnly swear that we are members of the medical staff of St. Elizabeths Hospital; that we are familiar with the mental condition of the above named, who is a patient under treatment in said hospital; and that in our opinion he is of unsound mind.

D. C. MAIN.

SAMUEL A. SILK.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, DC:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 9th day of October, 1925.

[SEAL.]

ARNOLD W. BARBOUR.

Notary Public, District of Columbia.

On November 20, 1925, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, as attorney, had the matter heard, had Lieut. Francis D. Allen, of Chester, Pa., declared unsound, had himself appointed committee, and the order recites Frederick A. Fenning as attorney for the proceeding.

On December 7, 1925, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, as committee, petitioned the court to change the name to Frank D. Allen, so as to correspond with record of the Navy, and to affirm him as committee, which was done by order of Chief Justice McCoy.

On December 9, 1925, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning reported to the court that he had received from St. Elizabeths the sum of $116.55, personal funds due his ward, and that he expects to receive from the United States Navy $150 per month as the retired pay due his ward, and that he expects to receive certain funds of his ward deposited in a New York bank, and that he expects to receive proceeds from certain lots in New York, and that he expects to recover a refund of a deposit on a house in Pennsylvania.

On February 10, 1926, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, as committee, filed petition in the supreme court advising that while his ward lived in Chester, Pa., he purchased from Annie M. Smith the premises at 1824 West Sixth Street, Chester, Pa., for $3,800, and paid her in cash $1,000, and Fenning asked that he be permitted to file suit against her to annul the purchase and recover back the $1,000, and the court granted the order that day without hearing.

LIEUT. FRANK D. ALLEN SHANGHAIED

After much wrangling with Dr. William A. White and his assistant, Doctor Noyes, who refused to allow me to attend their conference and have Lieutenant Allen before it, I finally forced them under threats to let me see Allen. I wish every colleague and Senator in this Congress would go there and talk to him. He is perfectly sane, apparently. He told me all about his business in Chester, Pa., and in New York, and was indignant when I told him that Fenning was now suing to annul his contract for purchasing the property in Chester. He is a fine-looking fellow. He is unusually intelligent. He showed polish and breeding. He said that he had never seen Fenning but twice. He said that a naval officer here owed him some money, and he left his home in Chester and came here hoping to collect it, and that when he went to see this officer at the naval hospital and asked him to pay him what he owed it made him mad, and he had him sent over to St. Elizabeths, where he has been roughly handled and treated unjustly in numerous ways. And I promised him that I would tell his Congressman, our beloved colleague, Mr. BUTLER, and that I would bring his message to this Congress, imploring them that he be delivered from the hands of the Philistines.

Mr. BUTLER. I can not locate that man.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will locate him when I go with you out there with your application for a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. BUTLER. He will come out of there if he is not insane. I am told that he is not allowed to communicate with me.

Mr. BLANTON. No; he is not. He tells me that.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I will communicate with him. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. And I will help you. But I must get back to my discussion.

COMMISSIONER FREDERICK A. FENNING'S MAN FRIDAY

In his law office in the Evans Building, Commissioner Fenning has a young man, Paul V. Rogers, who until recently was a clerk there, but whom Fenning now uses as his law assistant to file cases and receive fees.

On December 2, 1925, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning and Paul V. Rogers, as attorneys, filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the case of Lunacy No. 11137, charging Charles L. Cunningham with being of unsound mind. The court's order of December 4, 1924, recites that petitioner appeared by Attorney Frederick A. Fenning, and he was declared insane.

On January 27, 1926, Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning filed with the court a petition stating that petitioner had employed Frederick A. Fenning and Paul V. Rogers as attorneys, and asking permission to pay their fee of $150.

On January 27, 1926, that same day, Chief Justice McCoy granted the order for the $150 to be paid to Frederick A. Fenning and Paul V. Rogers, attorneys.

On January 27, 1926, petitioner reports receipts from Franklin Trust Co., of Philadelphia, of $1,531.83, and $73.30 from the Navy, and statement is made that such sums are deposited in the National Savings & Trust Co., of Washington, D. C.

COMMISSIONER FENNING GRINDS OUT LUNATICS BY WHOLESALE

Corporation Counsel Francis H. Stephens is under the absolute influence and control of Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, who, by a stroke of the pen, could make or ruin him.

During the past four months Corporation Counsel Francis H. Stephens, on behalf of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, has had 150 human beings thrown into insane asylums—either Gallinger or St. Elizabeths.

CERTIFICATE FROM LUNACY CLERK
CLERK'S OFFICE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1926.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I have the honor to report that there were 150 lunacy cases filed by Francis H. Stephens, corporation counsel, between December 1, 1925, to March 31, 1926, inclusive.

Respectfully,

E. M. MEIGS,
Assistant Clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Charge of Lunacy.

FREDERICK A. FENNING APPOINTED RECEIVER

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, No. 25544, equity, Rowan Hart, the court appointed Mr. Frederick A. Fenning as receiver, and he has been allowed the following commissions, to wit: $20.90, $50, $40.40, $17.24, $20, $18.44, $16.85, and $16.25.

ALMOST GOT A BONANZA

In the case of Engstrom et al. against Arnold et al., No. 39490, equity, Mr. Frederick A. Fenning was appointed receiver by Chief Justice McCoy over the objections of the attorneys, and before he could qualify an appeal was taken which prevented him from qualifying. This was a case of immense proportions, there being over $1,000,000 in cash on deposit. If Mr. Fenning had been allowed to qualify and the case had not been settled he would have reaped a harvest even beyond his own expectations.

MARTIN R. MADDEN ALWAYS MEANS JUST WHAT HE SAYS

In my speech made from this floor on March 18, 1926, when I was then endeavoring to get this Congress to put Frederick A. Fenning out of office, I caused the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, our incomparable chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations, to make us one definite promise—that if I could prove my charges, Fenning ought to be put out of office. Let me quote what he then said:

Mr. BLANTON. And I want to say here that this commissioner has no right to have himself appointed guardian for poor soldier boys who happen to be in St. Elizabeths and hold them here while their fathers are perhaps dying at home in Florida, and at the same time receive several thousand dollars a year.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will permit, let me make this suggestion: If he is doing that, he ought to be put out of his office.

Mr. BLANTON. Good; I know the gentleman means just what he says, and having accomplished what I desired, I am going to yield the floor.

HAVE PRODUCED THE PROOF

I have done the work of 20 men to gather this evidence and proof for Mr. MADDEN and the Congress. Now, what is going to be done about it? If Frederick A. Fenning does not have enough sense to resign, the President ought to kick him out of office without ceremony. And I believe the President will do so. And if the President does not do so, this Congress ought to force his expulsion from office. He ought to be in the penitentiary, and if the district attorney does his duty, he will be placed behind the bars, just as he kept poor Mrs. Corbett and her daughter behind the bars of St. Elizabeths for two years and four months, and robbed them while they were in there helpless.

COMMISSIONER FREDERICK A. FENNING STILL DOING BUSINESS WITH UNDERTAKER GAWLER

In the case lunacy No. 10713, Walter Garland Allan, is the following receipt on file:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1926.

Received of Frederick A. Fenning, committee of Walter Garland Allan, $107.81, balance held to the credit of deceased, for services in connection with burial.

(Signed) GAWLER.

Commissioner Fenning had Undertaker Gawler to bury his ward and wound up the case by paying Gawler what funds that happened to be left.

REPORT FROM ONE OF MY AIDS

I have just received this report:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1926.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: You have them worried. When you dropped in on them so unexpectedly last Saturday, as soon as you left, Doctor White got in touch with Commissioner Fenning and told him of your visit.

They have a system whereby when Fenning authorizes a certain portion of the ward's money to be spent for clothing, etc., the "committee" expressly stipulates where same shall be bought. Herzog, Saks, and Eiseman get the bulk of this business, with commissions allowed for the trade.

Doctor White spends most of his time writing books and articles. All of the St. Elizabeth doctors practice outside, and some have offices outside.

Doctor White still holds his chair on the medical faculty of the Georgetown University, and also on the medical faculty of the George Washington University, notwithstanding the law requires him to give all of his time to St. Elizabeths.

BARRATRY

I have the statement of a reputable woman here who was hurt a short time ago, being run over by a street car and had three ribs fractured. Mr. Fenning went to her and advised her to take her case to Paul V. Rogers, in his office in the Evans Building, and let him file suit for her, and she did this, and tells me that Paul V. Rogers is now handling her case for her. You will remember that Paul V. Rogers is Fenning's present law partner, and keeps his office in the Evans Building for him. If that is not barratry in the District of Columbia, it would be in the State of Texas.

I know a good woman here who in Chicago was appointed committee for her shell-shocked husband, who, by transfer, is now in St. Elizabeths. For 17 months she sent each month $30 to Doctor White to buy clothes for her husband; finding that he was not getting clothes, except one cheap suit, she demanded that out of the money she had been depositing there, $100 of it be turned over to her, as she herself wanted to select his clothes. Instead of giving her a check or the money, they gave her two white slips which they call "obligations," for $50 each, stating that same would be good at St. Elizabeths. And then she found out that Eisemans at Seventh and F Streets NW, allows St. Elizabeths officials 10 per cent commission of what they buy there. And while in the National Savings & Trust Co.'s bank one day (of which Fenning is a director) one of the officials there recommended to her that she turn her business over to Frederick A. Fenning, and let him be committee and handle it for her.

ONE LONG LIST OF BLUNDERS

The record of Frederick A. Fenning, as commissioner, has been one long list of blunders. He entered upon the duties of his office on June 5, 1925. He immediately had turned over to him a Cadillac car, with No. 2 on its plate, furnished by the Government. He put into force and effect a regulation that there should be no parking between 8 o'clock and 9.15 in the morning on New York Avenue between Fourteenth and Fifteenth. On June 12, 1925, his Cadillac car was parked in front of the Evans Building, wherein his law office is, in the prohibited parking area, and certain newspaper men complained to a policeman about it, that they were not allowed to park there, and that this Cadillac car ought to be moved. This policeman, Mr. Gore, went to the car and told the negro chauffeur that he would have to drive around the corner and park there. The negro replied, "No, indeed, he wouldn't have to do anything of the kind. That was Mr. Commissioner Fenning's car, and he would park right there." And then the lady on the back seat gave Policeman Gore a "blessing-out." Shortly after noon that day this traffic policeman, Gore, was ordered to police headquarters, and appearing before Inspector Headley, then in charge of traffic, was questioned about the matter. Inspector Headley then said: "I have been ordered to reprimand you, and you many consider yourself reprimanded." But that was not the kind of reprimand that Fenning required.

A MOST REVENGEFUL DEMOTION

Inspector Headley has served honorably and faithfully in the Metropolitan police department for about 30 years. Not a scratch was against him. Soon he will retire on half salary, as he is almost the age, both in years and service.

Without notice, without a hearing, without trial, this 12-day-old commissioner on June 19, 1925, called Inspector Headley before him and said: "You are demoted to a captain; you will report at No. 4." With the obedience of Army discipline, without saying a word, Inspector Headley gave up the $450 a year he was allowed for maintaining an auto, went to No. 4, demoted both in rank and salary, and to this good day not one excuse has been given him for such demotion. But all of us know that Commissioner Fenning was punishing Inspector Headley, who had charge of traffic, because Traffic Officer Gore attempted to do his duty and require Fenning himself to obey his own ordinances. And Traffic Officer Gore was soon put out of the traffic service, and has since been transferred twice. And the next day, after demoting poor Headley, Mr. High Commis-sloner Frederick A. Fenning, a commissioner for two weeks, left for the Maine woods, where each summer he acts as wet nurse in waiting on our good friend Judge Walter I. McCoy, chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

FENNING'S CRUEL ORDER SHOCKED OTHER COMMISSIONERS

I am advised by another of the most reliable and prominent Republicans in Washington that when on June 19, 1925, Commissioner Fenning had the clerk, Mr. Daniel Garges, draw up the order demoting Inspector Albert J. Headley from an inspector to a captain, and ordering his $450 auto allowance taken from him, when Clerk Garges read this order for passage at the meeting of the commissioners that day it so shocked Commissioner Rudolph that he put his hand up to his ear and said:

Mr. RUDOLPH. What was that, Dan? Just read that again, Dan. And Dan read it again.

Then the following colloquy occurred:

Mr. RUDOLPH. Colonel Fenning, you surely don't mean that?
Mr. FENNING. Nothing but.

Colonel BELL. Why, we don't even do that in the Army. When we don't like a man we transfer him. Can't we create a third district for him?

Mr. FENNING. No; he is to go to No. 4 as a captain.

WILL THIS CONGRESS STAND FOR IT?

I do not believe that this Congress will stand for it. We must have Inspector Albert J. Headley restored. Why, do you know that Commissioner Fenning issued an order that all outside practice that could not go to the police surgeons must go to a young doctor practicing here who is waiting on a member of Fenning's family. And Commissioner Fenning has only recently appointed this young physician a police surgeon. And he is about to remove a very distinguished police surgeon because he would not recommend the retirement of two policemen whom Fenning wanted to remove, and whom he was not sure of a result of their trial, to which they were entitled.

Immediately after Frederick A. Fenning is put out of the commissioner's office Albert J. Headley should be restored as inspector. Congress must not permit this great injustice to stand.

FENNING'S CRUEL TREATMENT OF SERGT. ROBERT E. LEE

You will remember his cruel treatment of Sergt. Robert E. Lee just a few days ago. Sergeant Lee is 6 feet 2½ inches tall, weighs 225 pounds, is 55 years old, is a perfect giant, and for three years had not missed a day for sickness, yet by Commissioner Fenning was retired, notwithstanding all of his superior officers testified that he was a magnificent policeman and officer and performed perfect service at all times. And this officer, whose son was making an effort to graduate in George Washington University, now suffers because of Fenning foolishness.

TRIED TO BAN OVER-NIGHT PARKING

It will be remembered that shortly after he went into office Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning gave notice that he would pass a regulation that would require all automobiles to be placed in garages at night. This would have required 22,000 owners of automobiles in Washington either to pay exorbitant garage rentals or else sell their cars, and certain Congressmen had to stop him. It would be a most interesting study for some of you colleagues to investigate to what extent Frederick A. Fenning and his close friends are interested in the garage business here in the District.

IS INTERESTED IN TOO MANY BUSINESSES IN WASHINGTON

When I began to investigate I was surprised to find the number of business enterprises in which Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning is personally interested.

COMMISSIONER FENNING IS NOW ATTORNEY FOR MEDICAL SOCIETY

I was told just a few days ago by the president of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia that Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning is now their attorney. To find out what they pay him, I wrote the following letter to Dr. E. B. Conklin, secretary of said medical society, and he has refused to answer:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1926.

Dr. E. B. CONKLIN,

1801 I Street NW., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DOCTOR CONKLIN: For use of our committee on the District of Columbia, will you kindly advise me the following:

(1) How long has Mr. Frederick A. Fenning been the attorney for your medical society?

(2) Do you pay him a salary by the year? If so, how much?

(3) If you don't pay him an annual salary, please state just what remuneration you pay him.

Thanking you for the above information,

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

AND DR. WILLIAM A. WHITE AGAIN REFUSES TO ANSWER

I am reliably informed that Dr. William A. White, some years ago, attempted to get a license so that he could practice here in Washington, and the local physicians objected, and refused it. I am also reliably informed that he and Mr. Fenning have been making property investments together, and to get the facts, I wrote Doctor White the following letter, and he has refused to answer:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1926.

Dr. WILLIAM A. WHITE,

Superintendent St. Elizabeths, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DOCTOR WHITE: Will you please give me the following information, for use before our Committee on the District of Columbia, to wit:

(1) Did you ever make application to the Board of Medical Supervisors for a license to practice in the District of Columbia? If so, what excuse was given for not granting same?

(2) Did you and Frederick A. Fenning ever invest jointly in real estate together? Do you now own property together? If not, when did you cease to so own it?

(3) Have you used your New York license during the past 20 years by doing any practice in New York?

Please let me have the above information at your very earliest convenience, and oblige,

Very truly yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

PROTECTS THE KING OF ALL BOOTLEGGERS

Joe Kelly is a political boss of Baltimore. He is the king of all high-toned bootleggers. His main liquor business is conducted from Greenmount Avenue and Eager Street in Baltimore. He directs his ships from the Bahamas and his big trucks in every direction from Baltimore. For $1,000 fee he will guarantee the safe delivery of a 5-ton truck load of liquor into Washington. His trucks enter the District at an exact hour agreed upon.

BARRAGE

Spectacular raids on stills and small bootleggers selling corn whisky in competition make a good blind for pretended enforcement. I am reliably informed that during a certain period last year 10,000 cases of imported liquor came into Washington and was distributed without any disturbance and that not one single truck load of liquor has been captured.

THE TROUBLE IS AT THE HEAD

The Metropolitan police force is a splendid bunch of loyal men, but they can enforce only when directed to do so. You have probably noticed in the press lately that Major Hesse, superintendent of police, has complained that there are too many arrests, and he is now taking steps to reduce arrests. If he drinks liquor himself, he can not expect his men to enforce the law. Each time, during my last three interviews with Major Hesse, I have smelled liquor on his breath. Having had complaints about it, I went to him and had a heart-to-heart talk and urged him to let it alone, as his use of it would demoralize every man on his police force. He promised me he would, but he has not stopped it. There is entirely too much liquor dispensed every day around the District Building. Major Hesse was not an experienced policeman. He was a police clerk. Commissioner Fenning must have had some special reason for making him superintendent over the heads of many, many, deserving, experienced policemen of years of training.

PROTECTION TO HOTELS AND TAXICABS

The monopoly that hotels, the Union Station, and taxicabs have here is a disgrace to Washington. I want my colleagues to check up the holdings of the "big six" and their friends on hotel holdings.

I am reliably informed that the Red Star Line has paid to the Willard Hotel $15,000 this year for desk space to sell sight-seeing tickets in the hotel and load them there, and that it has paid to the Capitol Park Hotel, owned by the same interests—centering in the Second National Bank—$3,500 for this privilege. The Continental Hotel is owned by the "big boss" and others closely associated. No one can get into the Union Station except in the third passageway, because the White & Black Taxi Co. has bought the privilege from the railroads. And since the House passed my amendment to stop this these hotel magnates have appeared before the Senate committee and urged that it be stricken from the bill.

POLITICS MUST NOT CONTROL

We must keep politics out of this question. Too many ex-service men are involved. It is true that when Frederick A. Fenning was appointed Commissioner he was then secretary of the local Republican organization here in Washington. And it is true that Hon. Edward F. Colladay, national Republican committeeman of the District of Columbia, is backing Mr. Fenning and trying to protect him.

MY RESOLUTION STILL PENDING

My resolution for the appointment of a joint committee, five Senators and five Congressmen, to investigate this whole situation here concerning treatment of our veterans of the various wars, has been held in the Committee on Rules since March 23, 1926. I trust that this committee will now report it out promptly.

I DO NOT BELIEVE PRESS REPORTS ABOUT PRESIDENT

In the Washington Star for March 27, 1926, appeared the following:

The White House has let it be known officially that the President had no objection to Frederick A. Fenning continuing his legal work when he appointed the latter to the Board of District Commissioners.

IGNORES PART OF QUERY

The President's attitude was made known at the biweekly conference of the President and the newspaper correspondents at the White House late yesterday afternoon in answer to a question as to the President's attitude toward the fight being made on Commissioner Fenning by several Members of the House, and if he knew of the nature of Mr. Fenning's law practice and approved his continuing it.

In making this known officially at the White House the President's spokesman pointed out that President Coolidge had no personal objection to Mr. Fenning continuing his private work.

SPOKESMAN IS CANDID

While the President's spokesman answered candidly, he did not go into any great detail. He therefore omitted stating specifically whether the exact nature of Mr. Fenning's law work was divulged during their conference at the White House. The President's spokesman did state, however, that the President could not at this time definitely recall all the details and could not at this late date repeat the exact conversation. However, there was no uncertainty in the mind of the President about agreeing to Mr. Fenning continuing his outside work.

I do not believe the President of the United States authorized the above statement. I do not believe that such will be the attitude of the steering committee of the Republican Party on this floor and in this Congress. I do not believe that such resolution of inquiry will be blocked.

FREDERICK A. FENNING HAS VIOLATED THE LAW

Commissioner Fenning is appointed to his office by the President of the United States. Such appointment is "by and with the consent of the Senate," and has to be confirmed by the Senate of the United States. This Government pays part of his salary. The District of Columbia is the seat of the Government of the United States.

Section 5498, page 1065, of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

Every officer of the United States, or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under, or in connection with, any executive department of the Government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, who acts as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States, or in any manner, or by any means, otherwise than in discharge of his proper official duties, aids or assists in the prosecution or support of any such claim, or receives any gratuity or any share of or interest in any claim from any claimant against the United States, with intent to aid or assist, or in consideration of having aided or assisted, in the prosecution of such claim, shall pay a fine of not more than $5,000 or suffer imprisonment of not more than one year, or both.

He has certainly violated the above law. And he has certainly violated the law which prevents a lawyer from soliciting law business and working up law cases for clients whose business he solicits.

I DEFEY THE WHOLE GANG

I have received due notice that if I pressed this matter I would be ruined. I have fought bigger institutions than Frederick A. Fenning and Dr. William A. White. If they can ruin me, then let me be ruined. I am fully conscious of the power and influence of Frederick A. Fenning.

NO ONE SHALL EXPLOIT WORLD WAR VETERANS

St. Elizabeths Hospital is a Federal institution maintained here by the Government of the United States to house and care for mental defectives. It is an insane asylum. For the present fiscal year Congress has appropriated and given it $1,023,000 out of the United States Treasury. In addition to this, in the District appropriation bill for the present fiscal year Congress appropriated and turned over to the Board of Charities $900,000 to spend in St. Elizabeths Hospital for the indigent insane of the District, and in the deficiency bill Congress gave to the Board of Charities for said purpose an additional sum of $260,000, making $1,160,000 given to said Board of Charities for the present fiscal year to care for indigent insane in St. Elizabeths Hospital, and for the next fiscal year Congress has already appropriated $1,000,000 for said Board of Charities to spend in St. Elizabeths Hospital for said indigent insane of the District. And for the next fiscal year Congress has already appropriated for St. Elizabeths Hospital $924,000 out of the United States Treasury.

GALLINGER MUNICIPAL HOSPITAL

It is the practice here in the District, when police authorities first take into their custody any person alleged to be of unsound mind, to send them to Gallinger Hospital for observation, from whence sooner or later they are sent to St. Elizabeths Hospital, under what is known as a certificate, for 30 days.

It is interesting to note that in the recent District appropriation bill for the next fiscal year the sum of $637,550 is carried for Gallinger Hospital.

ABSOLUTELY WITHOUT MALICE

In making this investigation and urging the removal of Frederick A. Fenning, Dr. William A. White, and William Wolff Smith, I am actuated by no malice whatever. I am simply doing my duty to the veterans of all wars who have been denied their rights because of the wrongful acts of these three men. And we must remember that the Navy has a regulation which must be changed.

HOW THE NAVY HANDLES IT

Walter E. B. — from Blair County, Pa., has been incarcerated in St. Elizabeths since November, 1924. In order that his mother might handle his money and property, and save the fees paid here to an outsider, she took out guardianship proceedings in the boy's home jurisdiction in Blair County, Pa., where in accordance with law she was appointed by her probate court as the guardian for the person and estate of her son, and as such guardian, she was duly authorized to receive any and all sums of money due him either by the Government or by individuals. And she duly filed evidence of such authority with the Navy Department here in Washington, and requested that monthly payments due her son should be paid to her as his legal guardian.

BUT THE NAVY WOULD NOT RECOGNIZE SUCH GUARDIANSHIP

Note the following letter to our colleague from Pennsylvania:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 19, 1926.

Hon. J. BANKS KURTZ,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN KURTZ: In re the case of Walter Edward —, CGM (PA) F-3-c, the records of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts show that a transcript of the decree of the Court of Common Pleas, Blair County, Pa., dated March 2, 1925, appointing Mrs. Annie — the guardian of Walter E. —, was received on March 8, 1926.

Information obtained from St. Elizabeths Hospital revealed that Walter E. — has been a patient in that institution continuously since November 26, 1924.

Under the rulings of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, it is necessary that the guardian of incompetent members of the Fleet Naval Reserve be appointed by a court having jurisdiction over the person of the incompetent before the appointment can be recognized by the Navy Department and checks forwarded to the guardian.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES MORRIS,
Paymaster General of the Navy.

Thus we see that the Judge Advocate General of the Navy requires that concerning a boy who lives in Blair County, Pa., whose family all live there, because the boy is incarcerated here in St. Elizabeths, guardianship proceedings be taken out here, thus playing right into the hands of these professional guardians who make their living off of such wards of this Government.

His mother preferred that his compensation each month be paid to her rather than to one of these professional Washington guardians.

MUST CALL A SPADE A SPADE

The time has come when we must call a spade a spade. I have done that in this discussion. On matters of this importance to all the people of the United States these abuses have continued because there have been too many soft pedals and too many whitewashes.

CONCLUSION

I have now done my duty. It is up to the House of Representatives, the Senate, and the President to do their duty. I have worked hard after hours for a number of weeks assembling these facts. It has all been work extra to our regular duties in our office and on the floor of this House. All of my colleagues know that I am on the floor all of the time when the House is in session. And my office work is fully as great as that of any colleague. But I felt that it was my duty to make this investigation and to place these facts before the Congress. I have confidence in the President of the United States. I have confidence in this Congress, though I must confess that my faith has been sorely tried on a few occasions. And I believe that the President of the United States will promptly remove from office Frederick A. Fenning as commissioner of the District of Columbia, Dr. William A. White as Superintendent of St. Elizabeths, and "Poker Bill Smith" as general counsel of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter. I wonder if the steering committee will not allow me 20 minutes additional. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may be allowed to proceed for 20 minutes more. This is a very important matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 20 minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have coupled with that unanimous consent a request that I may be allowed 20 minutes in which to make some remarks at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas to discuss the guardianship of the wards of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and ask that I may have 10 minutes to enjoy the same privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the requests be put separately. No; I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for 20 minutes, and that the gentleman from South Dakota may proceed for 20 minutes as requested, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] be given 10 minutes in accordance with his request.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I regret to do so very much, but I must object, if others are added beyond the two gentlemen first mentioned.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to tell you about a very important case, where two poor women who were sane were kept in St. Elizabeths for two years and four months.

Mr. TILSON. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker, to the request in this form.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes, and that I may be allowed to follow him for 15 minutes to discuss the general subject of the treatment of the incompetent wards of the Veterans' Bureau.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for 15 minutes, and that he himself may proceed for 15 minutes following. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. I have no objection to this request.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Texas—

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from New York will withhold his objection, my friend from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] will give the gentleman 15 minutes later on to-day.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman from Georgia have it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. He promised it to me, and I promise to give it to you.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. KINDRED. I will have to object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is not in order under the rules, the Committee on Rules says.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. TILSON. I must object, unless the gentleman from South Dakota is included.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I renew the request that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] made. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again put the request of the gentleman from South Dakota, asking unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes and that the gentleman from South Dakota himself may follow for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I object unless somebody else does.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have in my pocket a letter from a prominent member of the American Legion here, who is an employee of a department, who told me that an effort would be made here on the floor to prevent my speech from being delivered, and stating that there would be members of the American Legion in the gallery who would resent it hereafter, if somebody blocked me. [Applause.] I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. All right. I will get a chance to put the facts before the country. They will go into the RECORD anyway under my leave to print.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have 12 minutes in which to finish his remarks, at the conclusion of which I shall be allowed 12 minutes in which to discuss the general subject of the treatment of incompetent ex-service men and their guardians under the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KINDRED. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet put the request, so that objection is not yet in order. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be allowed 12 minutes in which to finish his remarks, at the conclusion of which the gentleman from South Dakota shall have 12 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to have an investigation of the acts of Mr. Fenning and of the officials of St. Elizabeths Hospital and the Veterans' Bureau and various other agencies that have been drawn into this controversy, we should have those officials present and respond to questions put to them. I do not think it is fair for a Member to stand on the floor of this House and make serious charges against the humblest citizen without an opportunity on the part of the accused to reply and present a defense if he has one. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GOODING, Mr. McNARY, and Mr. SMITH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. BORAH, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2111. An act for the relief of Levin P. Kelly; to the Committee on Claims.

AIRCRAFT IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules on House Resolution 199.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules on House Resolution 199. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 199

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 9690, "A bill to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith." After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed four hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Naval Affairs Committee, said bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

APPORTIONMENT UNDER THE FOURTEENTH CENSUS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. BARBOUR. To present a privileged question under the Constitution of the United States, and as such privileged question I offer the motion, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California offers a motion, which he asserts is of high constitutional privilege. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARBOUR moves to discharge the Committee on the Census from consideration of House bill 111, a bill for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress amongst the several States under the Fourteenth Census, and that the House proceed to the immediate consideration thereof.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes a point of order against the motion made by the gentleman from California, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion presented by the gentleman from California is not in order, because the consideration of the bill does not present a question of constitutional privilege, the rules prescribing the order of business to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an additional point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, I think, is entitled to recognition first. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard?

Mr. SNELL. I desire to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Alabama was not seeking recognition except to make an additional point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama will state his point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the additional point of order that there is no such procedure under the rules of the House as that presented by the motion of the gentleman from California. He is presenting a motion for the discharge of a standing committee of the House from the consideration of a pending bill. The only procedure for the discharge of a committee under the present rules of the House is under subsection 4 of Rule XXVII, which provides:

A Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to instruct a committee to report within 15 days—

And so forth.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be inclined to think that that point is covered in the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, which is very broad and refers to all rules of the House. But the Chair will state the gentleman's point of order. The gentleman from Alabama makes the further point of order that the motion to discharge is not in order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on his point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I maintain, in the first place, that there is no mandatory provision in the Constitution itself which provides for immediate apportionment; and, furthermore, if we did grant that there was such provision, that there is no mandatory provision in the Constitution which provides that it shall be done contrary to the rules and procedure of the House.

I appreciate the position the Speaker is in in regard to this proposition. I know there is a long line of precedents that have ruled against the position I am taking at this time in regard to the constitutional privilege raised by the gentleman from California. Practically all of these decisions have been based upon the decision that was made by Speaker Keifer in the Forty-seventh Congress.

In looking over these decisions very carefully I find that practically every Speaker has fortified the position he took on this subject by simply stating that if this were a de novo proposition, and if it came to him without any other precedent, he would rule differently than he was obliged to if he followed precedent. In other words, not one of the Speakers who followed Speaker Keifer's decision has really believed that that was the proper position to take from the absolute logic of the situation.

I want to call the attention of the House to the Keifer decision. In the first place, he starts off with a most sweeping and general statement that very few of us are in entire accord with at the present time.

He said:

The Chair will state briefly that it is of opinion that the rules of the House are always subject to any constitutional provision that may be found.

And I desire to specially call the attention of the Speaker to a decision I have found that was made by Mr. Speaker Cannon that bears directly on this ruling and should have an important bearing on what we do here to-day. At that time it was attempted to bring up an apportionment bill of this kind on Calendar Wednesday. Speaker Cannon ruled that that was a matter of the highest constitutional privilege and it was in order. An appeal was taken from the floor from the decision of the Speaker, and when he submitted that proposition to the House—the court of highest and last resort in regard to our rules and precedents—the House itself decided against it. In other words, they decided that the rule that protected Calendar Wednesday was higher than the constitutional privilege or the intended constitutional privilege as presented by an apportionment bill at that time.

It seems to me this is the one direct ruling that corresponds with the case we have in hand at the present time in regard to the first general statement laid down by Speaker Keifer that any constitutional matter is higher and of more importance and supersedes the rules of the House. The question was submitted to the court of last resort, and the House itself decided against that position.

The second general statement made by Speaker Keifer at that time in considering the question of the Constitution was:

The state of the census; the fact that this Congress alone must act, and that apportionment under the last census can not go over to the next Congress; the necessary legislation that must take place in the different States at an early time, must all be taken into account.

The situation that was presented to him at that time was a little different from the one we have at the present time. He said it was absolutely imperative it should not go over even one Congress. If the position he took was applicable at all, it was applicable to the Sixty-seventh Congress, and not to the Sixty-ninth Congress. We have already gone over to the third Congress, so that the general statement laid down in the second part of his decision is not at all applicable to the position at the present time. And even if it was applicable, I do not agree with him, for in referring to the Constitution itself and to the special sections that Speaker Keifer referred to at that time I do not find any place where it specifically states that there must be an apportionment.

Section 2 of Article I of the Constitution provides:

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States and within every subsequent term of 10 years.

It lays down a mandate in regard to the enumeration, but it does not say anything there with regard to the apportionment, and there is a vast difference between the two propositions, and the only question at issue here is one of apportionment.

In section 2 of Article XIV, the only other place where I find any definite mandate in regard to this matter, the Constitution states:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

In neither one of these cases is there any definite mandate in regard to an apportionment, and I maintain that you can not find in the entire Constitution a single thing that makes it a mandate.

Speaking further on this one proposition, in studying the Constitution we find that where they at that time had in mind that we should act definitely on some specific proposition, where they did not want to leave the House free to act in accordance with the rules of the House, it is specifically stated in the Constitution. For instance, the Constitution provides for a quorum, a yea-and-nay vote, for the meeting of Congress once each year, and several other important matters. Those are definitely prescribed in the Constitution itself, and then it goes on further to say that each House may adopt its own rules of procedure. I maintain that as long as there is no definite mandate for this apportionment, if we feel it is necessary to make one, there is absolutely nothing in the Constitution that prohibits it being made in accordance with the rules and procedure of the House, and that the section which provides that the House may do that under its own rules is just as important as any other section of the Constitution.

The most comprehensive and careful ruling we have had on this whole proposition was made by Speaker GILLET when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] raised a constitutional question of privilege, and I will only call attention to a few of the principal statements made by the Speaker at that time, which are in entire harmony with the position I am taking at this time:

The Chair thinks that if this question were brought up as an original question, and there were no precedents upon it, every Member of the House would at once say, "Why, of course this can not be admitted as privileged," because it would give the right to any Member of the House at any time to bring forward a resolution affecting some constitutional provision and to claim that his individual resolution can at once set aside all the regular business of the House, and must be considered by the House in preference to anything else. That puts it above the rules of the House and allows one man, and one after another if filibustering is desired, to bring before the House a question that he has in advance prepared, and insist that his individual will and preference shall change the regular order which the House itself has established just because a clause of the Constitution is affected. So the Chair thinks that if this were a matter of first impression there would be no question about it. The Chair at any rate would have no question about it.

He goes on further to state:

It seems to the Chair that where the Constitution orders the House to do a thing, the Constitution still gives the House the right to make its own rules and do it at such time and in such manner as it may choose, and it is a strained construction, it seems to the Chair, to say that because the Constitution gives a mandate that a thing shall be done, it therefore follows that any Member can insist that it shall be brought up at some particular time and in the particular way which he chooses.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that even if it is a mandate there is absolutely nothing in the Constitution itself that directs that we should do it in any other way except a normal way and in accordance with the rules of procedure of the House. Further from the statements that have been made by each Speaker who has ruled on this proposition that if it came up de novo, he would rule differently, leads me to honestly believe that the first decision was an erroneous one, and we should no longer be ruled by precedent, but meet the issue squarely at this time, and do what we believe to be right and for the best interest of logical parliamentary procedure in the future.

There is one other matter I would like to call to the attention of the Speaker. At the time the original decision was made the question of privilege was not as important as it is at the present time, because at that time there was ample opportunity to consider practically all the propositions that were brought before the House, and I think it is reasonably fair to consider at least that the decision of Speaker Keifer at that time, which, as I stated before, is a broad and general one, was not as carefully considered as some of the later decisions, because the question of privilege at the present time is much more important when we are in position to consider but a small part of the large amount of legislation that is before the House.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I believe the point of order is well taken and the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] should not prevail in opposition to the regular rules and procedure of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman now permit a question?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that all the precedents to which my friend has referred involved bills that had been reported to the House?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is only one precedent involving a measure not reported to the House, and that was in connection with a veto message of the President. In that case there could be no discretion in the committee, and the motion to discharge the committee was entertained by the House. In all the other instances they are cases of bills reported to the House and on the House Calendar.

In that connection I would like to suggest as an argument of convenience and, perhaps, an argument that amounts to a reductio ad absurdum, that while the gentleman from California moves to discharge the committee from the consideration of one bill affecting this subject, there are a half dozen, I believe, such bills pending before the committee. This shows that there is a variety of opinion as to how the constitutional mandate, if it be a mandate, should be enforced. Now, the question arises whether, if the gentleman is right in submitting such a motion, the patrons of all other bills pending before the committee will not have an equal right to rise at once and submit a similar motion and bring before the House many bills that are not substantially or in details the same, although they relate to the same subject.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is correct. If the gentleman's motion prevails and later the House should refuse to consider this apportionment, there is nothing to prohibit the gentleman from bringing up the proposition to-morrow, on the ground that, perhaps, during the night the membership may have changed their minds, and so you could go on time after time and provide a way for a filibuster that would absolutely block and stop the regular work of the House. Or some other Member might present a constitutional privileged question.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is not only true, but, perhaps, except in the Appropriations Committee, in nearly every committee of the House there may be pending measures that involve directly or indirectly the execution of some of the powers enumerated in the Constitution.

Mr. SNELL. Absolutely; and one of them is the resolution presented by the Rules Committee under the rules of the House as provided in the Constitution itself. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am firmly convinced that in the interest of orderly procedure, and of the House itself, the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of the gentleman from New York as to the proposition immediately before the House, whether the privileged report of the Committee on Rules takes precedence of the motion that I have submitted. That question is disposed of, it seems to me, by section 723 of the Rules of the House of Representatives in the notes, wherein it states:

The matters reported under the provisions of this rule are denominated "privileged reports" or "privileged questions," and since the privilege relates merely to the order of business under the rules, they must be distinguished from "questions of privilege" which relate to the safety or efficiency of the House itself, defined in Rule IX. Therefore "questions of privilege" take precedence over these matters which are privileged under the rules.

Now, the point raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] that if the motion prevails another Member can rise in his place and on a question of constitutional privilege move to discharge the committee from consideration of another bill pending before the committee, to my mind, is absolutely unfounded and is not well taken.

If the gentleman from Virginia had heard my motion, he would have understood the proposition. My motion calls for the immediate consideration of H. R. 111, and if this motion is ruled in order and is carried by a majority vote of the House, then the House has before it for immediate consideration H. R. 111, and no other bill for apportionment of Representatives could be submitted.

I want to say that if my motion is ruled in order I shall make another motion to postpone consideration of the bill for a full week, which is consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia that the privilege might be abused, it might be analogous to the situation as to the preservation of a quorum in the House, the constitutional right of each or any Member to insist upon a quorum. When it becomes apparent to the Speaker that the purpose is not to maintain a quorum, but for the purpose of a filibuster, the demand is denied. If this privilege should be found to be subject to abuse as a method of filibuster, then it might also properly be denied.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think the gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the Constitution is mandatory so that the Congress ever since the opening of the Sixty-seventh Congress, ever since the census of 1920, has been derelict in performance of its duty and the gentleman has the right to invoke the constitutional privilege, should not the gentleman have that right every single day?

Mr. BARBOUR. And every single minute.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That shows the reductio ad absurdum of the gentleman's position, does it not, since the House could not do any other business?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state that we have a right to bring this up as a constitutional privilege. Is there any reductio ad absurdum in that?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you can do it to-day you can do it every day.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does the Constitution of the United States mean anything to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, yes; but it does not mean to me what it does to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will convince the gentleman, if he is open-minded, that it is mandatory, and the gentleman will then realize where the reductio ad absurdum is in this matter. Mr. Speaker, the arguments so far made are predicated upon a condition precedent, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] and as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], "if" the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory or "if" they are not mandatory. We have before us at this time rulings of former Speakers of this House. If there can be any doubt about the language of the Constitution itself that doubt is clarified by a well-defined line of rulings on this very question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Not now. Article I, section 2, of the Constitution reads as follows:

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.

That was the original provision in the Constitution, which was changed, following the Civil War, by the fourteenth amendment.

Section 2 of Article I then goes on:

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States—

The Speaker will note that the language is "shall be made"—and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

It then provides that the number of Representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 30,000 for the First Congress.

Then, in Article XIV, second section, we find the language:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can not yield at this time. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no doubt about the language of the Constitution. It is just as direct and just as specific as the English language possibly can be; but if there is doubt, then that doubt, as I said a few moments ago, has been clarified by the ruling of practically every Speaker who has ruled upon this point. The decision of Speaker Kelfer, which was referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], rendered on February 7, 1882, when the question of the privileged status of an apportionment bill was before the House, reads as follows:

The rules of the House are always subject to any constitutional provision that may be found. It may be true that under the rules, strictly speaking, this bill may not be in order. The Chair is, however, of opinion that the consideration of an apportionment bill by this Congress, fixing the representation in the next Congress under the last census, is one of high constitutional privilege. The duty of Congress to make an apportionment after each census is made imperative by the first clause of the second section of the fourteenth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which reads as follows:

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed."

"It is a fact, of which we must take notice, that this Congress must pass an apportionment bill, fixing the number of Representatives in the next Congress, or serious consequences must follow. The consideration of this question is analogous, perhaps, to no other question that is made imperative by the Constitution upon Congress."

"In view, therefore, of the character and scope of this measure and its constitutional character, the Chair feels bound to hold that it is a question of high constitutional privilege. The Chair desires also to state in this connection that it is informed that this has been treated as a question of privilege at various times in the past history of congressional legislation."

I have quoted that language from the decision of Speaker Kelfer, as found in the first volume of Hinds' Precedents, section 308, in the note.

On January 16, 1900, this same question was before the House and was ruled on by Speaker Henderson, who said:

The language of the Constitution is this—

"The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

"Now, taking the census is the basis of apportionment, and the apportionment follows. Both are absolutely and explicitly commanded by the Constitution."

That decision of Speaker Henderson was made January 16, 1900, and is to be found in the first Hinds', page 169, in the note.

Speaker Reed has also ruled on this question. On December 16, 1890, an apportionment bill was brought up in the House as a privileged question. A point of order was made that the bill was not privileged. Speaker Reed overruled the point of order on the ground that a bill making an apportionment is a privileged question, and, it being a constitutional duty imposed upon Congress, the consideration of the bill was clearly a privileged question.

There is no reasoning that will change the effect of those rulings. They have come down through a period of years. They are all in harmony with each other and follow a direct line under the plain language of the Constitution.

Are the provisions of the Constitution mandatory? That is another "if" interjected into the argument by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], if not by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM]. That question is settled in the same line of decisions, and I call attention again to the language of Speaker Keifer in the decision just read, where he says:

The duty of Congress to make an apportionment after each census is made imperative by the first clause of the second section of the fourteenth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

That directly answers the question as to whether the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory, and in the same decision Speaker Keifer said:

It is a fact of which we must take notice that this Congress must pass an apportionment bill, fixing the number of Representatives in the next Congress, or serious consequences must follow.

The SPEAKER. Would the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Does not the present situation show that Speaker Keifer may have been wrong in his conclusion that "serious consequences may follow"?

Mr. BARBOUR. The present situation is one where Congress has, in my opinion, absolutely failed to perform its constitutional duty in not having made an apportionment prior to the next succeeding election after the 1920 census, and having failed to do that at that time is no excuse for continuing to be derelict in our duty.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not the object of the constitutional provision easily understood when we reflect that its purpose must have been to secure equality of representation on this floor, so that where there has been a great increase in the population in one district and no increase in the population of another district it shall not happen that one man may be here representing 218,000 people and another representing 400,000 people? The Senate is not affected by a reapportionment, because the two Senators from each State represent all the people in the State, regardless of the number of the population; but each Member on this floor ought, under a just law, to represent as nearly as possible the same number of people. That is the object of that constitutional provision, and it seems to me, as it does to the gentleman from California, that it must be construed as mandatory to carry out the plain purpose of the Constitution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has referred to various decisions made by Speakers from time to time, but he has neglected to state that practically every one except one said that if the question came to him as a new proposition he would not rule that way.

Mr. BARBOUR. The question has been decided in the same way by each Speaker, and the list of decisions follows along in a well-defined line, regardless of what the various opinions of successive Speakers might have been. In addition to what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] said, Mr. Speaker, if this provision is not mandatory, if there is no way of com-PELLING a reapportionment of the House of Representatives, then the guarantee in the Constitution of equal representation in the House of Representatives is nullified.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can not yield now.

The language of Speaker Henderson as to whether or not the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory is absolutely in line with the decision of Speaker Keifer and leaves no doubt about the question. Speaker Henderson, on January 16, 1900, said:

The language of the Constitution is this: "The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct." Now, taking the census is the basis of apportionment, and the apportionment follows. Both are absolutely and explicitly commanded by the Constitution.

Then I also cite the language of Speaker Reed, wherein he contends that the making of an apportionment is a constitutional duty imposed upon Congress.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is made under the Constitution of the United States, not under the rules of the House, and it is made on the theory that the Constitution of the United States is superior to any rules that this House might make; and if that is not the correct theory, then this House of Representatives can pass here a rule or a set of rules that will absolutely nullify the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution itself declares—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Not now.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman announce when he is willing to yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

The Constitution itself declares that the Constitution and such laws as are made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. But the Constitution does not say that in the year 1926 we must pass the bill H. R. 111. It is not a question of law but a question of fact. If the Speaker has no power of judicial notice, the presumption is that your bill is not a constitutional bill, since the committee will not report it, and there is no duty on the part of Congress to pass this particular bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman from New York falls into the same fallacy that the rest of them do, that the House is powerless, and that a committee of Congress is more powerful than the Constitution of the United States itself.

As to the decision of Speaker GILLET, which was referred to by the gentleman from New York, the dictum of that decision was not conclusive. The gentleman from New York, as I recall, did not go on and read the final decision that was rendered by Speaker GILLET, but, after expressing his opinion as to the former decisions, Speaker GILLET followed by a ruling absolutely in line with the rulings made by previous Speakers. But this motion is even in harmony with the dictum of Speaker GILLET's ruling. Speaker GILLET said:

If there is a constitutional mandate, the House ought by its rules to provide for the proper enforcement of that mandate. If the question of the census and the question of apportionment were new questions, the Chair would rule that they are not questions of constitutional privilege. While, of course, it is necessary to obey the mandate of the Constitution and take a census every 10 years and make an apportionment, there is no reason why it should be done to-day or to-morrow.

This committee has had this bill before it since the 8th day of December, and has done nothing with it.

Speaker GILLET further declared:

It seems to the Chair that no one Member ought to have the right to determine when it should come in in preference to the regular rules of the House, but that the rules of the House, or a majority of the House, should decide it.

That is exactly what my motion proposes to do; to submit this matter to the vote of the House, and if a majority of the House decides that it is proper to take this question up, then it will be taken up under the decision of the House.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Does the gentleman's bill increase the representation of any State?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. It fixes the membership of the House at the same number as at present.

Mr. CONNERY. Granted, then, that the Speaker should rule the gentleman is in order, how does the gentleman fix that so it would come under section 2 of the fourteenth amendment, which provides:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

If California is increased but Massachusetts is not and New York is not and their populations have increased, how is the gentleman's bill going to be constitutional under that article?

Mr. BARBOUR. My bill is brought in under the census of 1920, the only census we have had to go on, and which we should have acted on years ago.

Mr. CONNERY. Under the census of 1920 does the gentleman give each State the representation to which it is entitled?

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely; on the basis of a membership of 435.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman contends that section 2 of Article XIV, which provides—

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed—is mandatory?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I do.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then the gentleman refers back to that other section of the Constitution which provides that the enumeration shall be made within three years after the first Congress and within every subsequent term of 10 years. If the gentleman is strictly technical, would not that mandate be complied with if this Congress performs that act any time between now and 1931?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. I will say to the gentleman that under the ruling of one of the Speakers of the House it is held—and one ruling explicitly states—that this mandatory duty is imposed on the Congress to pass an apportionment bill before the next succeeding election after the taking of a census, and I am relying on all of those rulings.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That would certainly mean any time before the next census?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; before the next succeeding election. Either I did not make myself plain about that or the gentleman did not understand me.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. All right; the gentleman has answered that. Let me ask the gentleman this: This duty to apportion is laid upon the Congress by the Constitution, is it not?

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But the Constitution also provides that the Congress shall have the power to make its own rules of procedure?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Having that right, is not this duty we have to perform like every other duty, subject to our rules of procedure, unless those rules absolutely violate some particular clause of the Constitution?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. I think the gentleman's proposition would lead us to the conclusion that the rules we might adopt here are superior to the express provisions of the Constitution itself.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Now, the question of the election of Members has been suggested to me very sagely by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. The election and qualification of the Members of this House is of the highest privilege, is it not?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. You have an election contest pending before some committee, and that committee has not solved it and it has not made any report. Under the gentleman's doctrine any Member could rise upon this floor on every day of the session and introduce a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of that election contest and bring it up on the floor of this House, could he not?

Mr. BARBOUR. If it is a constitutional question, he could.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am not going to assume the gentleman's premise, but if it is a privileged question under the Constitution he could do it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It is a privileged question under the Constitution, because it affects the membership of this House.

Mr. BARBOUR. And if I remember correctly, there was one ruling under which that was done, and an election committee was discharged from the further consideration of the case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield in connection with a question asked by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the gentleman from California to state, in reply to an interrogatory by the gentleman from Texas, that he was basing his conclusion upon the decisions of Speakers of the House that it is a question of privilege.

Mr. BARBOUR. The language of the Constitution itself and the rulings of Speakers of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman assert the position here that by the strict language of the Constitution itself there is a mandate to apportion every 10 years?

Mr. BARBOUR. I did not quite hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman take the position that the language of the Constitution itself, by a strict interpretation, requires that Congress shall apportion every 10 years?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do; yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman kindly point out the specific language of the Constitution which justifies that position?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will read it:

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That relates exclusively to the enumeration.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I concede that might be a mandatory provision, but where is the provision that makes it mandatory, after the enumeration has been made, that we shall apportion the membership of Congress.

Mr. BARBOUR. The following language: That the representation in the House of Representatives shall be based upon the population of the various States. Now, if that does not follow, then the constitutional provisions relative to equal representation on the floor of this House are absolutely meaningless. It must follow, and the Speakers I have cited here have decided it does follow.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me it follows that when you do make that apportionment it must be in accordance with the last census, but I can not read anywhere in the provisions of the Constitution where it provides that the apportionment itself is a mandatory proposition. And, further, I would like to ask the gentleman to show me anywhere in the Constitution—granted it is mandatory—where it provides that it must be done otherwise than in accordance with the rules and procedure of the House.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman on the last proposition that if this motion is held to be in order and the House decides to consider the bill, I presume it will consider the bill under the rules of the House.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman is in opposition to the actual rules of the House. If the gentleman's motion prevails and it is ruled it must be taken up at once, the gentleman puts his attitude above the decision of the majority of the Members of the House.

Mr. BARBOUR. No.

Mr. SNELL. Absolutely.

Mr. BARBOUR. I put the Constitution of the United States above the rules of the House.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman this: When the Constitution says that the basis of representation in the House of Representatives shall be based upon population is that a mere temporary thing or is it something that endures for all time? Does the gentleman believe that the Constitution was intended to run along indefinitely, or does the gentleman conceive it possible that it was just a temporary idea, which was to be exhausted after the first census? Then let me ask the gentleman, if this is a trust imposed upon Congress and it is mandatory, in accordance with the decisions of three Speakers of this House, is it not the definite and positive duty of the House all the time, every day and every hour, to follow that mandate?

Mr. BARBOUR. It seems to me that that is the only position that can logically be taken in this matter.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman says that if he is now permitted to present the resolution which he has offered, we will then proceed under the rules.

Mr. BARBOUR. It will then be considered under the rules of the House. I presume this. I am not making the rule, but I presume that is what follows.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is satisfied with that kind of procedure?

Mr. BARBOUR. I would not say I am satisfied, but I am presuming the Speaker will outline the method of procedure.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Suppose after the Speaker of the House has held the gentleman's motion in order we then proceed to consider this bill under the rules of the House and the House then determines to refer the bill back to the Committee on the Census, how would the gentleman be any better off than he is now?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is not a question of whether I will be any better off personally.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then would the Constitution have been satisfied?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is a question of consideration. If referring the bill back to the committee is consideration, the House would have the right to do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then, I will ask the gentleman, did not the House provide for the consideration of this matter when it adopted the rules at the very opening of this session?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; it did not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. By appointing the Committee on the Census?

Mr. BARBOUR. If the gentleman will read that rule, he will find it did not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The House appointed a committee to consider this matter, and there is a method provided by which the gentleman can proceed under the rules of the House to get the committee discharged. Has not the House provided all the necessary procedure by which the gentleman may proceed to get consideration of his bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. Section 884-A, to which the gentleman refers, the rule that was adopted, I believe, on the first or second day of this session, provides for instructing the committee; filing a petition to be signed by a majority of the Members of the House to instruct the committee to report a bill; not to discharge it, but to instruct it to report a bill. The Committee on the Census has acted on this matter—at least, it has refused to report out any bill—but the rule we adopted for instructing a committee does not supersede the plain provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the gentleman has not exhausted his remedy by seeking to instruct the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to my friend that if he will go before that committee and try to get a bill out, I am sure he will be exhausted before he gets it out. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is an argumentum ad hominem. The gentleman may be exhausted, but the remedy is not exhausted.

Mr. BARBOUR. I decline to enter into any argument with the gentleman other than in the English language.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. To buttress the position of the gentleman from California, I desire to call to the attention of the Chair the pledge given to the people of this country by the writers of the Federalist, in response to whose arguments, which were very persuasive, the very adoption of this Constitution was secured; and I would call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that No. 58 of the Federalist is largely devoted to this very subject, and that in one paragraph it is either Alexander Hamilton or James Madison who is pledging the faith of those who wrote the Constitution. One of these gentlemen contrasts the course of the various States with that which was promised to them by the Constitution.

Speaking of the Constitution as laid before the people for adoption, he said the unequivocal objects of these regulations are first to readjust from time to time the apportionment of Representatives to the number of inhabitants, and so forth; secondly—mind you, he says this is the unequivocal object of these regulations—to augment the number of Representatives at the same periods, and he completes his contrast between the promise of the Constitution and the situation in the States by pointing out that the most effectual security—and I quote his words—"In any of them is resolvable into a mere directory provision." Yet gentlemen now urge that the promise of a mandatory provision made by the men who wrote the Constitution shall be, to quote the language of the day, "resolvable into a mere directory provision." [Applause.]

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat diverted from the line of discussion, but when the recent series of questions was started I was discussing, as I recall, the decision of Speaker GILLET, who, after discussing the preceding rulings of Speakers on this question, then said that he deemed it the proper course to pursue, or to use his own language:

But these questions have been decided to be privileged by a series of decisions, and the Chair recognizes the importance of following precedents and obeying a well-established rule even if it is unreasonable that this may be a government of laws and not of men.

This decision was rendered on May 6, 1921. Following that, on October 14, 1921, when Mr. Siegel, of New York, presented an apportionment bill and moved as a privileged question to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill, a point of order was made by Mr. BLANTON that the motion was not privileged. Speaker GILLET held that a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the apportionment bill presented a question of constitutional privilege.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough to convince any fair-minded man that this question is one of constitutional privilege, that the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory, and the question before this House to-day is simply this: Shall we abide by and follow the express mandate of the Constitution or shall we say to the country that we refuse to be bound by the express mandate of the Constitution? [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if I had been of opinion that the provision of the Constitution with reference to apportionment was a mandatory provision, I should certainly have been unwilling to rest contented during this last Congress without some action being attempted. I say this not by way of criticism of any who entertain a different view, but merely expressing my own conviction growing out of my conscientious regard for the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR], at the outset of his argument, directed attention to paragraph 723 of the Manual, and quoted therefrom the following:

The matters reported under the provisions of this rule are denominated "privileged reports" or "privileged questions," and since the privilege relates merely to the order of business under the rules, they must be distinguished from "questions of privilege" which relate to the safety or efficiency of the House itself defined in Rule IX. Therefore "questions of privilege" take precedence over these matters which are privileged under the rules.

I think it is a safe answer to that phase of the argument of the gentleman from California to say that the rules of this House define what constitute questions of privilege as distinct from privileged bills and resolutions.

Now, Rule IX, adopted in 1880, says:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and integrity of its proceedings; second, the right, reputation, and conduct of Members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions except motions to adjourn.

There is therefore defined in the rules themselves these questions of privilege which have precedence under the rules; and so in considering this proposition we are remitted wholly to the constitutional grounds.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair and all the Members, since the Chair has indicated that perhaps this may reach the House for decision, I call attention for whatever it may be worth to the fact that this measure is brought before the House by the gentleman from California in a manner which differs entirely from all the other propositions that have been brought before the House and which are quoted as precedents.

I do not know how much it may be worth from a parliamentary standpoint, but I direct attention to the fact that all of these other bills, whether they relate to the taking of the census or whether they relate to apportionment—and I shall endeavor to present the distinction between the two later—come as reports from the committees and were upon the Calendar of the House. The gentleman from California presents this in the form of a motion to discharge the committee, so that to that extent at least his case is not on all fours with the cases that have preceded and which are cited as precedents.

I do not believe that the provision in the first sentence of the clause quoted from the fourteenth amendment—

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed—is mandatory as to time of apportionment.

I think a fair interpretation of that means that when the apportionment is made then that rule shall apply.

I call attention to the fact, and I think gentlemen have confused two questions here—I think there is a distinction, and I shall try to make it clear a little later between the provision for the taking of the census and the provision for making the apportionment of Representatives.

Let us look at the specific language requiring the taking of the census:

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of Congress and within every subsequent term of 10 years in such a manner as they shall by law direct.

There the time is fixed. It is made definite, certain, and specific as to when that shall be done. These men who so carefully bullded the fabric upon which all of our Institutions rest wrote this in the paragraph, and I am quoting from the original Constitution. They said:

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States, which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined, etc.

If it had been within the thought of those who originally constructed this Constitution or if it had been the intent and thought of those who with such care after so many months of study and struggle brought out the fourteenth amendment that it should be mandatory upon each Congress immediately following the census to fix the apportionment, is it not reasonable to suppose that they would have said so with the same distinctness and the same force as they defined the years in which the census should be taken?

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. How does the gentleman meet the words of the men which I have read to him as set forth by them to persuade the people to adopt the Constitution wherein they disclose that they understood their own words to be mandatory and not directory?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there have been many constructions of the Constitution made by the courts of the country that were quite as far afield from utterances given in the Federalist as is the interpretation upon this proposition which I have attempted to give.

Mr. LUCE. But I understood the gentleman to say that if they had meant this they would have said so, and I have pointed out to him that in another place they did say so.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] that if he will search Madison's report of the convention that framed the original Constitution he will find that the debate on this clause centered around this proposition: Gouverneur Morris was in favor of basing representation upon wealth. Mr. Rutledge, I think it was, or some other prominent member of the convention, was in favor of basing it upon wealth and upon population. That position was assailed and opposed by the other members of the convention. They finally worked out this provision providing that representation should be based on numbers alone. That is where this clause of the Constitution came from. Reapportionment is not mandatory, but when it is made it shall be based upon numbers and not upon wealth or territory.

Mr. LOZIER. And further answering the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], if the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, I am familiar with the article in the Federalist to which he refers, and I call his attention to the fact that in the records of the debates in the Constitutional Convention on this provision absolutely no suggestion or intimation was made that this was a mandatory provision.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, while I regret to take more time from the gentleman from Tennessee, I ask leave to say that I not only found that to be the fact, but that is why I went to the Federalist to find out what was the fact.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish now to come to the precedents just for a moment. Perhaps gentlemen who have not gone carefully into the record may entertain the idea that these rulings referred to of the several speakers have been accompanied by opinions.

I call attention to the fact that the only opinion given with a ruling upon a bill providing for reapportionment was that given by Speaker Keifer in 1882. I have that here. It has been read and I shall not attempt to repeat it. I may say, with all due deference to a very distinguished man, General Keifer, for whom I have great respect, it does not seem to me to have been a very carefully prepared opinion. It seems to have been a decision rendered upon the spur of the moment. There is some language used in it which is wholly incapable of understanding now. I refer to the language:

It is a fact of which we must take judicial notice that this Congress must pass an apportionment bill fixing the number of representatives in the next Congress or serious consequences must follow.

I submit that that language is wholly nonunderstandable in so far as the "serious consequences that must follow" are concerned. Certainly the first Congress after the census of 1920 did not fix the apportionment and no serious consequences have followed in this period upon that. But that opinion of Mr. Speaker Keifer is the only opinion rendered.

I have here the record of the Reed ruling in 1890. Here is all that occurred:

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12500) making apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the eleventh census.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, does this come up under special order?

The SPEAKER. It comes up as a privileged motion.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know under what rule this is determined to be a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule? A bill making an apportionment is a privileged question.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no designation of that sort in the rules that I know of.

The SPEAKER. Not in the rules themselves, but it has been so decided before.

I think it would have been most valuable to us now if we could have had the clear-cut incisive reasoning of that great Speaker upon this question.

The Henderson ruling of 1900 was not upon a question of apportionment. It was upon the question of taking the census and, as I have asserted before, I think there is a clear distinction between the two. The 1910 ruling, the only one that is quoted in the Manual, arose not upon the question of apportionment but upon a small amendment to the census act. It was not even a census bill itself, and even on that relatively minor matter, concerning which, as I remember it, there was very little contest, that question was submitted by Speaker Cannon to the House for a decision, and he himself rendered no opinion upon it. The House decided that it was in order. But that had reference to the taking of the census, not to apportionment.

The Clark ruling in 1918, which has been cited as one following the Keifer ruling, was not upon apportionment but was upon the taking of the census, which I am prepared to concede is mandatory, although, Mr. Speaker, I believe that even as to these matters which we call mandatory they should properly come under the rules of the House, because the same Constitution which says that a census shall be taken says that each body may make the rules for its own action. [Applause.] In my opinion, the power to make rules for its own government extends with as much force to those acts through which it will undertake to carry out mandatory provisions of the Constitution as it does to appropriation bills or revenue bills or to any other class of legislation. [Applause.]

However, we may pass that by. The Gillett ruling was on the question of apportionment. That is the ruling of 1921, and I have that here:

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7882, a bill providing for reapportionment. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to four hours.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a privileged bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

There is no reasoning there, no opinion given; but, Mr. Speaker, there was an occasion upon which Mr. Speaker GILLET rendered an opinion, an elaborate opinion, the most elaborate that has ever been rendered upon this subject matter. It is true that the proposition upon which he was ruling was not on all fours with this.

We are seeking to reach the law frankly and without prejudice. The proposition upon which the Speaker ruled was a resolution proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], which merely directed an investigation to be made as to certain States; but in reviewing the whole broad subject matter of privilege, privilege under the rules, privilege under the Constitution, privilege under this Rule IX, defining the questions of privilege, Mr. Speaker GILLETT did take occasion to say that if he were ruling de novo, if he were ruling on an original proposition, he would not hesitate to hold both as to the taking of the census and as to apportionment that it did not present such a question of privilege as that it may be brought up in the manner in which it was then sought to bring it up by that particular resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It may be added that the resolution referred to, in addition to a matter of investigation, also provided that the committee, when it made a report, would bring in a plan for reapportionment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman. That was not an effort, of course, to take anything away from the committee. That was just presented, assigning that it was privileged upon the floor of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so much for the precedents. I think I have given all that is given in the book of precedents. Only three of these decisions have been on the question of apportionment. The others have been on the question of taking the census or questions related thereto.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has asked me if the Gillett decision was not based on a report of a committee. The decision which I quoted just a few moments ago, where the Speaker merely said, "The Chair overrules the point of order," was based on a report of the Committee on the Census presented by Mr. Siegel, the chairman, or acting chairman.

We have quite an important question, it seems to me, to deal with here to-day. Mr. Speaker Kelfer said, at the conclusion of his opinion, that "the Chair has been informed that these matters have been privileged heretofore," but there were no decisions cited in connection with his opinion, and there are none given in either Hinds' Precedents or the Cannon supplement thereto, so far as I have been able to find.

But proceeding upon precedent, Mr. Speaker, and precedent alone, may make a mistake of yesterday the law of to-morrow; and I respectfully submit that in the interest of orderly procedure, in the interest of that stability of action in the House of Representatives that we should have here in this calm time, when there is involved no great question of politics, when there is nothing to excite either our prejudices or our fears, we might very well indeed correct—because I do not know that any better time will ever come than this, when all is tranquil and serene in the House of Representatives—correct what I conceive to be erroneous precedents of the past. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I know that it is highly presumptuous to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question about legislative procedure, but I want to invite attention to the fact that Article I of the Constitution deals with legislative powers. Now, the original subsection 3 of section 2 of the Constitution dealt with apportionment. The question to which I wish to invite the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee is that as a part of subsection 3 of section 2 of Article I, after dealing with the question of apportionment, why was there a provision made for taking an enumeration every 10 years if it was not intended by the original framers of the Constitution that an apportionment would follow?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, let me say to the gentleman that it was intended when the apportionment was made that it should be based upon population. That is clear. But I do not think that the provision every 10 years meant that it was mandatory to follow at once with the apportionment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why, then, make it mandatory that the enumeration shall be taken every 10 years if it was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the apportionment would follow?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that there were other questions besides apportionment involved, as, for instance, direct taxes.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will further yield, this was placed there as a part of subsection 3 of section 2 of Article I of the Constitution, which dealt with the question of apportionment, and it was evidently a mandatory provision that the enumeration should be taken every 10 years in order that the apportionment could be based upon it.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DAVEY. I would like to ask a question, entirely for the purpose of obtaining information, because of the fact that the House may be called upon to vote upon this. I would like to ask what might seem to be an absurd question, and that is this: What would be the situation from the constitutional standpoint if every Congress from the beginning of the Nation had refused to reapportion? That sounds like an absurd question, and I mean it to be, in order to bring out the thought I have in mind. Suppose every Congress from the beginning of the Government had refused to reapportion. What would be the situation with reference to this constitutional mandate, that it should be based on population?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The situation would be this, that the State of New Hampshire would have 3 Representatives, Massachusetts 8, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 1, Connecticut 5, New Jersey 4, Pennsylvania 8, Delaware 1, Maryland 6, Virginia 10, North Carolina 5, South Carolina 5, and Georgia 3. I do not know what it would be with respect to the new States.

The SPEAKER. The debate is confined to this parliamentary question, and not to the merits of the proposed legislation.

Mr. DAVEY. Assuming that it might go on for 50 years—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I feel that I should yield only for questions germane to the parliamentary phase of the discussion.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. May I remind the gentleman that in the Constitutional Convention all the discussions on the taking of an enumeration of the census were bottomed on the question of how direct taxes should be apportioned among the States?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, that was one of the leading elements of it. Of course, the question of representation was involved.

I think it worth inserting in this discussion a quotation from a report made by the Committee on Elections No. 2 in the first session of the Sixty-eighth Congress. This report was filed March 29, 1924, by Hon. JOHN M. NELSON, of Wisconsin, who was at that time chairman of the committee.

It was relative to the claim of E. W. Cole for a seat in the House of Representatives as a Representative at large from the State of Texas.

Mr. Cole based his claim upon the proposition that it was the mandatory duty of Congress to apportion following the census; and that although Congress failed to do so, nevertheless had it done so Texas would have been entitled to an additional Member; that he received the nomination for Representative at large and was voted for as such and had a certificate of election from the Governor of Texas. The committee in reporting upon the case said upon this point:

Claimant sets up the theory that not only is the direction for taking the census made mandatory in the Constitution, but that the action of Congress to enact a reapportionment act based upon each succeeding census is also mandatory.

Your committee, of course, agrees that taking of the census is made mandatory by the Constitution; but while it be true that for a hundred years the Congress has at its first session following the taking of a census enacted a reapportionment act, the time of performing this duty is not made mandatory by the Constitution but remains discretionary with the Congress.

While it is true that some color may be given a claim that long-established custom has fixed that time for Congress to pass a reapportionment act the first session of Congress following the taking of the census, it still remains custom and not a constitutional provision nevertheless.

Your committee sympathizes with the view that since no explicit time is set by the Constitution in which Congress shall enact a reapportionment act following the taking of a census, the framers of the Constitution had in mind that Congress should within a reasonable time after the taking of the census make a reapportionment. Your committee also sympathizes with the view that the long-established custom of the Congress in providing for a reapportionment at the first session following the taking of the census lends some weight to the claim that this practice has established that time as being a reasonable time within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the House now is sitting as a court to interpret a provision of the Constitution of the United States. The question before us is not political. It is judicial. The gentleman from Tennessee has made an elaborate argument to show that the provision in the Constitution relating to apportionment is not mandatory but merely directory. And, in my judgment, he is clearly mistaken. For if it is merely directory it may properly be entirely ignored.

Mr. Speaker, there is no one on the floor for whom I have a higher opinion than for my friend from Tennessee, but to show that he is mistaken, I first invite his attention to a statement of fact made to me a few minutes ago by a gentleman from Michigan, who said that—since the enumeration of 1910 and the apportionment under it, the population has so changed in congressional districts in Michigan that now there are more voters in some districts than there are men, women, and children in others.

Now, these are exactly the sort of inequalities and unjust conditions which the provision in the Constitution was intended to prevent. And, Mr. Speaker, these great inequalities and injustices in Michigan and others like them in many other States put the gentleman from Tennessee and those who support his contention to-day in the position of saying that the men who made the Constitution of the United States were so derelict in their duty—so careless in writing that great instrument—that they left out of it any mandatory, any real, provision respecting the vastly important subject of apportionment, and carelessly made the provision merely directory, thus leaving Congress without any constitutional command respecting apportionment, and entirely in its discretion to allow those inequalities and injustices in Michigan to continue forever.

In construing a statute, and the Constitution is, in a sense of the word, a statute, the greatest of all, we should—the courts say we must—consider the purpose for which it was enacted.

There were in England when our Constitution was drafted what were called "rotten boroughs," where a few very wealthy landed proprietors controlled the vote entirely. In some of these only 30 or 40 votes were needed to send a man to Parliament, while in others it required hundreds or thousands. The men who wrote the Constitution of the United States knew that this inequality was very wrong, and they specifically provided, in language which, properly construed, in my judgment, is mandatory, that every 10 years there should be a census. And then what? That "Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers."

Mr. Speaker, how can Congress obey that constitutional mandate and apportion Representatives "according to numbers" if Congress pays no attention to numbers? Here is a gentleman at my left who says that he has 600,000 people in his district. He did not have them there in 1910. There are more than twice the number proper under the apportionment of 1910.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that the congestion of population in the district to which the gentleman refers can be remedied by having the State legislature redistrict that State and reapportion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. The Congressional Directory shows that two districts in the State of Missouri, from which the gentleman comes who has just interrogated the gentleman from Wisconsin, have a population of less than 140,000 each, or practically only one-fourth as many as some districts in the State of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish gentlemen not to discuss the merits of this proposition. The question is on the parliamentary situation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the Speaker will permit, I beg respectfully to differ with him on that point; I think the reference to population by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] was germane and proper and very effective in showing the purpose, which must have been in the minds of the men who wrote the Constitution, to do away with inequality of representation on this floor. The facts presented by the gentleman from Michigan help us very much to properly construe this provision of the Constitution and to show that the pending motion involves a question of high constitutional privilege. If this provision is merely directory, it leaves it to the majority of this House not only to ignore the census of 1920 but to continue ignoring it until after the census of 1930, or after the census of 1940.

Now, we have thus far ignored the census of 1920. Suppose we ignore it six years more or until after the census of 1930 has been taken? Then, will the House of Representatives have been apportioned "according to numbers"? Not at all. The plain intent of the Constitution will have been violated. We have ignored the numbers found in the census of 1920, and if it is properly within the discretion of a majority of the House to do that it can ignore the census of 1920 or of 1930. In saying this we impute to the makers of the Constitution what is really the grossest negligence ever attributed to them during the 130 years and more since they finished their great work. Because, as I said a moment ago, they knew about the curse of the rotten boroughs in England.

They knew that 30 or 40 votes could send one member to Parliament and that it took hundreds or thousands to send another. And knowing that they said an apportionment shall be made every 10 years, and in "accordance with numbers." But if this constitutional provision is merely directory, then you can let this go on indefinitely, never have another apportionment, and maintain forever the gross inequality which now exists in Michigan and elsewhere throughout the Nation.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Assuming that this should be held to be a privileged matter and were brought to a vote in the House, and the House by its deliberate vote should lay it on the table or otherwise dispose of it, without doing the thing the gentleman speaks of, then what method would the gentleman adopt to compel the House to do it? In other words, the iniquity the gentleman speaks of would still exist unless the gentleman has some means by which he can compel this House to do it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman, in the language of the Good Book, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." We will take up one question at a time. The House should do its duty on the issue now before it and leave subsequent issues to be determined when they arise. For Congress to do the right thing to-day would not be a precedent for it to do a wrong thing to-morrow. Under our oaths we should strive to do our duty when it arises and not to evade it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. BARBOUR. I wish to state, in reply to the question asked by the gentleman from Connecticut, that if this question is privileged it is privileged, and if it is laid on the table it does not lose its privileged status, but can be called up by the House at any time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I have only one thing further to say. The object for which a statute or a constitutional provision is enacted is very potent in determining its meaning under a fair construction; and the language of the Constitution, which requires a census to be taken once in 10 years and then requires that "representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers," is absolutely nullified if you hold it directory and can properly leave it in the discretion of a majority on this floor to say whether we need ever have another apportionment.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the admission just made by the gentleman from Wisconsin is, to my mind, the determining factor in this matter, in which he says that if the House to-day should vote to lay this resolution on the table, it having been held in order, that to-morrow we could take it up again. If to-morrow, then it could be taken up the following day, and so on to the end of the chapter.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would not the Speaker immediately hold, if the majority should decide in accordance with the contention of the gentleman from Connecticut, that if brought up again to-morrow, being the same motion, it was purely dilatory?

Mr. TILSON. I do not think so. I think the Chair might well hold, and the gentleman from Wisconsin probably would agree with the Chair, that the membership of the House, having slept over it and perhaps prayed over it during the night, would have come to a different conclusion, so that on to-morrow any gentleman would be entirely justified in bringing up such an important matter. He would be warranted in assuming that, having had time to reflect over the enormity of the crime that had been committed the day before, that on the following day the House would be ready to vote as he thinks it should vote.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the question is privileged, then it is a matter that the House should act upon one way or the other. Merely laying it upon the table does not act upon it. It retains its privileged status until the House either passes it or refuses to pass it on the direct question of its passage.

Mr. TILSON. Well, let us take the first horn of the dilemma. Let us assume that the House, on a direct vote, votes down the bill of the gentleman. Then if it be privileged to-day, the same bill or another one like it is just as much privileged tomorrow, and thus a bill can be brought in day after day until the session closes. The logic of the situation brings you inevitably to this conclusion.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Does the gentleman hold there should be no such thing as a question of high constitutional privilege?

Mr. TILSON. Oh, it is not necessary to so hold in this connection.

Mr. LUCE. But the gentleman's argument could be addressed to any question of constitutional privilege. The same considerations would prevail.

Mr. TILSON. No; Mr. Speaker, I believe with Mr. Speaker GILLET that there is no provision of the Constitution that would warrant the bringing in of a resolution at any time, under any conditions, regardless of the rules of the House under the guise of constitutional privilege and thereby compel the House to take action upon it in spite of its own rules made in direct compliance with the Constitution.

Mr. LUCE. How is that consistent with the gentleman's statement that the gentleman does believe in such a thing as a question of high constitutional privilege when the gentleman goes on to say that there is none?

Mr. TILSON. Not at all. I do not say that. Take, for instance, the matter of a quorum, that is a matter of high constitutional privilege. Take the instance of a roll call where one-fifth of the House may demand a ye-and-nay vote. These and others are matters of high constitutional privilege.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that under the rules of the House, clause 884-A, the gentleman from California, or any other Member of the House, has the right under the rules of the House, without going around the rules and resorting to a technical construction of the Constitution, to move to discharge a committee. The gentleman is aware of that fact?

Mr. TILSON. Oh, yes; there is a rule adopted at the beginning of this session of Congress which provides for that very thing so that it can be done in accordance with the rules of the House if an actual majority favor it.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I happen to be a member of the Census Committee that has had this matter under consideration, and I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in 1921, realizing we were facing a most anomalous situation, and possibly more so than any situation the framers of the Constitution had in mind, on account of the disturbed conditions of 1920 as a result of the World War, which prevented the taking of an accurate census, we finally worked out and brought to the floor of the House a bill that we thought would do justice as nearly as possible to all concerned. It was recommended by a majority of 4 votes, among which were the votes of the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I prefer not to go into that. I took the floor simply to call attention to the position in which it would land us if this ruling of Mr. Speaker Keifer should become permanently established by a similar ruling here to-day. I am afraid of the logical and inevitable consequences of such a ruling.

My own State gains a Member of Congress under any plan of apportionment that has been proposed. Personally I am not opposed to a reapportionment and am not opposing it here, but I am very solicitous about the rules and the procedure of the House under which we must do our work here.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to detain the House if the Speaker is ready to rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Inasmuch as the proponents of this proposition have relied so largely upon precedent to support their contention, it is only fair to call attention to the fact that upon strict construction not a single precedent cited may be said to be directly upon all fours with the case at bar, with the single exception of the decision by Speaker Henderson in the Fifty-sixth Congress, which was specifically overruled by Speaker GILLET in the notable decision so frequently quoted. Speaker GILLET in that decision refers to the Henderson precedent as the one opinion in all the related precedents on the subject which stands alone on all fours with the present case.

And in concluding his discussion he holds—

There being this one precedent and no others . . . the Chair sustains the point of order.

In all of the precedents of the House upon this point there is not a single unrepudiated citation upon all fours with the contention advanced by the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. BARBOUR. We can use our reasoning power a little bit and apply these things.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; but the precedents which the gentlemen have cited do not apply to the case at bar; and let me also say, Mr. Speaker, that this question has twice been submitted for final authoritative decision to the House itself—first in the Sixty-first Congress on the question of overriding the Calendar Wednesday rule with a report from the Committee on the Census and again in the Sixty-seventh Congress on appeal from the decision of the Chair—and the House upon each occasion voted overwhelmingly against forcing consideration of a proposition privileged under the Constitution in violation of the order of business provided under the rules.

Another corroborating decision which has not been referred to in the debate is that rendered in the Sixty-first Congress by Mr. James R. Mann, of Illinois, presiding as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, in which he held that, though authorized by constitutional mandate, an appropriation was not in order on a general appropriation bill unless and until such constitutional authorization had been interpreted and effectuated by appropriate statutory enactment.

An interpretation which permits any man under guise of constitutional authorization to rise upon the floor at will and, like Joshua commanding the sun to stand still, halt summarily and peremptorily the proceedings of the House, invade the prerogatives of a committee, wrench from its files a bill which has formally been laid upon the table, sweep aside the rules, supersede accredited leaders on the floor, supplant the order of business, and compel the House to consider business which it does not wish to consider is the very height of absurdity.

It is wholly out of conformity with governing precedent and absolutely antagonistic to every fundamental principle of practical parliamentary procedure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Since two weeks ago when the gentleman from California very courteously notified the Chair that he intended to take this method of procedure with regard to the apportionment bill the Chair has given very careful thought to the precedents. He has read and reread the various decisions of Speakers, and the action of the House relating to this specific proposition.

The Chair has no doubt whatever that if the precedents are to be followed the gentleman from California has the right to use this method in bringing the bill before the House. The Chair can see a technical distinction between bringing up a bill under constitutional privilege of moving to discharge a committee, but the Chair thinks that if the precedents are to be followed the gentleman from California would have had the right one minute after the Speaker had been sworn in and before any committee of the House had been organized to call up this bill. It does not seem to the Chair that a situation should exist where an individual Member who as a matter of constitutional privilege could call up a measure like this at any time. Still the Chair has no doubt whatever that if the precedents are to be followed this would result. Consequently the gentleman from California has the right to call up this bill by a motion to discharge the committee.

The only question then remaining for the Chair to decide is whether in view of the seriousness of this question, in view of its effect upon the rules of the House, this precedent should be overruled.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] have very well given you the history of these precedents, beginning in 1882 with the decision of Speaker Keifer and followed ever since without exception by all the Speakers of the House, but frequently with the suggestion that had the case come before them de novo they would have ruled otherwise.

The fact is that the precedents of 44 years are before us for indorsement or rejection. The only exception to the ruling of Speaker Keifer occurred, not by the decision of any Speaker but by the decision of the House itself. A motion was made to bring up a bill of this sort on Calendar Wednesday. Speaker Cannon, following the line of decisions of his predecessors, held it in order, but the House failed to sustain the Speaker and held that it was not in order. In other words, the House has on a previous occasion held that this question is not of such high constitutional privilege as to supersede the rules of the House and directly overruled Speaker Keifer in that respect.

The foundation of the opinion of Mr. Speaker Keifer was, first, that a matter of this constitutional privilege overrides all rules of the House. Secondly, an apportionment bill is of such constitutional privilege. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that there is a distinction between the privilege of a proposition relating to an apportionment and to a census. The Chair is of opinion that the two are not on all fours; but the decision of Speaker Keifer holds that they are, and that decision has been followed by various Speakers, as to the question of whether or not the matter is of a constitutional privilege of this nature and should override the rules of the House.

The decision of Speaker GILLET has been referred to, and there is one sentence in that opinion which, it seems to the Chair, ought to govern this question. Speaker GILLET said:

If there is a constitutional mandate, the House ought by its rules to provide for the proper enforcement of that mandate, but it is still a question for the House how and when and under what procedure it shall be done, and a constitutional question, like any other, ought to be decided according to the rules that the House has adopted.

To the mind of the Chair the logic of this whole question is that the rules of the House ought not to be set aside at all times and under all conditions by merely bringing up a question claimed to be of high constitutional privilege. The Chair, therefore, if the decision was put up to him for the first time, if it was a matter of rulings of possibly one or two Speakers, the Chair would have no hesitation whatever in overruling this precedent. However, in this case the precedent is nearly 50 years old. It was first set in 1882 and has been followed by such distinguished Speakers as Mr. Reed, Mr. Henderson, Mr. Cannon, and others.

The Chair has no desire to shrink responsibility. In most cases the Chair is willing to accept his full share of responsibility, but he believes he owes it as a duty to the House in a case of such large and vital importance as this, which may greatly affect the rules and orderly procedure of this House, to submit the determination of the question to the House itself. The Chair has frankly stated his opinion that this precedent ought to be overruled, having also expressed his opinion that unless it is overruled the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] has an absolute right to bring up this bill in this manner. The Chair, therefore, will put the question in this way:

Is the consideration of the bill called up by the motion of the gentleman from California in order as a question of constitutional privilege, the rule prescribing the order of business to the contrary notwithstanding?

Gentlemen who agree with the position taken by the gentleman from California will vote "yea"; those who agree with the position taken by the gentleman from New York will vote "nay."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. I do not believe the House entirely understood the way the question is to be voted on.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Is the consideration of the bill called up by the motion of the gentleman from California in order as a question of constitutional privilege, the rule prescribing the order of business to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand the question as put by the Chair, those who vote nay vote in favor of sustaining the point of order made by the gentleman from New York to the motion made by the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. Exactly.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I do not think that is quite the case.

The SPEAKER. The question is simply this: Those who favor sustaining the position of the gentleman from California in moving to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill upon the ground that it is of the highest constitutional privilege, so high that it overrides all the rules of the House, will vote yea, and those of the contrary opinion will vote nay.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have it clear as to why we are voting to discharge the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated the question. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 87, nays 265, not voting 79, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is sustained. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York on his resolution.

AIRCRAFT IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 199 simply provides for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9690) authorizing the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith.

It provides for four hours' general debate, to be confined to the bill, and that the bill otherwise be considered under the general rules of the House.

One reason why it is necessary to consider this legislation at this time is that, as Members will remember, at the time the naval appropriation bill was considered on the floor, all provisions for aircraft were stricken out on points of order, inasmuch as there is no legislation at the present time providing for the procurement of aircraft for the Navy.

I am not familiar with the technical provisions of the bill concerning the details of aircraft, but from the statements made before the Committee on Rules it seems to me that this is a real step forward toward constructive legislation, in that it defines a definite program in keeping with the general upkeep and progress of the Navy and in keeping with the naval program as adopted at the naval conference. There is a unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and there was no objection to it in the Committee on Rules. It is respectfully recommended to you for your careful consideration.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9690, the purpose of which has already been stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9690. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] will kindly take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9690, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9690, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9690) to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, although the bill is very small and will be discussed very fully under the five-minute rule, I will ask unanimous consent that the first reading may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, since becoming a Member of Congress I have attended sessions regularly and have been very much interested at each session.

One of the outstanding achievements of this administration is its public economy. From the very outset President Coolidge has stressed this subject more than any other, nor has his advocacy been in vain. Early in 1924, during the first session of Congress under his administration, and as a result of his leadership and insistence, a tax bill was passed reducing Federal taxes approximately $500,000,000 annually. The enactment of this tax revision law by no means satisfied President Coolidge's ideals of tax reform and tax reduction. He issued a statement the day he signed the bill to the effect that he would insist upon still further reforms and reductions in our Federal taxation. In his message to Congress last December he placed the problem of tax reduction foremost. As a result, another tax reduction bill, the second under the Coolidge administration, has become a law. The proof of both the wisdom and the popularity of President Coolidge's tax-reduction program is furnished in the fact that the bill just passed, which became operative upon all income and other Federal taxes payable March 15 this year, was supported by both the majority and minority party leaders in both branches of Congress. So far as is recorded, this is the first instance on record, with the exception of revenue bills during times of war, where there was no partisan division on a revenue measure. I am proud to be a Member of this body and to have had the opportunity to vote for the recent tax reduction law. I am proud to be a Representative of the party that by its economical and sensible policy of government has been enabled to further reduce our Federal taxes about $387,000,000, bringing relief from tax burdens to every citizen of our country and relieving 2,300,000 of our citizens who have been paying income tax under previous laws from the payment of any income tax under this law. Those who are not income-tax payers will not directly benefit by the lowering of the income-tax rate, but they will benefit by this tax law on account of reducing those taxes which interfere with the economic life of the country and place indirectly on them the burden of increased cost on everything they buy. This law also reduces estate taxes, gift taxes, taxes on cigars and tobacco, amusement tickets, and dues, automobiles and automobile accessories, stamp taxes on deeds, mortgages, and other legal papers, jewelry, and on many other articles, so that everybody is benefited by this law.

Coincident with the President's program of reduced public expenditures, and a necessary part of that program is the manner in which the tremendous army of Federal employees has been kept in check. Although the business of the United States in practically every department and bureau has tremendously increased during the last two years, the records of the United States Civil Service Commission show that the number of employees on the Federal pay roll as of December 31, 1925, was practically identical with the number on the Federal pay roll as of June 30, 1923, one month before President Coolidge became President. This is in face of the fact that during the interim of two years the Post Office Department has been compelled to add several thousand to its pay roll in order to handle the tremendous increase in postal business. The Labor Department has been compelled to add to its pay rolls in order to enforce the immigration laws. The United States Veterans' Bureau has been compelled to add to its pay rolls in order to take care of the work of handling the soldiers' bonus. The Treasury Department has been compelled to take care of the additional work necessary in connection with the enforcement of the prohibition laws. The Agricultural Department has been compelled to take care of the additional work made necessary by the packers and stockyards act, the grain futures act, the modified United States warehousing act, and other new legislation in behalf of agriculture. In the face of all this the total number of Federal employees has not increased, which shows that under this administration the taxpayers of the United States are getting more work out of their employees than ever before in the history of the Government; nor is the record complete. A preliminary report issued by the United States Civil Service Commission March 2, 1926, shows that in the District of Columbia there was a net decrease during the month of January of 209 in the number of Federal employees, and the advance announcement has been made by several of the departments and bureaus that at the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, there will be a still further reduction in the number of Federal employees, estimated at this time to be 15,000.

Not only is the Coolidge administration keeping the number of people on the public pay rolls at a minimum consistent with good service but it has established the policy of critically scrutinizing every proposal that looks toward the creation of any new bureaus or commissions or bodies of any kind which have for their purpose the setting up of additional governmental machinery, the employment of help, and the expenditure of public funds.

While I have been extremely interested in all the proceedings of Congress, at times I have also been amused, especially when I hear some of our Democratic friends speak of the tariff as being responsible for the present condition of agriculture. You notice I say "some of our Democratic friends." I say this because there are many Democrats who do not and will not make such a statement, because they know the farmers would be much worse off without the tariff than they are with it; that the tariff protects the farmer the same as it protects others.

It should be remembered that every dollar collected by reason of our tariff means one less dollar to be collected in Federal taxes, so that an increase of $100,000,000 in tariff receipts is equivalent to a decrease of $100,000,000 in taxes. In other words, if we reduce the tariff receipts $100,000,000, we must raise the taxes on our people $100,000,000 in order to make up for the amount of tariff reduction.

The present tariff law became effective in September, 1922. Its opponents have charged from time to time, first, that its enactment would keep this country from selling to other countries, because they would set up retaliatory tariffs. This argument was made in face of the fact that the United States was the last of the nations to enact a tariff after the World War.

The following is a list of different countries that enacted tariff legislation since the World War, each nation having acted before we adopted our present tariff law:

The United Kingdom (England, Scotland, and Wales), October 1, 1921; Australia, March 25, 1920, June 13, 1921; New Zealand, November 3, 1921; Dominion of Canada, June 4, 1921, September 1, 1921, October, 1921; Union of South Africa, May 5, 1922; British India, March 1, 1922; Newfoundland, May 26, 1921; British West Indies, September 1, 1921; The Barbadoes (British), July 1, 1921; British Togoland (Africa), July 20, 1921; Fiji Islands (British), November 11, 1921; British Honduras, March 31, 1922; Switzerland, May 24, 1921; France, July 14, 1919, November 7, 1919, March 20, 1921; Italy, July 1, 1921; Czechoslovakia, March 19, 1920, August 6, 1921; Yugoslavia, July 10, 1921; Poland, August 11, 1921; Ecuador, September 25, 1921; Argentina, July 6, 1920; Chile, February 23, 1921; Peru, December 29, 1921; Belgium, June 10, 1920, March 31, 1921, November 7, 1921, February 6, 1922; Finland, January 1, 1922; Mexico, January 1, 1922; Sweden, June, 1921, March 27, 1922; Denmark, November 26, 1921; Hungary, November 23, 1921; Spain, February 16, 1921; Rumania, July, 1921; Bulgaria, April 1, 1922; Austria, July 16, 1921; Japan, March 30, 1922.

After this action by other countries, it does not seem that we should even consider a reduction of our tariff rates, which afford protection to all American producers—mine, factory, and farm—and maintain the American high wage level and preserve the high standard of living of the American people.

Recently the argument has been advanced that our tariff was preventing European nations from selling goods to us. I think we are buying altogether too much from Europe. Our stores are full of foreign-made articles. A few days ago I walked into a gift shop, a place where visitors to the Capital buy articles to take home as a remembrance of their visit to Washington, only a few blocks from our Capitol, and there I saw among other things a small likeness of the Washington Monument. I looked at the bottom of it, and much to my surprise

I saw stamped on it these words: "Made in Germany." The best test is the figures as to what we have bought and sold in the markets of the world. We bought from Europe as follows:

Calendar year:
1922	$991,000,000
1923	1,157,000,000
1924	1,100,000,000
1925	1,237,832,000

We bought from all the world during the calendar year 1922 $3,113,000,000; in the calendar year 1923, $3,792,000,000; in the calendar year 1924, $3,611,000,000; in the calendar year 1925, $4,227,995,091.

We sold to Europe as follows:

In the calendar year:
1922	$2,083,000,000
1923	2,093,000,000
1924	2,444,000,000
1925	2,602,486,592

We sold all the world in 1922, $3,832,000,000; in the calendar year 1923, $4,167,000,000; in the calendar year 1924, $4,591,000,000; in the calendar year 1925, $4,909,396,000.

A survey of the figures for a number of years back shows that during the last two years under the present tariff our world trade, both in what we bought and what we sold, was the greatest we have ever experienced in the history of this Nation, outside of the few years that Europe was at war and abnormally increased our exports.

All of this shows very plainly that the argument advanced by free traders that our present protective tariff prevents foreign nations from selling us goods is false. In my opinion we would do well to raise our tariff on wheat, corn, beef, and all other farm and agricultural products so as to afford further protection to our agricultural interests.

Some of our Democratic friends have charged that the trouble with the farmer is high prices for what he buys, and that these high prices are due to the protective tariff. If this argument means anything, it means that under the protective tariff the manufacturer has pushed up his price to an unjustifiable degree. If this were true, the first place it would show would be in wholesale prices, as practically all manufactured articles are handled through jobbers. The last report of the United States Labor Bureau shows that wholesale prices have steadily declined during the last year. This report covers over 400 commodities, embracing all kinds of manufactured articles, leather goods, textiles, metal goods, hardware, building material, drugs, household furnishings, and so forth. In other words, if there has been an increase in the price of articles which the farmer must buy, that increase can not be charged against the manufacturer, for the price of his products to the jobber have not increased. Take the case of the farmer; he is not to blame for the increased retail prices on food products. The United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics, in its report of January 1, shows that the wholesale price of food products has not increased during the entire year of 1925, while the retail price of food products increased from an average of 159 (index number) in January, 1925, to 172 in November, 1925, all of which clearly shows that the trouble is not caused by our tariff.

If we read and study our history, we find that the idea of a protective-tariff principle is an American principle of Democratic origin. I would rather say it was of Republican origin, but must speak the truth. We learn that such outstanding Democrats as Jefferson, Madison, Calhoun, Monroe, and Jackson, the fathers of the Democratic Party, all advocated a protective tariff. For some reason some of our Democratic friends have abandoned the principle of the protective tariff and now speak of it as a great evil.

Again I say "some of our Democratic friends," because a large number of my Democratic colleagues believe in a protective tariff. They have shown this by their vote on tariff schedules that affect their districts, and also in other ways. I will not take time to quote them, except in one instance, although the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD contains many statements of able Democratic legislators in favor of a protective tariff.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] on July 21, 1921, in the House of Representatives, said:

The time has come when we must take products of the American farms and ranches, and all competitive substitutes, off of the free list, and let our American market afford a living wage and return to our producers, and then we must so arrange our tariff schedules on such products and substitutes as will equalize our cost of production with that of foreign commerce.

Continuing further he said:

Must our intelligent, ambitious, deserving men and women on the farms and ranches of the Nation be longer placed on the same level by being forced to compete directly with the peons and slaves of the universe? I am one loyal Democrat who is not in favor of it.

I agree with Mr. BLANTON on this proposition.

In what way does the tariff affect the farmer? We must all admit that the farmer's principal problem is the disposal of his surplus crops, which must be sold in foreign markets. If there were no surplus there would be no serious farmers' problem, and we would not now have the farmers' problem before us. I think it will be admitted that the only possible profitable market our farmers can have is our local domestic market right here in the United States. If we were to take our tariff off of imported articles it would close our factories and paralyze industry, thereby destroying the purchasing power of industry and labor, which would destroy the only possible profitable market our farmers have. If we were to take the tariff off of what the farmer produces it would throw him in direct and unprotected competition with the cheap agricultural producing nations of the world, which would be most disastrous not only to the farmer, but to the Nation as a whole. The farmers' problem must be solved in some way other than by free trade. We all know that agriculture is the basic industry of our Nation, and that our Nation can not long prosper unless agriculture prospers. We must give earnest and intelligent consideration to measures for the relief of agriculture. People engaged in farming should receive as fair and reasonable profit, both for investment and labor, as any other business receives. They should be on the same sound business basis as any other form of capital or labor. While our country is enjoying prosperity our farmers should be enjoying the same degree of prosperity. The Agricultural Committee is holding hearings day and night on measures designed to bring this much-needed relief to agriculture. I feel we should pass all necessary farm-relief legislation which will put agriculture on an equality with industry before this session of Congress adjourns. I am willing to stay here until we succeed in passing such legislation.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I join with my esteemed friend from North Carolina [Mr. POU], whose long and useful service, continuing many years, is well known to the Nation, in expressing a regret because an imperative duty compels us to do some things that we would otherwise not do. Like him, I would very much prefer to vote for other things rather than implements of war, but inasmuch as I have been engaged in such work for 30 years I suppose I need not make an explanation. It is too late to attempt an apology. We both hope for better times.

You will recall that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, during the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, ruled it was the duty of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, the legislative committee, to report certain provisions that were reported in the appropriation bill. That ruling was made because a point of order had been raised against them. That brought to the Naval Affairs Committee the duty—which we promised at the time we would perform as well as we could—of preparing and recommending to this House a permanent program for what is known as the aviation service of the Navy. That was about six weeks or two months ago. Since that time we have employed ourselves with diligence and have a program here which we are going to ask you to accept. We have worked at it long and faithfully.

First of all, this bill has the indorsement of the President of the United States. That means much to me, as it does to you, but not more, perhaps, than the indorsement of every member of the committee upon which I sit, 21 in all. That conclusion was reached after many hours of listening and many hours of consultation. We did the best we could to present something definite upon which the Congress could act. It has the further indorsement of the commission upon which my esteemed colleague [Mr. VINSON of Georgia] sat. I know but two members on that commission, and I have talked to but one, and that one is the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], for whose opinion I have great regard.

I am told by him that the chairman of the aircraft board, on which he sat for weeks taking evidence, so as to reach a conclusion that the country would likely accept, has approved of this bill in toto. I do know that the Secretary of the Navy has likewise indorsed it as here drawn. I do know that the general board has indorsed it; the Joint Army and Navy Board has indorsed it; the Bureau of Aeronautics and the Chief of Operations have indorsed it. There is not one exception taken by these authorities to any part of this bill.

This program has been reached because of the long consideration which we have given it in an attempt to bring to you a program which would meet your approval.

Its objective is this, 1,000 airplanes so stated to you by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], chairman of the Committee on Rules. The question is naturally asked: Why do you fix the number at 1,000? You might think because that number is less than the department asked. Not so. When you make an analysis of the bill you will see why we fixed the number at 1,000. Every airplane provided in this bill has its particular function to perform, something that has never been known before in the way of naval aircraft preparation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How many airplanes have we now?

Mr. BUTLER. We have 900 of what they call airplanes, but some call them flaming coffins. I call them old-fashioned flower boxes painted green and only fit to put in front yards for the purpose of planting verbenas, and things of that kind, in. However, what we are endeavoring to provide through this bill are useful implements of war. If we are to have weapons we do not want those that will kill our people and spare the enemy.

They are implements of war that will be useful to us and not useful to the people who might be against us. There may come a time when we shall need these implements of war, but I join with my friend from North Carolina [Mr. POU] in hoping such an event will never come to us. However, no one is able to make a correct guess when war may come. Providence only knows.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I notice that this construction program extends over a series of years. I want to ask my friend from Pennsylvania this question: What is the ordinary life of such an airplane as will be constructed under this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Three years. After three years' use they are worn out. If not entirely worn out they are likely to fall and kill somebody, and I will not vote for any weapon that is likely to kill its user.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is expected that when the number of years has elapsed, some four or five, over which this construction program extends, that we will have 1,000 airplanes?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; useful airplanes and not hurtful airplanes. We absolutely guarantee that.

Mr. HASTINGS. What about those in operation now?

Mr. BUTLER. They will all be gone.

Mr. HASTINGS. And we shall have 1,000 new ones?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. I want to say this: That at the end of five years there will be at the service of the American Government, 1,000 airplanes that can be used immediately or after very reasonable repairs.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to yield to my old friend.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am afraid that the latter part of the statement which I heard just as I came in might prove a little alarming as to the condition of some of the planes we now have.

Mr. BUTLER. We have about 500 very useful planes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And what I want to suggest is this: That naval officers are not permitted, under the regulations, to use any planes that in any way could be dangerous to the flyers?

Mr. BUTLER. They are not. It was always before our committee that we might provide for a turn-over every three years so that all of these engines and all of the machinery in these planes might be as safe as it is possible to have them. It is expensive, yes; but it is much better that we should spend $50,000 or $500,000 than to use dangerous planes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am not at all in disagreement with the policy the gentleman has in mind and, I knew it was not the purpose of the gentleman to alarm anyone by leaving the impression that the Navy would ever use a plane that was dangerous to the flyer.

Mr. BUTLER. No; it will not. However, my friend knows that these accidents may happen it matters not how well we may have provided against them, but in order to make it doubly sure we intend to ask Congress to permit us to turn them over every three years and throw the old ones away.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand the gentleman to say we now have about 900 airplanes?

Mr. BUTLER. Nine hundred and fifty or nine hundred and seventy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Five hundred of them are safe?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What is there about the other 400 which causes them to be unsafe?

Mr. BUTLER. Everything. I understand they do not use them, but nevertheless they enumerate them, and they keep them on the list. I have oftentimes wondered why they do it.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. In a moment I will yield. Let me answer my friend further.

It will be necessary during this period to build and have in our possession as many as 1,600 airplanes, but at the end of five years the number will be reduced to 1,000. This has been figured out by the mathematicians based upon a service of three years.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman state how much one of these planes costs fully equipped?

Mr. BUTLER. They will cost anywhere from $20,000 or $25,000 up to $150,000. The large ones cost, we estimate, $150,000. The smaller ones, what are called the scout planes, cost a great deal less, and when my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] makes his statement he will answer all your questions definitely, because he has the figures in mind.

Mr. McSWAIN. Could it not be fairly said, however, that the 1,000 airplanes of all the different sorts would be roughly about equivalent to the cost of one first-class battleship fully equipped?

Mr. BUTLER. No; the 1,000 airplanes would be equivalent to about two such battleships. Of course, they do not require so many men to operate them. The cost of a battleship would be about $40,000,000 or $45,000,000 for the old-style battleships. The cruisers cost about $18,000,000 each. A comparison between our first-class battleships and these airplanes would show that at the end of five years they will cost about twice as much.

Mr. McSWAIN. Then they will be equivalent to the cost of two battleships.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. And does not the gentleman think they will be equivalent to about ten or twenty times as much in the way of defense?

Mr. BUTLER. That is variously estimated. I think all military men agree that they are very effective. I think all the military men and all the strategists and everybody agree with that statement. Why, 30 years ago when I first saw this House we were making our defense upon the surface of the sea. Then we went underneath, and now we are up in the air. There is no other battle field to seek and therefore I hope we will have peace. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. UPDIKE and Mr. KVALE rose.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. Will our voting $85,000,000 for these 1,000 airplanes be the slightest guarantee that we will waste fewer millions of dollars on battleships in the future?

Mr. BUTLER. You can not do that. I am one of those who propose to keep the treaty of Washington, and we can not build battleships. Under the treaty of Washington we have done away with the construction of them completely until 1934.

Mr. KVALE. In other words, we will have to keep on wasting millions of dollars on battleships?

Mr. BUTLER. No; we will build none until 1934 and then we will have the privilege to replace one or two ships.

Mr. KVALE. Oh, but the gentleman from South Carolina has told us that we will have another war in a little while.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend is a wise man, and he fears it just as I do; but I think, perhaps—well, I do not know anything about it. [Laughter and applause.] One thing I do know, however, as long as men have red blood they will fight unless restrained, and I rather prefer to have my associations with them. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KVALE. And the next war, of course, will be a war to end wars.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, I do not know anything about that, because I will not make the war and I will not be in it.

Mr. UPDIKE. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. UPDIKE. Is it not the fact that the average cost of these airplanes is $52,000?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And on the basis of $52,000 per plane there is included an entire engine in addition to the one installed in the plane plus 25 per cent of spare parts.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; as I recall it, when we build one of these machines we build another engine to cost $9,000, so that if anything should happen to the engine in the machine to render it unsafe, we will put in the new one. The $52,000 that my colleague speaks of buys the entire equipment, but, of course, does not maintain it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman, of course, realizes the difference between the 500 planes to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] referred as being safe for flying and up-to-date planes for war purposes. There is a difference, of course.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me see if I understand the gentleman from New York. What we are asking this Congress to do is to provide 1,000 airplanes at the end of five years, effective and able to overcome any forceful opposition that may come against them on land or sea, this to be the very best equipment that can be provided. The type of equipment is to be left entirely to the discretion of the military men. I would not endeavor to prescribe that, because I do not know anything about it. I would not pretend to make an implement of war for another man who has to use it. He is a professional man and must design the weapon and prescribe how it is to be made, and I will then vote for the money to make it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. May I ask the gentleman this further question? The gentleman then admits that in the past the selection was not perfect and—

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And machines were not selected that were up to the specifications which the gentleman now prescribes.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course, they wear out. If anybody has ever had any experience with secondhand automobiles, as I have, he will know all about the uncertainty of old machinery. [Laughter.] Of course, these machines will wear out.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. There is no question about that.

Mr. BUTLER. All machinery will wear out. There is no reflection whatever to be cast on anyone who has contrived or purchased an airplane, and there is no reflection to be cast upon Congress. The whole matter has been largely an experiment. We have done the best we could, but we want these old fellows laid aside.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The old fellows or the old planes?

Mr. BUTLER. The old planes, not the old men.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Military Affairs Committee have an entire program to report to the House?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know, but I think so.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield so that I may ask the gentleman from South Carolina about that?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; that is a matter of record.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. How many airplanes do you propose to have under this program?

Mr. McSWAIN. There will be a total of 1,640.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Two thousand one hundred, according to the report.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. In addition to the 1,000 contemplated in this bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Have you any information as to the number of airplanes that will be brought into existence as a result of the activities of the Post Office Department as well as private activities?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I do not.

Mr. McSWAIN. The more there are, the better we will be pleased, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me follow this up with one other thought which I have in mind. We do not ask for one additional sailor. They may need additional soldiers, but we want no more sailors. This committee has worked out a program that will provide the personnel from the enlisted force in the Navy, and therefore we are not asking you for any additional planes in order to train men. I do not know what may have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs having as its object the establishment of an aviation program, but I do know that we do not propose to ask the Congress for any additional men. The time may come in the future when that will be done. I do not know anything about that; but for a reasonable time, within the five years, I will state to my friend from Alabama, we do not anticipate we will need one additional man.

It is not what the department needed, they would like about 1,200 airplanes, but we concluded there was no use in building airplanes for ships that are not yet built.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In connection with the question asked by the gentleman from Alabama I understand it is not the purpose of the bill to absolutely require that so many airplanes be built, but you authorized them so that Congress could later determine the number needed.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman has it right, and I am grateful to the gentleman for calling my attention to it. We made up our minds not to fix the number of airplanes but leave it for the determination of Congress. We provided that there should be so many each year, that we might have something definite, something to secure economy.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I believe in adequate preparedness, but it looks to me with this program for the Navy and program for the Military Committee and the Post Office Department, with all of these airplanes that they must be preparing to lick the whole world within five years.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, my friend is wrong about that. We have some doubt as to whether we will be quite up after this. We doubt very much whether we will be fully up. It was told us by the peacemakers, and the gentleman and I are among the peacemakers, that we ought not to make any comparison. Can the gentleman tell me how we can prepare to defend ourselves unless we do? I would like some smart guesser to say how we are going to prepare a defense and to resist other nations if required unless we know what the other nations have prepared.

If other nations had no airplanes I would not vote for one, nor would I ever have voted for a ship. We can not tell exactly what the number will be, but we think France will be ahead of us some in numbers.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will yield, in response to a question by the gentleman from Louisiana I want to say that France had on January 5, 1925, 1,542 serviceable airplanes and 4,000 reserves.

Mr. BUTLER. They have more than we have, but they have further to come than we have to go to make our defense.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The 4,000 reserves are a good deal like our worst ones.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; some of them will do to make water boxes along public roads.

If we spend money let us do it economically and wisely. We put it over a number of years, so that Congress may know what it can do within certain limits. Therefore we fixed it at five years. Some may say why five years? Because it is recommended by the board, that heard a number of witnesses covering several weeks, of which my friend from Kentucky was a member. They recommended such a program. That report has been approved by the President of the United States and everyone in authority. You ask why we made it 1,000 and not 1,200. Because we could not find places for any more airplanes. There are so many airplanes for a ship and so many for a destroyer. We are not going to ask for the construction of airplanes to put on ships 150 years from now, and if we carried out a program that has been suggested it would be 150 years before the last one was built. They asked for another airplane carrier. We said, "No; we have two; we have made the pattern as nearly as we can get it and made this program to fit it. You have put catapults on ships that machines may fly from them."

Are you going now to put machines on them? You voted from $75,000,000 to $85,000,000 for two airplane carriers. What is the use of having airplane carriers? They have no guns on them. They are made for one particular purpose, and that is to carry airplanes. My friend's subcommittee has recommended so many airplanes, but nevertheless the responsibility has been taken from his subcommittee and handed over to ours, and we followed his recommendation and included planes in the program reported in this bill. There are 79 airplanes included here for one of these carriers, which will go into commission in a few days.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. The number of airplanes that France has in commission as given by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], including both the Army and Navy airplanes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask that so as to clear the matter up, so that there will be no misunderstanding.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Oh, yes; France has a unified service.

Mr. HASTINGS. Some of us got the impression that they were wholly of the Navy.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Oh, France has learned something since the war.

Mr. BUTLER. Just one minute more, and I shall surrender. My esteemed colleague has all of the figures and facts before him touching aviation. I have listened for only a month and he has listened for two or three months. While we do not ask for any personnel, we have recommended to this House, for the first time, the personnel that should be employed and how it should be employed. The Morrow Board's report recommends enlisted men should be employed, and we have provided that not less than one-third of the men who shall sail these airships shall be enlisted men. Again, we recommend, and I shall stand for nothing else, that the building of these planes be subjected to competitive bidding by the different airplane manufacturers.

I care not what the evidence may have been before the gentleman's board, I care not what other men may have in view, I shall not vote for this bill unless the construction of these airplanes is submitted to competitive bids by the different airplane manufacturers. [Applause.] Furthermore, if the right to construct these airplanes under certain conditions is taken away from the navy yards, I shall not vote for this bill. At enormous expense we have fitted out factories where these machines may be constructed, and we have done it for one purpose, and that is to see that there is no conspiracy among the bidders for these machines. I know there has been some talk of other methods, but I say in advance, so that it may be understood, that I shall not vote for the bill if you are going to employ a fiscal agent among civilians to say who these bidders shall be. [Applause.] We must do it fairly. The whole proposition was submitted to us fairly. The question was asked by our colleagues in this House at the time, whether or not we would report a measure for aviation that they could subscribe to. That we have endeavored to do. We submit it here with an expense of $85,000,000, perhaps 35 or 40 per cent more than has been heretofore appropriated, but we could not reduce it any further and work out the program outlined, and that was to have in commission the number of airships to function in all the places you had already provided for by law.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice in paragraph 5, page 2, of the bill that the expression is used that the idea is to have purchased, ending June 30, 1931, 1,614 airplanes, and in paragraph 7 it refers to having 1,000 of them on hand by June 30, 1931.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is necessary in order to maintain 1,000 at the end of five years to buy 1,641, because the attrition is one-third each year, on account of wastage; so that the number of planes that will be bought will be 1,641, and that will give us 1,000 at the end of five years, serviceable airplanes.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is what I wanted to bring out, as to whether that discrepancy was due to the fact that some of the planes wore out during the five-year period, and that you could have only 1,000 useful planes under those conditions—planes that are really serviceable.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Gentlemen will understand that the President's air board, of which my colleague was an active member, recommended that this turnover should occur frequently, and they state the reason for it. We have followed that recommendation not blindly but gradually. In every recommendation that board made we have followed in making this bill, so that the country might understand that this legislative committee, without any partisanship or any feeling, took the judgment of competent men who recommended to us such a program.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the gentleman with reference to the value of dirigibles. I notice in section 2 of the bill provision is made for the construction of two rigid airships at an authorized cost of $8,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. My friend will be directly interested in that; and we now ask this House to build two dirigible, or lighter-than-air, machines. They will be nearly three times as large in capacity as the ship that was destroyed. We have stated the reasons in the report. We want to put one on the Pacific, because that still belongs to the United States, and I happen to have some interest in that, because for 30 years I labored to get a fleet out there. We want one on the Atlantic and one on the Pacific. We want them to be of the most modern type, of best construction. We can get two for $8,000,000 and one for $5,000,000. We thought we better have the two, and therefore recommend the two. We will take one off to the Pacific and most likely send it to Hawaii, that it may be used there. They will be floating machines, as I call them, with a radius of 7,500 miles. Further than that, they will take the place of from two to four cruisers that will cost $18,000,000 apiece.

They will do the duty and perform the guardianship and report back to the ships on the surface the information that they should have. Forty-five men will sail on them, and it would require 645 on the cruisers, and therefore, not to be stingy or mean in the defense which the Constitution orders us to provide for, we have given you the best modern equipment we can discover.

We will ask you to retain in this bill the two dirigibles. One which we once owned was burned up, and for which we had paid a million dollars. Another was destroyed in Italy. Another, the Shenandoah, also met with disaster. We ask you now to replace these airships by two better ships. We now have helium. It will not burn. We expect that when these ships are built they will be modern and will be the most efficient guides that we can procure. Helium manufactured in Texas at reasonable cost will be used in their operation.

To our way of thinking, my friends, these are the best guardians we can have, the best outposts we can establish. When the Germans hung from the clouds and discovered the location of ships on the surface the question was asked, What can you do better than that? Our men at sea should have the location of an enemy and ascertain its strength, and by the means which they themselves provide. England is building two. We propose to have two that are much better.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the gentleman a question as a matter of information, so that the House can know the respective value of rigid airships as compared with airplanes, and whether or not they are still an efficient agency—the dirigibles?
